Suppose the President had made the proper inquiry, does any one acquainted with the facts believe the President could or would have ever recognized and sustained Kellogg and his usurpation? Never. Why? Because, first, the returns showed that McEnery and his ticket were elected by an average majority of ten thousand votes; secondly, no authority of the State of Louisiana ever ascertained that Kellogg and his ticket were elected. Even if he were beaten by fraudulent or any unlawful means, he was not ascertained to be elected according to law; but, on the other hand, it was ascertained according to law that McEnery and his ticket were elected, and by this determination the President was in law bound to be governed, whatever he may have thought of the merits or fairness of the election.

If the President had taken this lawful course, he would have been compelled to recognize and sustain McEnery and his associates. If he had done so, then the State and people of Louisiana would not have suffered the wrongs and oppression they have experienced; scores of lives would have been saved, and the country from shameful scandal and national disgrace.

Before I pass from this matter, I wish to sustain all I have said by calling attention to what the committee said on this subject. The committee were all republicans. It was composed of Senators MORTON, CARPENTER, LOGAN, ALCORN, ANTHONY, Trumbull, and Hill. Messrs. CARPENTER, LOGAN, ALCORN, and ANTHONY made a majority report, the others, each, made a minority report.

The committee, referring to the action of the United States judge, (Durell,) say:

Viewed in any light in which your committee can consider them, the orders and injunctions made and granted by Judge Durell in this cause are most reprehensible, erroneous in point of law, and are wholly void for want of jurisdiction; and your committee must express their sorrow and humiliation that a judge of the United States should have proceeded in such flagrant disregard of his duty, and have so far overstepped the limits of Federal jurisdiction.

On the order referred to, the marshal and troops seized the State-house and held it for six weeks, and organized the usurping or Kellogg legislature in it. That is the sole authority on which the Kellogg usurpation rests this day. An order as void as if I had made it.

In referring to the "Lynch board" and its conduct, the committee say:

There is nothing in all the comedy of blunders and frauds under consideration more indefensible than the pretended canvass of this board.

The following are some of the objections to the validity of their proceedings:

1. The board had been abolished by the act of November 20.
2. The board was under valid and existing injunctions restraining it from acting at all, and an injunction in the Armstrong case restraining it from making any canvass not based upon the official returns of the election.
3. Conceding the board was in existence and had full authority to canvass the returns, it had no returns to canvass.

The returns from the parishes had been made under the law of 1870 to the governor, and not one of them was before the Lynch board.

It was testified before your committee by Mr. Bovee himself, who participated in this canvass by the Lynch board, that they were determined to have a republican Legislature, and made their canvass to that end. The testimony abundantly establishes the fraudulent character of their canvass. In some cases they had what were supposed to be copies of the original returns; in other cases they had nothing but newspaper statements; and in other cases, where they had nothing whatever to act upon, they made an estimate, based upon their knowledge of the political complexion of the parish, of what the vote ought to have been. They also counted a large number of affidavits purporting to be sworn to by voters who had been wrongfully denied registration or the right to vote, many of which affidavits they must have known to be forgeries. It was testified by one witness that he forged over a thousand affidavits and delivered them to the Lynch board while it was in session. It is quite unnecessary to waste time in considering this part of the case; for no person can examine the testimony ever so cursorily without seeing that this pretended canvass had no semblance of integrity.

Upon the pretended count of this board, Kellogg is this day exercising authority and his usurpation is sustained by the President.

Speaking of the McEnery ticket the report says:

It is the opinion of your committee that, but for the unjustifiable interference of Judge Durell, whose orders were executed by United States troops, the canvass made by the De Feriet board, and promulgated by the governor, declaring McEnery to have been elected governor, &c., and also declaring who had been elected to the Legislature, would have been acquiesced in by the people, and that government would have entered quietly upon the exercise of the sovereign power of the State. But the proceedings of Judge Durell, and the support given him by United States troops, resulted in establishing the authority de facto of Kellogg and his associates in State offices, and of the persons declared by the Lynch board to be elected to the Legislature. We have already seen that the proceedings of that board cannot be sustained without disregarding all the principles of law applicable to the subject, and ignoring the distinction between good faith and fraud.

Without any reference to the merits of the election, a lawful board, the lawful authorities of the State, ascertained according to law that McEnery and his ticket were elected. Behind that the United States have no right to go.

In his minority report, Judge Trumbull says in reference to the election:

According to the official returns, the fusion State ticket, headed by McEnery for governor, received an average majority of about ten thousand votes, and a large majority of the persons elected to the Legislature were of the same party; and but for the illegal interference of the United States authorities, as is stated in the report of the majority, the McEnery government would have been peacefully inaugurated.

How skillfully the plan was laid to overthrow the legitimate State government, set aside an election, and inaugurate the Pinchback and Kellogg administrations and legislatures, and how well Judge Durell was supported in all these revolutionary and illegal proceedings by other United States officials, will appear by reference to a few facts disclosed in the evidence.

Referring to the views of the majority, he says:

It is, however, said by a majority of the committee that the election of November 4 was so tainted with fraud as to render it wholly void, and they recommend the passage of a law for holding a new election under the authority of Congress.

If it were admitted, as it is not, that Congress has authority to inquire into the fairness and regularity of a State election, it was denied that there was any such fraud in the late Louisiana election as would justify setting it aside. It was confessedly one of the most quiet and peaceful elections ever held in the State, and the evidence shows that it was substantially free and fair.

The vote polled was twenty thousand larger than ever before cast in the State, and against more than two-thirds of it no complaint of unfairness is even alleged.

The majority of the committee say that the returns showed (and they had them before the committee) that McEnery and his ticket were elected by a large majority, and that it was so ascertained by the count of the De Feriet returning board; but they say that they are of the opinion that the Kellogg ticket would have been elected if there had been a fair election. On this point they say this:

Your committee are therefore led to the conclusion that, if the election held in November, 1872, be not absolutely void for frauds committed therein, McEnery and his associates in State offices, and the persons certified as members of the Legislature by the De Feriet board, ought to be recognized as the legal government of the State. Considering all the facts established before your committee, there seems no escape from the alternative that the McEnery government must be recognized by Congress or Congress must provide for a re-election. And this brings us to consider:

1. Whether the election of November last is void for fraud; and
2. If void, has Congress the authority to order a re-election?

First. A careful consideration of the testimony convinces us that, had the election of November last been fairly conducted and returned, Kellogg and his associates, and a Legislature composed of the same political party, would have been elected. The colored population of that State outnumbered the white, and in the last election the colored voters were almost unanimous in their support of the republican ticket. Governor Warmoth, who was elected by the republicans of the State in 1868, had passed into opposition, and held in his hands the entire machinery of the election. He appointed the supervisors of registration, and they appointed the commissioners of election. The testimony shows a systematic purpose on the part of those conducting the election to throw every possible difficulty in the way of the colored voters in the matter of registration. The polling-places are not fixed by law, and at the last election they were purposely established by those conducting the election at places inconvenient of access in those parishes which were known to be largely republican; so that in some instances voters had to travel over twenty miles to reach the polls. The election was generally conducted in quiet, and was, perhaps, unusually free from disturbance or riot. Governor Warmoth, who was the master-spirit in the whole proceeding, seems to have relied upon craft rather than violence to carry the State for McEnery. In the canvass of votes which determined the McEnery government to be elected the votes of several republican parishes were rejected.

They say further:

If the Senate should be inclined not to go behind the official returns of the election, then the McEnery government and legislature must be recognized as the lawful government of the State, and McMillen, if regularly elected by that legislature, should be seated in the Senate in place of Kellogg. But your committee believe that this would be recognizing a government based upon fraud, in defiance of the wishes and intention of the voters of that State.

In the paragraphs just read the committee have embodied the strength of all the objections to the election of 1872. Now, with all due respect, I insist that the grounds suggested are untenable. First, neither Congress nor the President has the right to determine the result of elections in the State for State officers. This is matter that the States control for themselves; they have sole and exclusive jurisdiction; when they decide, rightly or wrongly, the United States and the world are bound by the decision. Where is the clause of the Federal Constitution that confers on Congress or the President any such authority? No one has cited it, and I venture the assertion that no one can do so. So far as I can learn, such a suggestion never was made before. Such a power is not only not conferred, but the exercise of it would manifestly lead to interminable conflict and inaugurate general anarchy. The Congress and the President may, on a proper occasion, ascertain who were ascertained according to the constitution and laws of a State to be its officers, but this is all they may do.

This answer would seem to be sufficient in this case, because the authorities of Louisiana did ascertain and decide that the McEnery ticket was elected.

Secondly. But a consideration of the causes assigned as evidence of the fraudulent character of the election are likewise untenable. It does not follow because the negro vote was cast in 1868 for the republican ticket, that it ought to have been cast for it in 1872. Governor Warmoth supported the fusion ticket; it is admitted he had a large influence—personal, political, and in the way of official patronage. If he chose to use these for the benefit of the fusion ticket he had the right to do so, just as he had the right to do the same for the Kellogg party if he had chosen to do so. It is well known that the President, through his political influence and official patronage, exerts in the States a tremendous influence—controls thousands and tens of thousands of votes. I do not think this is right, but no one ever heard it suggested that an election was void because he did it. The constitution and laws give the governor the right to appoint the supervisors of election, and as to the location of the voting precincts they were as convenient to the negroes as the white people, and generally the negroes are more apt to attend than the white people. Besides, there had been terrible misrule in Louisiana, and how far the negro vote was cast in favor of a salutary change, who shall say? It is admitted that the election was unusually quiet and it was the largest vote ever polled there. In confirmation of the result thus ascertained, the late election in that State gave the conservatives a large majority. Then, such objections are not reasonable—surely no one can seriously pretend that they are sufficient to warrant the overthrow of a State government!

Now, sir, after what I have said and shown, I insist that I am warranted in making these deductions:

First. The power and authority exercised by Kellogg and his associates in the State of Louisiana since the election in 1872, has always been a naked, wicked usurpation; that it has been established and sustained by the present national Administration for political party purposes in defiance of the vote, will, and protest of the people of that State by and through the unlawful use of the Army of the United States.

Second. That at the late election in that State the people again defeated the republican party, and again the Administration by means of the unlawful use of the Army defeated the popular vote and will.

Third. That thus the Administration has by the exercise of absolute power set a precedent, not only dangerous to, but absolutely subversive of, our system of government and public and personal liberty.

Mr. President, I very much regret that the President in his late message saw fit to present a partisan view of the troubles in Louisiana. It is a labored effort to justify Kellogg and his supporters on the one hand, and condemn McEnery and his friends on the other. He calls special attention to what he calls a shameful and undisguised conspiracy to carry the election in 1872 against the republican party, to the affair in New Orleans on the 14th of September last, the Colfax and Coushatta affairs, and a general state of lawlessness and crime in that State. His grave charges are not sustained by any reference to ascertained facts or information, but are founded on vague, partisan, interested, and ex parte statements. He arraigns and condemns a whole people upon such information, without any hearing, and without any reference to, or a line or word explanatory of, the causes that gave rise to such disorders. He seeks to leave the impression that the people are essentially lawless, and that they love crime for its very sake. This is not just to that people, the Senate, or the country, and manifests a spirit unworthy the Chief Magistrate of the nation. We need to know both sides of the controversy and the whole facts.

It is beyond cavil that the Kellogg usurpation is the cause of the extraordinary and atrocious deeds to which the President makes reference. No disinterested man acquainted with the facts can doubt for one moment that, if the McEnery administration had been permitted to proceed according to law, these terrible crimes had not been perpetrated. It was the lawfully ascertained government; and, as appears by the report of the committee, and from every source, the masses of the people of all parties were ready and willing to recognize and accept it. The people of that State, the Congress, and the whole country know that Kellogg and his associates are usurpers. This has been ascertained by solemn investigation under order of the Senate.

The affairs of the 14th of September in New Orleans, the Coushatta and Colfax affairs, grew out of the struggle of the rightful government to assert itself against usurpation. This no one can deny. In New Orleans the engagement was open and direct between the contending parties. In the two latter cases, the Kellogg officials and others of that party outraged the people by intolerable misrule and incited the negroes to attack the whites. The result was that conflicts of violence and deeds of blood shocking to humanity and meriting the severest condemnation and punishment were perpetrated. But this is the natural consequence of usurpation. It has been so in all ages and countries, and our own is no exception to the general rule. Indeed, the American spirit will not submit to tyranny; it will assert its freedom or perish in the effort to do so. The American people submit to lawful rule cheerfully and quietly, but to despotism and oppression never! Our whole history attests this truth.

The crimes referred to shock my nature and sicken my soul. I denounce the authors of them. They merit severest punishment; but I denounce both and all sides of them. The poor, ignorant negroes, incited to murder and rapine by vagrant supporters of Kellogg, and the white people, goaded to desperation and violence by his and their misrule, are not the only nor the most guilty parties. The Kellogg usurpation and its supporters are responsible. The deliberate judgment of the American people and the civilized world will hold them so.

The President complains that the perpetrators of these crimes have gone unpunished. Why is this? The usurping government had complete control of the executive, judicial, and legislative branches of the State government, and they were sustained constantly by the Army of the United States. More than one-half of the population were negroes. Kellogg's government could do what they would. It is a shameful subterfuge to say they could not bring offenders to justice. There was another cause, and that was this: The friends of this usurpation, as the facts show, were the first aggressors—always the aggressors—and any judicial investigation would expose them while it might expose others. Like all other usurping governments, it has been interested in avoiding all investigations that expose its crimes and misrule. This is the reason why crime has not been punished. The statistics show that other crimes were punished. Why not these? The answer is that I have given.

It is not surprising that the propositions of General Sheridan contained in his telegrams, which I have read, and which the President and the War Department approved, have greatly shocked the masses of the American people. They are not only unlawful but monstrous; they embody every essential attribute of absolute despotism, and a doctrine, the outgrowth of the late war, which has been embraced by a class of politicians very dangerous to liberty and free government. I cite it as a striking and significant fact, that the President did not disavow the propriety of General Sheridan's propositions. I had hoped that he would do so.

The President tells us that "no party motives or prejudices" influenced General Sheridan. However this may be, it is very manifest that he thoroughly identified himself with the policy and wishes of the President and the Kellogg usurpation. No one can read his dispatches and not see that he went to New Orleans hostile to the white people, and that he received suggestions mainly if not entirely from Kellogg and his supporters. Apart from the enormity of his propositions, the language used by him was coarse—that of insult and violence, and well calculated to stir up the wrath of a whole people. Whatever may have been his purpose, his language and manifestations were well adapted to stir up a conflict, and thus give the republican party the opportunity to set up anew the cry of a "new rebellion" in the South and a "conflict of races." His language was not only gross and violent, but it was false in fact, if we can rely upon testimony of the most indubitable character. He styled the "white-leaguers" as banditti. Now, they are not banditti. The subcommittee of Congress made special inquiry as to the nature and purposes of that association.

In speaking of it they say:

In this connection we refer to the White League mentioned in the message of the President. In the last campaign of Louisiana the opposition was composed of various elements—democrats, reformers, dissatisfied republicans, liberal republicans, old whigs; and in order to induce the co-operation of all, some of whom refused to unite with an organization called democratic, they took the name of "the people's party;" called in some localities "the conservative party;" in others, "white man's party;" in others, the "White League;" and had ordinary political clubs under these names throughout the rural districts, which were ordinary political clubs and nothing more; neither secret, nor armed, nor otherwise different from usual political organizations. These, must not, however, be confounded from similarity of name with the White League of the city of New Orleans.

That league is an organization composed of different clubs, numbering in all between two thousand five hundred and two thousand eight hundred; the members of which have provided arms for themselves, and with or without arms engage in military drill. They have no uniforms, and the arms are the property of the individuals, not of the organization. They comprise a large number of reputable citizens and property-holders in the city of New Orleans. Their purpose they declare to be simply protective; a necessity occasioned by the existence of leagues among the blacks, by the hostility with which the Kellogg government arrayed the black against the white race, and by the want of security to peaceable citizens and their families which existed for those reasons, and because, also, of the peculiar formation of the police brigade.

This account is confirmed by the clergy of New Orleans, military officers, and scores of northern citizens doing business in that city. Now, whom shall we believe—General Sheridan, who is in a bad humor, and gets his information from Kellogg, or his supporters, or the disinterested congressional committee, sustained by hundreds of men whose purity of character no one can question? General Sheridan is mistaken in this matter as well as others. His statements are plainly ex parte, and he colors darkly every complaint he makes. This is neither fair nor just nor does it comport with the duty of one in his position or with the policy of peace and order. He says, for example:

Since the year 1866 nearly thirty-five hundred persons, a great majority of whom were colored men, have been killed and wounded in this State. In 1868 the official record shows that eighteen hundred and eighty-four were killed and wounded.

Now, where did he get this information? From whom did he get it? His statement is a vague one, based, as his whole report shows, upon the statements of interested persons. And with a view to color his report and make the number sound loudly he couples murder and wounding together. How many of one and how many of the other, he fails to tell. And over and above this, he never once alludes to the causes that gave rise to the disorders. This all fair men must say was due, in fairness and right.

I do not pretend to deny that there are terrible disorders in Louisiana, and that bloody crimes have been perpetrated there, but I think I have proven that these are justly attributable to the Kellogg usurpation established and sustained by the present Federal Administration in violation of the Constitution and laws, and with the view to the continued control of that State by the republican party in utter defiance of the popular will expressed at the ballot-box. The Administration unlawfully interfered in 1872, and defeated the popular will, overthrew the lawful government of the State, established and has ever since sustained the Kellogg usurpation. Now, in 1874 it again defeats the popular will, and with the Army disperses and overthrows the lawful Legislature. I respectfully challenge any one to show any lawful sanction for what the President has done in Louisiana since 1872. No one has yet pretended to do so; I venture to say with perfect confidence no one can do so.

Whatever may have been the patriotic services rendered to the country by the President in the past—and I do not detract from them—how long, I ask, will the American people submit to such arbitrary exercise of absolute power? If he can thus dismantle Louisiana and set up his political adherents, may he not do the like in New York, or Ohio, or Oregon? If he may thus control the organization of the Legislature of Louisiana and disperse those who do not adhere to him and his fortunes, may he not in like manner disperse the Legislatures of the other States I have named? Nay, when Congress shall cease to adhere to his political fortunes, may he not, like Cromwell, march troops into these Chambers and disperse Congress? Who shall say that he will not? The right he has to do what has been done in Louisiana, he has to do all I have suggested—that is the right of might! If this President and the present dominant party may do it with impunity, another President and another dominant party may do likewise and cite this precedent. Is the republican party ready to see another President at the head of another party do so in Massachusetts, in Vermont, and Pennsylvania? Are the American people willing to see this doctrine established and carried into practice? I trust not. I hope not. Then let them now assert their right and stand by the Constitution of the country. Let this deed be condemned everywhere; let every friend of free government, let every friend of liberty in the Union, throughout all its compass, hold this subversion of the State of Louisiana up to the condemnation of the whole people. Let the cause of Louisiana be the cause of the whole people and of every State in the Union. The question is not whether crime has been committed or whether it shall be punished—all are in favor of that; that is not the question; it is, shall a State government be overthrown, demolished, by a President of the Union? That is the question. Let crime be punished, let it be punished everywhere, according to the full measure of the law; let the prosecution of offenders be vigorous and certain. I am in favor of that. I urge that on every one charged in any way with the punishment of crime. I urge it upon all good men to be active and aid in bringing offenders to answer for crime, but I will not now, I never will, consent to make crime a pretext to help a political party control the country; I never will consent to make crime an excuse for subverting a State government for any purpose. How is crime any excuse for what was done to Louisiana in 1872, and from that day to this? How is crime any excuse for what was done to the Legislature of that State on the 4th of last month? Answer these questions who can! No, Senators, this blow at Louisiana is a death-thrust at the vitals of the Republic, if we, if the American people, shall allow it to be consummated. If this work shall stand, then the Constitution is dead, the love of liberty in this country is dead, liberty has fled to other lands, the one-man power is everything—might is right, right is might, and despotism triumphant! Do you say, Senators, let this blow be consummated? Then I appeal with abiding confidence to the people everywhere in the Union. They love their country and their form of government more than party. Let the issue be made at once; I do not fear the verdict. Already the voice of millions of freemen has been heard in condemnation of the arbitrary deeds of this Administration in Louisiana and elsewhere. Let the issue be made, and that voice will increase in volume and power until it speaks from existence forever the most arbitrary Administration and party the people of this country have ever seen or tolerated. Let that issue be made, and then will be made manifest the truth that the republican party has ceased to be a party of principle, that its legitimate work is done for good or evil.

Mr. President, I deprecate the unfriendly tone and temper of this debate on the part of the majority, toward the Southern States and the white people of that section of the Union. It manifests a spirit of dislike, in some instances of revenge and insult, which I had hoped did not exist anywhere, much less in this high place, and I venture still to hope it, finds very little sympathy in the popular heart of the North. Unmerited denunciation, misrepresentation, and falsehood prove nothing but the littleness and meanness of those who employ such instruments of detraction. Coarse and insulting language add not one whit to the dignity or merit of any one; it only serves to engender dislike, contempt, and disgust. It seems to be the desire of some of the majority to provoke the dislike and displeasure of the southern people, rather than secure their respect and confidence. Such gentlemen will very probably succeed in their purpose now and for the future. I am very sure that a wholesome statesmanship, apart from personal good-will, would suggest the propriety, wisdom, and importance of reclaiming the respect of the people of the South of all political parties for the people of all political parties at the North, and especially for the public men of the nation. The spirit of this debate seems to have no such end in view. I beg to say, however, to the Senate and the country, that the southern people are very able to take the distinction between the Government and the dominant party—they may dislike the one while they love and honor the other, and so I apprehend millions of southern white people do. The republican party have not done much for the last ten years to command the love and confidence of the southern people.

Sir, it is false and scandalous to say that any considerable number of the southern people anywhere are murderers, assassins, robbers, and given to crime. No proof of this has been, and I undertake to say none can be, produced. I do not pretend to say that there is no crime in the South or that there are no bad men there. I admit the contrary; but what I do say is, that the aggregate crime there is not greater in proportion than elsewhere in the United States, and anterior to the late war it was much less there than in the Northern States generally. In this estimate, I do not include those crimes growing out of the troubles in Louisiana and others like them. These are attributable to special causes, the principal one of which is misrule of the most intolerable character. And I assert with perfect confidence, and challenge successful contradiction, that in 90 per cent. of these horrible atrocities the negroes, led on by bad white men and others in the interest of misrule, have been the aggressors. This was so at Colfax, Coushatta, and Vicksburgh and elsewhere.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator states that the provocation was on the part of the blacks and others. He mentions Coushatta among other instances. Will he please state what the provocation was?

Mr. MERRIMON. I will.

Mr. SARGENT. As that circumstance is in the official documents, some persons who had been properly elected to office were required to resign. They declined, though threats of their lives were made; but when further threatened, they agreed to leave the State if they could have a safe escort. A safe escort was promised, and they were murdered on their way to the State line.

Mr. MERRIMON. The facts about that transaction, as I have learned them from various sources, getting them from the same sources that the Senator does and other sources, including a private letter from a highly respectable individual, are that the men who were thus cruelly murdered—and I make no apology for the murderers—had incited the negroes to riot and murder anterior to the time when they were arrested and carried out of that town. The fact that the negroes were so incited by these parties or part of them, gave rise to their arrest, seizure, and taking them off with a pledge of safeguard, when they were brutally murdered; and I condemn it as thoroughly and completely as anybody, and the parties who did it ought to be punished to the last degree.

Mr. SARGENT. There was no riot at Coushatta. There had been there no previous violence of any kind whatever. These were not negroes, but white settlers, and two of the men who were thus murdered were southern born. The offense of all of them was merely that they were republicans.

Mr. MERRIMON. The facts are, that the original riot which it was intended to have in the town of Coushatta did not take place there, but by misdirection the negroes went to another town. That excited the indignation of the white people, and then these men were arrested in the town of Coushatta, and they were murdered on their way to the place where a pledge was given them they would be allowed to go. But I will proceed with my speech.

I do not justify or excuse the violence of the white people. I condemn this as strongly as anybody; but I condemn those who incited the negroes and made misrule, more than any one else. It cannot be denied by any just person, that in all these cases the provocation was great indeed, such as would have produced like conflicts and bloody results in any State in the Union. In truth, I believe that today if the same provocations were offered in Indiana or Wisconsin or New York to the people, the result would be infinitely worse. The white people of the South have borne much, because they knew little allowance would be made in their behalf. I put it to every reasonable and well-informed person to say, if, considering the character of the late war and what has transpired since—the humiliation, impoverishment, outrage, and misrule to which the people of the South have been subjected—the gross amount of crime there has not been remarkably small. Looking to the history of other times and other countries, there would be no doubt of the correctness of this view.

I know that exaggerated statements have been made by political newspapers and public men—sometimes on one side and sometimes on the other—for political effect; perhaps both sides in politics are not free from this imputation. Such statements are worth but little with reasoning, reflecting men. I place small confidence in what individuals may say on either side of this controversy, moved by political considerations. I look to general results and the opinions of disinterested, just, and conscientious men charged to look after the public good, and who do so regardless of the interests of political parties. Looking to such sources we may form just conclusions. Who could draw such conclusions from most of the speeches made in this debate? The majority, attacking the South, in speaking of the crimes in Louisiana and elsewhere, have uniformly exaggerated them in number, painted them in the blackest colors; they have talked against one side and for the other, and hence have told but one side of any case.

I cite the speeches now in the RECORD in support of what I say. No one of them pretended to explain the facts attending the origin of any conflict, no one has ever referred to any grounds of provocation. A stranger, taking the speeches as stating the whole truth, would infer that the white people just in cold blood, and for the love of murder, killed negroes by the score. Now we all know this is not true. I repeat, that wherever these extraordinary scenes of blood have transpired the negroes, incited by bad men in the interest of misrule, have been the aggressors. And but for bad white men they would be comparatively quiet; the South everywhere would be quiet to-day. And wherever in the South there is wholesome government there is peace, good-will, and slowly returning prosperity. My own State is a striking illustration of this fact; Georgia is another; Tennessee and Texas are others, and lately in Arkansas there is a state of quiet and good order produced by a wholesome change in government.

In my State, the governor is republican and a large majority of the judiciary are so; the Legislature is conservative. In Georgia, Tennessee, Texas, and Arkansas the State authorities are mainly democratic. There is peace, and the people of all classes and colors are protected alike in their lives, liberty, and property as well as anywhere in the Union. In South Carolina, where there has been the grossest misrule, the present republican governor manifests a strong and honest purpose to administer the government faithfully, and as a consequence order and confidence are returning and all classes of people sustain him. It has been said tauntingly that if the democrats rule all is well, but republicans are not tolerated. This is the contemptible cry of the small demagogue. Wherever there is a republican who rules justly, he is both sustained and respected by the people. I do not doubt that the white people prefer democratic rule, but they cheerfully sustain the lawful and wholesome rule of any party or any man.

Before I pass on this subject, I wish to call attention to the census statistics of crime in the years 1850, 1860, and 1870. I wish time would allow me to produce the tables. Any one can refer to them who wishes. But they show these striking general facts in support of what I have said. Anterior to the late war, the ratio of crime in point of smallness of amount, was nearly as 3 to 1 in favor of the Southern States. Especially in North Carolina, there was not a more peaceable, law-abiding people in the world. Since the war the ratio is about the same throughout the Union; but if I subtract the crime done by colored people, the ratio is about what it was before the war. Take North Carolina, for example: Out of four hundred and sixty-two convicts in the State prison in 1870, one hundred and thirty-two were whites and three hundred and thirty were colored. This official data will carry infinitely stronger conviction to the minds of just and reflecting men than all the empty declamation and detraction that can be heaped on the people of the South for an age, founded upon the clap-trap, interested, and false statements of petty partisans. They, like all agricultural peoples, are peaceful and law abiding. Until the republican misrule in the South, with which the country is at length becoming somewhat familiar, that section of the Union was remarkably free from riots and crimes incident to crowded cities and communities. It is so now, except in the cases and for the causes mentioned, and the statistics I cite show it.

Mr. President, republican politicians have sought for years past to produce the impression that the people of the South are and have been ever since the late war hostile to the Union, and desire and intend its overthrow. They seek to make this impression now in and out of the Senate, by the cry, in connection with the troubles in Louisiana, of a "new rebellion" in the South. Their misrule has produced disorder, conflict, and crime; and again they raise the shout of a "new rebellion," in order to rally the people of the North once more to their support. This is likewise a false suggestion—utterly groundless. But it has been made so persistently in the past and is now so vigorously renewed by politicians, that I deem it worth while to submit some considerations which ought to silence forever this groundless clamor.

Notwithstanding the violence of the late war and the multiplied annoyances and complications the people of the South have been subjected to since that war, so far as I know or can learn, no man has ever since then raised his hand or his voice against the Union. If any one knows to the contrary, I ask him to produce the proof of his allegation. Those who make the imputation reach their conclusions by false deductions. They argue that the southern people rebelled, they fought, were conquered, subjugated, and therefore they hate the Union; and then in support of their conclusions they cite disorders in the South, which were in fact produced by their own misrule. That this is false reasoning will appear from what I am about to say.

The general fact I have just stated as to opposition to the Union is striking and significant, and ought to be a source of profound pleasure to every patriot. It rests on solid grounds of patriotism, and gives the strongest assurances of the perpetuity of the Union if the people are true to themselves.

In the early struggles for independence in this country the people of the South were the first to strike for liberty. Undisguised white men seized British tea, British stamp and also the stamp officer at Wilmington, North Carolina, before the tea was cast into the water in Boston Harbor. At Charlotte, in that State, the people declared independence of Great Britain on the 20th day of May, 1775, thus anticipating the national declaration more than twelve months. They employed much of the noble thoughts and language in their declaration afterward incorporated into the national declaration. When the hour of conflict that "tried men's souls" came, they were among the first to rush to arms and declare and make the "cause of Boston the cause of all." In that glorious, never-to-be-forgotten struggle for liberty and independence, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia contributed of their blood and treasure without stint and as liberally as any of the Colonies. In the statesmanship and generalship of the Revolution they were the equal of any other section. In the very outset the people at Charlotte manifested their unalterable love and preference for free republican institutions, and all through the southern colonies they did likewise. In order to throw off kingly government they nobly aided in gaining and establishing independence. After that they aided in framing, establishing, and sustaining the present national system of government. Without them this never could have been done. Much of the system is the workmanship of their statesmen. The people approved the Union, they indorsed it, they sustained it, they loved it, because it embodied their notions of free government, and secured national liberty for them and their posterity and for the oppressed of all nations. They believed in the theory of it; they put it in practice, studied and understood its workings, learned and approved it well. From its earliest existence to this moment their tastes, their industries, their education, their laws, their statesmanship, their valor, and their civilization have uniformly attested their approval of, adherence to, and love for this system of government. In all the past scarcely an individual in the South has expressed, much less made, opposition to this noble system of government. Nor can any man deny that the southern people contributed much, very much, to the greatness, glory, and renown of the Union. Whatever may be said of their hostility to it in the late civil war, it can never be said that they were hostile to and fought against this system of government; and that is the material fact I now wish to make prominent.

I know that here the horrid specter of the civil war rises up, and I am to be told that the southern people fought against the Union. But they did not fight against it because it was the Union; they did not fight against it as a system of government or because it was such. They owned five million of slaves, worth more than two thousand million dollars; they had a strong and overruling apprehension, grounded upon long and fierce controversy, that a political party about to administer the Government intended to destroy that property, although it was recognized by the Constitution and secured by the system of government as much as any other property. So apprehending, they did not propose to make war on the Union, but to withdraw from it, as thousands believed they had a constitutional right to do, both North and South. I did not, however, share in that opinion. The first act of attempted government they did was to form a national government substantially in all respects that of the Union. The State governments were all preserved. No one suggested a new system; if this had been proposed, the revolution could not have lasted a day. The people of all classes were zealous and keenly alive on this subject. The magnitude and violence of the war was almost without precedent in history. At the close of it the people of the South, seeing that negro slavery was lost, at once laid down their arms. Immense armies did so, though they might have continued a terrible warfare for years. Almost in a day the whole people abandoned war and returned to peaceful pursuits and, I may add, their allegiance to the Union.

There is no parallel in all history for such a termination of such a war. I submit to the judgment of a candid world that there could not be a nobler illustration of the high civilization of the southern people. Could there be more convincing evidence that they were not hostile to the Government as a system, but approved it? How else can that grand result be explained? No man can gainsay the manhood and unbending courage of the southern people and their unalterable and unconquerable love of liberty. If they had deemed their liberty about to be lost, with armies well-trained and able and experienced commanders, they could have kept up organized warfare for an indefinite time, and beaten in this, they could have carried on irregular war for a quarter of a century. This they would have done if they had supposed that they were to be denied the full benefits of free government. But they were assured otherwise by the President, by Congress, by the Army of the Union, and by the northern people. They confidently expected otherwise, and hence they were content at once to abandon war and return peacefully to the Constitution and the Union—again enjoy the benefits of them and again support and defend them. After that, they submitted to the repeated overthrow of their State governments and the re-establishment of them under reconstruction orders of the President first, and afterward under the reconstruction acts of Congress, containing provisions alike proscriptive and humiliating. Tens of thousands of the white people, thousands of them distinguished for virtue, learning, and experience, were not allowed to join in the work of reconstruction, while the then late slaves, without any preparation or fitness for such a purpose, were allowed to do so. To make these laws more offensive, they were executed by the Army, and it is a shameful mockery to say that the elections were free—they were held under the sword and the supervision and direction of the Army officers. The vote taken in my own State was counted in a city in an adjoining State, at military headquarters, whether rightfully or otherwise no one ever knew. Time will not allow me to advert to the demoralization in government, public extravagance, corruption in office, increase of public debt, and general misrule consequent upon reconstruction. It is scarcely necessary to do so; it is notorious. It has in great measure driven the people in the South to despair; it is the national disgrace and the scandal of civilization.

In view of all these things can any reasonable person doubt that the southern people are for the Union and bound to it by motives and considerations of the most enduring character?

Sir, free government, as embodied in the constitutions of the several States and that of the Union, is essential to the liberty, prosperity, and happiness of the American people. It is therefore a matter of supreme moment to them that it shall operate freely and perpetually in all its parts throughout the length and breadth of the whole Union. It cannot be one government for the North and another for the South; what is done to Louisiana must under like circumstances be done to New York. It cannot be one government for the northern people and another for the southern people; it must be the government of all and for all. The northern people cannot maintain a standing army and a military despotism in the South and free government at the North. They cannot allow the usurper to crush and kill Louisiana now. If they do, one day he will by the like right crush and kill Massachusetts. Our rich and noble heritage of government has cost too much of precious blood and treasure to be wasted and frittered away in prolonging the supremacy of a political party. The vitality of that heritage is not only threatened—a deadly assault is made upon it. The time for active defense has come. I call aloud to the people to come to the rescue while they may, lest the terrible time shall come when they cannot.

Mr. STEWART. I did not intend to make a speech, and I will not now; but I have listened to all this essay of the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. MERRIMON,] and there are some parts of it rather cool and refreshing.

Mr. MORTON. Will the Senator yield to a motion for a recess?

Mr. STEWART. I think we had better go on. I say that some parts of this essay are rather cool and refreshing, particularly when he deprecates the tone of the majority toward the southern people and toward the democratic party. He deprecates the harsh language the majority use. He does not say anything about the tone of the minority. After having dealt in epithets, ransacked the dictionary to get harsh terms to apply to the republican party and the President of the United States for the space of four and a half hours, he deprecates that anybody should say harsh things except himself. He has the exclusive privilege to say hard things. Where did he get that exclusive privilege? There have been harsher things said by him than I ever heard in this Chamber before, harsher things of the President of the United States than I ever heard before.

Mr. MERRIMON. I challenge the honorable Senator to point to one word I said disrespectful to the President of the United States.

Mr. STEWART. Take the whole speech; the words "usurpation," "tyranny," "oppression," "cruelty," and everything else were applied to the President. He was charged with almost every crime in the decalogue; he was pictured as a tyrant worse than Nero; he was not treated with any respect whatever by the speech of the Senator from North Carolina.

Who is the President of the United States that he should be thus treated? The President of the United States happens to be a man who has acted a very conspicuous part in the republican party and in the struggles of the last fourteen years, and I do not wonder that there is some feeling against him on the part of certain persons; but I am surprised that that feeling should manifest itself quite so publicly at so early a date and at this particular time. I want to tell my democratic friends that they are getting a little too fast in this matter; it is a little too early yet to speak of the republican party as false, faithless, dead, and all that. The republican party is not going to die immediately. I do not wonder that the enemies of the republican party desire its death. The republican party is identified with too much of that which is good, too much of that which is worth having, its history is too thoroughly identified with the Union of these States, it is too thoroughly identified with government and law and order to meet the approbation of some people. There is no doubt about that. The Senator from North Carolina says let it die, and let it die now. The republican party is not going to die at his bidding. The republican party has lived a long time. The republican party did not die at the bidding of men who disliked it when it won a just victory in 1860 and elected a President. It did not die then because the democratic party would not submit to the verdict of the people. It did not die then notwithstanding this same democratic party declared that they would destroy the republican party; and if it was necessary to do that to destroy the Union and the Government of the fathers, they would do it; and still the republican party did not die. No! but the majority of the people of the United States came forward and said that the party that stood by the Union and the Constitution and the laws should live. But the struggle commenced then; it went on with various successes. Each day we were told that it was the last day for the republican party; it must die. We were told by democratic orators in the darkest days of the rebellion that the republican party must now die. Every time there was a rebel victory we heard in the streets of the North, "This is the end; it is a terrible overthrow. You and your party will now be crushed out." This went on from time to time. We heard, I say, during the whole struggle that the time had come for the republican party to die. When finally through the patriotism of those composing that party—for the great Union-loving people of the whole country belonged to that party—when by their sacrifices and their patriotism the rebels were forced to lay down their arms, then the cry was, "The war is over now; Lee has surrendered. Now it is time for the republican party to die. The republican party has survived its mission; let it die!" And the then accidental President of the United States thought the time had come for the republican party to die. He pronounced its eulogy in terms not quite so harsh and severe as it has been pronounced here to-day, and he went on then to build up the substitute of sham loyalty to the Government; but what did the people say to him? The people said, "We will trust the republican party that has stood by the Constitution, that has stood by the country, that has saved the Union from destruction by war; we will trust it with reconstruction." They rolled up their majorities in its behalf, and reconstruction went on; but not in the spirit of cruelty or oppression, as has been charged. Notwithstanding the republican party was backed up by the votes of the people, by overwhelming victories at the polls constantly, it demanded no vengeance; it excluded no one. All it asked of the South was that all men might have their rights; that the loyal man, though he be weak, should fare as well as the disloyal, though he was strong. That was all this great republican party asked.

It was said that if the negro was enfranchised the southern men would control his vote. I supposed that was so at the time, and in advocating colored suffrage at an early period I stated on this floor that I expected that result would follow. I thought then that hostility to the negro and hostility to the Government were at an end in the South; but what do we hear to-day? The Senator from North Carolina charges what—and what a charge it is to make! He says that the republicans have taught the negro to hate the white man and to separate from him. Have the republicans taught him that? There was nobody there but a few strangers. If there had been those friendly relations that they affirm, if there had been that disposition to treat the negro kindly of which they boast, they could have controlled him. The fact that they have no influence with the negro shows that they have treated him badly. He is not a turbulent man; he is peaceable, he is docile. He was under the subjection of his master. I say that to charge the republican party with having excited the negro against his master there is an admission that the negro has not been fairly treated, for I know that he loves his old master better than he does the stranger with half-decent treatment. If the idea of enslaving him had been abandoned, if your peon laws had been abandoned, if good faith had been pursued there would be no trouble of this kind. That is the strongest argument; it is the thing that comes up daily to my judgment and the judgment of fair men in the North. The fact that you have no influence with the negro, the fact that he can be controlled by a few men from the North that you call carpet-baggers, shows how you treat him. You ought to have influence with him, and if you treat him as a man and recognize his manhood you can control him, and everybody knows it. That charge against the republican party is an admission that you have maltreated him, because good treatment would secure his co-operation and friendship.

There is in that charge a volume of reproach to you. I say that all this great republican party asked in reconstruction was fair treatment, and all it has attempted to do in the South was to prevent injury to the negro by the whites of the South, or I mean to say the bad whites of the South—for I do not believe the great mass of the people of the South approve of this thing—but the turbulent white-leaguers and Ku-Klux Klan. All our efforts here were to prevent the shedding of blood and cruel treatment of the poor and defenseless. The only effort the republican party as a party has made was to give you good government. But you say the carpet-baggers have given you bad government down there. That is your fault if it be so. You had it in your power to have good government. You would not run for office yourselves; you held aloof; you made the government as bad as you could in order to have it a reproach.

Tell me that the people of the South, with all their intelligence and wealth, cannot control the negro if they would acknowledge his manhood! Tell me that they would not control him if they were kind to him! Tell me they could not have honest government if they desired! No; they were desperate; they would let the thing go by default; they would have a grievance to bring before the North to tear down the party that they hate; and perchance if they tear down this party they may take a step further; but they must first tear down the republican party before they can tear down the Union of the States. It is not dead yet. Although it is said on this floor "Let it die," it will not die as long as oppression lives; it will not die so long as red-handed treason against law and against humanity is allowed to exist and stalk abroad in the South. You misjudge, you may rail at President Grant now. I am aware of the various causes which bring defeat occasionally; but mark you, there are a few cardinal principles that are imbedded in the hearts of those who love this country, of those who stood by it in its darkest days; and they are equality of all, protection to all, fair play for all; and until you are prepared to concede that, you cannot kill the republican party.

While you upset State governments, while you use violence and fraud at the South, while you refuse to submit to the verdict of the people, while you play your old trick that you did when Abraham Lincoln was first elected of refusing to abide by the verdict of the majority, while you show yourselves uneasy under that verdict and essay to get rid of it by any means whatever, the republican party will rise up in judgment against you.

I am aware that the republican party is not tied together by the broad bonds of public plunder and traditional prejudice that are said to have held other parties together. I am aware that if any member of the republican party goes astray the whole party will throw him overboard. I am aware of the condemnation that they are willing to bestow upon any unworthy member of that party. I am aware of their not having political rule and party lines drawn as other parties have, but I am aware also—I have seen it, and I should think the Senator from North Carolina would be mindful of it at this time—that they have a few cardinal principles for which they will make any sacrifice.

Now with regard to Louisiana I am not going into any detailed discussion. I simply say that the whole case shows that the only object the President had was to preserve order, defend the laws, protect the weak, and do his duty as the Chief Executive of the nation.

There is no doubt about it, and it is premature to take what is first said upon a false report by newspapers without full information as to the facts. It is premature to say on that authority that the judgment of the people will be against President Grant. The judgment of posterity will be in favor of his Administration. Toward the South he has been generous. No man in all this broad land has shown a more high sense of generosity and liberality to the people of the South than President Grant. When Lee surrendered he extended a parole. When it was sought to have that parole violated and those soldiers arrested, who like General Grant stood up and took the responsibility to say "Thus far shalt thou go and no farther." In all his conduct toward the South in every instance, in appointing men in the South, in his private conversation constantly with the people of the South, no man expresses the sympathy, the anxiety, and the cordial wish for their prosperity. His only hope and ambition is that they may have good government, and he, forsooth, is arraigned as if he were a common criminal.

It is said that the voice of the people of the United States has condemned the Administration and that the republican party must now die—die after its glorious record; die after it has vindicated free government; die after it has vindicated the Constitution; die after it has saved the Union; die after it has recognized the manhood of all men in this country, the equality of all; die after the sacrifice it has made for the weak; yes, and die while the weak are being persecuted; die while the White League lives; die while the Ku-Klux are supreme; die while anarchy reigns in a goodly portion of this country; die while the work is yet to be done.

What does the death of the republican party mean? It means anarchy in the South, disorder everywhere, destruction of free government, States overturned by fraud, innocent people driven from their abodes and slaughtered; it means all these, until the whole country shall be sick and tired of our form of government and finally consent to disunion. That is what it means. It means, furthermore, the payment of large sums of money for damages done to the South in the war, it means to reverse the verdict of the war, it means everything that is evil to this country. Without the republican party in this generation, there would be no United States. The great body of the republican party are the only people who are identified with the government of our country and the Union in this generation. In the time of the Revolution there were other parties identified with the Republic. There was a great party then identified with it; but that generation is passed away.

The men who saved the Union by the sacrifices they made were, as a rule, members of the republican party, or sympathizers with it from the democrats and of other parties—those who carried on the war coming from all parties—coming together under the grand name of the union party for the preservation of this country; and I say they are the only people who have any memories to vindicate in connection with it. Those who now form your White Leagues, the young men who are in them, have memories upon hard-contested fields of battle against the Union. Many of them I am sorry to say are willing to give vent to their feelings by murder and depredations upon the innocent and weak among them. That is a sad spectacle, but why should they come forward and say "We will now slay the great republican party; we will trample it in the dust; it has been a tyrant to us?" I deny that the republican party has been a tyrant. I deny that the administration of President Grant has been tyrannical. I undertake to say that history furnishes no parallel of the magnanimity of the republican party; that the history of the world furnishes no parallel of a great war without a cause against a government like ours or against any other government, after which executions did not follow. Look at France with her boasted civilization and see her after two years of rebellion in the city of Paris marching men off by hundreds and thousands every week for execution. Some forty thousand if I mistake not were executed after they were captured, besides those who were cut down with arms in their hands. Nothing was said about that in the civilized world. It was regarded as the common usage of nations. Here where a war was made upon a country without provocation, without a single grievance, with nothing to complain of, no law violated, for they all admit it; they all say now the war was unjust; and the republican party in power, sustained by the great majority of the people, with overwhelming majorities at every election, granted freedom to all, restored civil rights to all and made no request of the South except that they would grant to all freedom and civil rights. That was the only request, the only struggle. It was to perpetuate slavery, as admitted by the Senator from North Carolina, that the war was waged by the South. They waged this war, he says, because their property was endangered and they have continued it to preserve that property, and every time they have had an opportunity we have seen them enacting their peon laws. I had a book full of peon laws that were passed under Johnson's reconstruction, that virtually reduced the negro back to slavery. It is their effort to control the blacks as property that causes trouble. They are unwilling to recognize the fact that the negro is a man. That they must recognize. They never will kill the republican party so long as they pass peon laws. They never can kill the republican party until they abide the event of the result of an election. They never can kill the republican party until they stop force at the ballot.

In the providence of God, the Republican party will be used for the preservation of liberty here so long as it is necessary. It is the only instrumentality that can save liberty in America; the only party that can save the Constitution and the Union. It is the only party that can secure to every man the right to life, liberty, and property without molestation. It is the only party to which anybody looks for protection at the ballot-box and for free and fair elections.

Be friends of the negro and he will be your friend, and then there will be no occasion for the republican party. Let him vote; abandon all idea of hostility to him. He is a trusting, confiding man, and when you stop trying to get his labor for nothing, when you give up the idea of slavery in the South, when you stop that altogether, you will have his confidence. You are affable, you are seductive in manners; you can captivate us; we all like you, like to associate with you. You make us very happy by your complimentary remarks. Southern people are the most polite and most agreeable in the world socially, and they can capture the whole Senate and the country wherever they go. Tell me not they cannot capture the negro if they will only get rid of the idea that he is property, and treat him as a man.

When the idea of slavery is over, then the White Leagues will disband, then intimidation will stop, then fair play will begin, and then, when fair play begins and every man has his rights, we will begin to talk about there being no necessity for the republican party; but you may talk what you please of oppression in New Orleans; you may talk of your Arkansas troubles, and it will amount to nothing. The people understand just how it is. They will understand that in Arkansas it is not President Grant who has committed any outrage, but a State government has been overthrown. They will ascertain in Louisiana that it is not the republican party or the President that committed any outrage there, but that there is still an effort there to enslave the negro and oppress him, and there are organizations to intimidate him and to deprive him of his rights as a man. Concede these rights; let us have fair play; and drop this oppression. You cannot drop the republican party until you have dropped oppression. It hates the name of oppression. It was born to uphold law and order everywhere. It was born a giant, and grows a giant, and will remain strong and powerful so long as it sets its face against oppression.

I have friendly feelings to the South and friendly feelings for southern men. I know very well how they can get rid of the whole of this matter. All you have to do is—and I cannot repeat it too often—to be on friendly terms with the negro, and he will vote with you. Do not drive him away from the polls, but be friendly to him. He is willing to compromise. He does not want to carry on a fight; we do not want to carry it on and fight you, but as long as you do in any part of this country things that you cannot defend, you must expect it. It is intolerable in a republican government to have men driven from the polls by the thousand. There is nothing so bad. Talk about oppression. That is a blow right at the vitals of republican institutions. There is no republic; there is no liberty, unless every legal voter in the country can go to the polls and be protected and stand up as a man. Until that is conceded we must have a struggle, and every man who is a republican, every man who is a democrat, every man who believes in free institutions, is offended and injured and insulted every time the weakest man is driven from the polls. It is fundamental. The ballot is government.

Talk not to me about striking at the ballot and asking this administration not to strike back. If President Grant would not use the extent of his power to protect every man in the exercise of his life and rights, in the exercise of the ballot, he would not be worthy of the place he occupies; he would be forgetful of his great record. But fear not; he has been schooled with the great republican party in the great reform measures of the day. He carried the banner of the Union when the national life was threatened. He has been in the front rank of all reforms. When he became President his first official act was to declare in favor of the fifteenth amendment and to recognize the rights of man. If he had done less than he has done in Louisiana and elsewhere, he would have given the lie to the promise he then made to stand by equal rights and the ballot for every citizen. Think you that he can stand idly by and see the ballot, for which this great struggle has been made, trampled in the dust? Revile him not. If you of the South want to govern, if you want liberty, if you want protection, if you want prosperity, join us and let us have that and divide on some other issues; let us not divide on the issue of the rights of man; let us not divide on issues of slavery any more; drop it if you would have peace. Let us divide on other policies, but let us agree upon the fundamental principle that every man in all this broad land has the right to protect himself with the ballot, and a right to go to any poll where he is a legitimate voter and deposit his ballot without molestation; and if you think you can have democratic rule without conceding this, you are sadly mistaken in your estimate of the northern people and of this nation.

The quicker you consent to this the quicker you come up to the standard in good faith, the quicker you will have peace and prosperity in the South. Your miseries grow out of your struggle to enslave mankind. I have nothing to say against any one man personally or any particular section. Slavery was tolerated under the laws as they formerly stood; but your struggle to extend it has been unfortunate. Your struggle to maintain caste, your struggle to rule the negro, your struggle to obtain his labor without treating him as a man, will be equally unprofitable. Drop it, and then we can have peace in this country; then we can have union and brotherly love throughout the country; for I do assure you that the only difficulty in all this country now is your vain and foolish efforts to deny the negro what are his legitimate rights. You cannot do it. You may prolong the struggle, but it will be as hard on you as it will be on the negro. It will continue to keep in power the gigantic party of the nation, which, although it may be temporarily defeated, still is a lion. Its face is set in a certain direction; its resolution is taken; you cannot resist it.

The decree has gone forth at the mouth of the cannon that this country shall be free. It has gone forth from the legislative halls of the nation and three-fourths of the States that all men in the jurisdiction of the United States shall have the right to vote, to govern and to be governed by law. Do not attempt to reverse that decree. Come fully up to that, and then you may talk about parties dying. You think you will elect a President. With your present talk and your present style you have no more chance of electing the next President than you have of carrying this Capitol on your backs. It is perfectly ridiculous to talk about electing the next President with your White Leagues in existence. Every loyal man would be insulted by those White Leagues struggling to control the presidential election. Last fall the people thought you were quiet. You said you were good boys, and the country believed it; but they will find you out before the presidential election. You cannot afford to go on in this way. Your speeches arraigning the President in such unmeasured terms, speaking of the republican party as a most oppressive party—that kind of talk at the next session of Congress would be all the document we would want to distribute. The speech of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MERRIMON] would be a good enough document for my State. It would secure for us every vote that was ever republican in the State. If that is the way you talk, they will all say, "I will vote the republican ticket a little longer." Strike them on some other issue. You know exactly how to stir up the northern masses and make them mad. You hit them just right every time. Perhaps I make a mistake in telling you this; but the truth is your speeches make everybody in the North mad and wipe out all chance of your electing the next President. It may not be good republican policy for me to give you democrats this warning. I am rather a non-partisan myself. I am going out of politics, and I would like to have these troubles ended. I do not want to fight these battles year after year.

I did not intend to make a speech, but the remarks of the Senator from North Carolina brought me up, and such speeches will have the same effect through the whole country. I warn you to be a little more circumspect, a little more prudent. You are rash; you are dealing with edged tools. You do not understand that when you put in an apology of any kind for White Leagues it makes everybody mad. We do not like to see men apologize for driving men from the polls. In my country, if a man was driven from the polls, I do not care what the excuse was, it would create a revolution. Everybody would be on one side against it. Think of a man deprived of the right to vote! Suppose they tried in Virginia City to deprive one man of the right of giving his ballot. There would be a worse commotion there than ever was in that commonwealth. All our people would be ready to take up arms if they heard anybody make an apology for driving men away from the polls—giving any reason for it, saying they are carpet-baggers, they are thieves, or anything else; they would simply ask, "Is it a fact that men have been driven from the polls?"

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him? Do I understand him to say that thievery and knavery are so very popular in Nevada that that community will not tolerate the application of that term to anybody?

Mr. STEWART. No. Honesty is so popular there that you cannot make the people believe stories about the thievery and knavery of a poor negro that has been cheated of his rights; and when you talk about his being blood-thirsty they will laugh. You tell the people of Nevada that the people of the South are in danger from the negro, they will laugh. They know that is not true. It will not do at all. They know that it is a mere subterfuge for denying the right to vote. They see through the whole thing, and that is what I want to warn you about. You are not sufficiently circumspect. Your speeches will ruin you. You have said enough to ruin you. You cannot recover your ground. You may talk as nicely as you please here, but the people have no faith in you when you admit that you drive men from the polls. That you admit by your arguments here. You cannot give a reason which will satisfy any honest man that that is a right way of doing things. When you say it is not much to kill two or three thousand men; when you talk about your technical orders that the President had a right to give and talk abstractions about the Constitution, the common people will say "What of the Constitution; what have you to do with the Constitution? Under the Constitution is it legal to drive men away from the polls and murder them?" That is not the way to construe the Constitution. Lawyers may construe it in that way, but we believe that under the Constitution every man has the right to protection. And so believes President Grant. The newspapers are assailing the President.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Am I to understand from that remark that the people of the country are going for a third term?

Mr. STEWART. No, you do not understand me to say anything about that at all. I have not said a word about it; but I will tell you this: While I do not believe the people of the North would elect any man President under ordinary circumstances for a third term, I believe you can by kicking up a little rebellion down there and going on as you seem inclined to do make them do almost anything. There I warn you again. If the people find that Grant is doing his duty and that nobody else will, they will elect him again against everybody, because the people are going to preserve a few things that are cardinal with them. You had better not trifle with them on these questions, the question of the Union and the question of equal rights. You have always got beaten when you have undertaken these issues, and now you start up again the same thing. Every issue you have made for ten years on this line has beaten you. When you have not talked politics for a while, and the country gets quiet and tired of the continual rule of one party and thinks there is no danger, and the republican party is beaten in a single State, you start the old howl and stir up the people again. That is what you are doing now. It is your own fault. I have seen it over and over here for the last ten years. Whenever a little insignificant town election has gone against the republican party, then you raise a howl. You commence then to talk about the right to vote and apologize for White Leagues or Ku-Klux or something of that kind, you stir the thing right up and get beaten. That is the way the thing has been and I suppose it will continue in that way, and the republican party will live until you give up your policy. I wish you would give it up now and let the country prosper. It is time the war was over, time slavery was over with all its relics and apologies for wrong and outrage. We do not have these things in the North. We do not have men driven from the polls. We have no White Leagues. It should be so in the South. The republican party will stay and watch until it is so there. It is a persistent party. It enlisted for the whole war. It is not going to accept of any discharge and is not going to be kicked out of the service until it has finished the war in all its aspects.

Now, the quicker you are willing to stop the war and let us have peace the better; but so long as you continue the war you will be beaten in every battle and we shall see your backs on the same old battle-ground. We know every inch of that battle-ground; we have been over and over it. We know every advantage. We have seen so much on that battle-field that we know the whole plan. You have started in the same old track to wage the war of oppression and hate—the war of slavery. We understand that, and shall meet you as of old until you quit making that issue and fighting on that battle-field.

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President—

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator from North Carolina allow me to move an amendment before he proceeds?

Mr. RANSOM. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I offer the following amendment to this resolution.

Strike out all after the word "resolved" and insert:

That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be, and it is hereby, instructed to report forthwith a bill declaring that no constitutional State government now exists in the State of Louisiana, and providing for an election of a governor, lieutenant-governor, and members of the General Assembly for the State of Louisiana, and all other State officers which by the constitution of that State are to be elected by vote of the people thereof.

[Mr. RANSOM addressed the Senate. His remarks will appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. President, it may not be out of place for me to allude to the circumstance that I had not a seat in this Chamber when the proceedings connected with the election of 1872 in Louisiana were first considered by the Senate. But this circumstance may not be an explanation and certainly not an excuse for the fact, which may be reason for regret by me, that on the morning of the 5th of January I was not so furnished with facts and so equipped with faculties, moral and intellectual, that I could at once form an opinion satisfactory even to myself of the events and of the character of the events that occurred in the city of New Orleans the preceding day.

Other Senators were more fortunate; and other persons in the country, not having better nor, as far as I know, even different means of information, were also more fortunate; and with singular unanimity they at once pronounced the President of the United States a usurper and the Lieutenant-General of the Army an "instrument of his behests" in the basest usurpation of modern times.

We know that these opinions expressed in the Senate and expressed in the country were simultaneous in time and the same in character; but as we cannot assume that these coincidences were the result of prearrangement based upon a knowledge of the plans of those in New Orleans who designed to organize the house of representatives by fraud and force, it appears that they were the result of an identity of opinion and purpose in the politics and affairs of the country. Therefore these proceedings are just reason for serious thought. The facts were not then known. Even the party complaining had not been heard in full, and the party assailed had not been heard at all. Nor is it an excuse or defense to now say, as is now said, even were the statement true, that the facts are what you believed and assumed them to be when the President and General Sheridan were arraigned and condemned. Your statement, if true, might be evidence, of your superior capacity for foreseeing, but it is conclusive proof of your indifference to justice and to the principles and rules of proceeding by which alone justice can be secured.

If from this injustice the South shall reap a bitter harvest, it would be a fortunate circumstance in their affairs if they could see the chief source of those disasters, which are not traceable directly to their own faults and errors. At least one-half of the misfortunes of the South are due to the misdirected sympathy and criminal support given by the democratic party of the North. Before the war, during the war, since the war, the democratic party, either by its promises or by its policy, has encouraged the rebellious and unsubdued spirits of the South. This encouragement has led to new acts of violence, to new scenes of disorder. These acts of violence and scenes of disorder have compelled the nation to move again and again for the protection of its loyal citizens in the reconstructed States. The power of the democratic party in the North, whether actually acquired or only prophesied by its leaders, has been the measure of violence and injustice to the loyal people of the South; and this violence and injustice, reacting upon the loyal people of the North, have checked the progress and prevented the actual triumph of the democratic party in the nation. This, in a sentence, is the political history of the country for fifteen years.

And this, if I may address myself specially to the South, this, Senators, will be the political history of the country until you cease to look to the democratic party for relief, and turn to those principles of justice whose essence in politics is human equality, and apply those principles universally in the States that you represent. Be not deceived by any temporary success of your northern allies. They are today for the purpose of relieving you in the manner that you seek to be relieved as powerless as they were in 1861, 1864, 1866, 1868, and 1872. You seek to be relieved from the authority conferred upon the United States by the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution. This relief you can never obtain. The nation has been clothed with power to protect its citizens, citizens of the United States, in their equal rights as citizens of the several States.

These equal rights you do not secure in your several States to the citizens thereof, and under cover of the seductive theory of local self-government you deny to the nation the power to protect those who are first citizens of the United States, and then and therefore citizens of the States where they reside.

Your relief must come from yourselves. When you accept the negro as your equal politically the contest will be over. Until you do so accept him the contest will continue. Make your choice.

Time will show that these days given to misrepresentation and injustice are fraught with disappointment to you who speak for the remnant of the old order of things in the South, but they are full of hope for those who seek the complete enfranchisement of the negro race.

The people might have believed that General Sheridan or the President had erred in measuring the limits of executive or military authority; but they will never for a moment accept the suggestion that either of them has usurped power, or engaged in any undertaking hostile to the Constitution of the country.

Senators on the other side of the Chamber may excel General Sheridan and the President as interpreters of the Constitution, but none of them have done as much for its defense. It is fortunate that the judgment of partisan contemporaries is not always, nor indeed often, the judgment of history. We have had many great personages in American political history, and none of them were exempt from assaults; but those assaults when unjust, as usually they were unjust, have never darkened the character nor dimmed the record of the nation's benefactors. The language of eulogy is not wisely applied to the living, but what was said of Washington and Jefferson and what they in truth were and are, and what was said of Jackson and Lincoln and what they in truth were and are, should at least moderate our opinions and temper the expression of them concerning men who are to take rank in history with the most illustrious characters that America has produced.

The Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] who was indeed the most fortunate of Senators in his knowledge of the events of the 4th of January at New Orleans, and in his ability to mete to the actors each his just share of responsibility, early the 5th of January introduced a resolution calling upon the President for information. The speech which he made at the moment and the more elaborate speech which he afterwards pronounced in the debate showed that he did not seek information for himself, as his opinions were already formed. The same, I think, could with truth be said of his associates and supporters who took part in the debate of the first week. Nor was there anxiety manifested that the information should be given without delay. The resolution was peremptory, as though the President were our servant or agent. The Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] proposed to recognize the constitutional discretion of the President by inserting the words usually employed by the Senate.

The Senator from Ohio admitted, I think, although not in words so explicit as he often commands, that the form was not essential—that the President could reply or refuse, as his judgment might dictate.

And this unquestionably is the truth. The Constitution has given to the President power in his discretion to make communications to Congress upon public affairs from time to time, but no authority is given to either House to call upon him, and much less is there authority in the Constitution, or derived from usage, by which the Senate can make a peremptory demand upon the President for information. Therefore the form of the resolution did not concern the President at all. His power and his duty were the same in one case as in the other. But the form did concern the Senate. It concerned the country; it concerned the proper ordering of the public business; and, above all, it concerned the constitutional relations and rights of co-ordinate branches of the Government.

The resolution as offered, an amendment having been proposed and a controversial discussion having arisen thereon, became in fact a proposition to subordinate the executive to the legislative branch of the Government, and in so far it was an assault upon the Constitution itself. It is safe to say that there was not an hour during the four days of debate when the majority of the Senate would not have passed the resolution if the mover had accepted the amendment.

But by the force of the discussion the amendment ceased to be one of form merely, and its adoption became a necessity as defining the line between the rights of the Senate and the constitutional powers of the President.

Thus for a week, in the absence of the facts, the debate went on. Thus for a week, without having the facts before us, the President and the Lieutenant-General of the Army, whose names are as certainly historical as any in our annals, were not only denounced but condemned by the leaders of the opposition in this Chamber. Thus, and without evidence, were distinguished, patriotic, and successful officers of the Army of the Union held up to the execration of the country. In the other House a bill to abolish the office of Lieutenant-General was introduced for the purpose of striking the name of General Sheridan in disgrace from the rolls of the Army. The country, and especially the veteran soldiers of the Army of the Union, will notice these attempts to strike down a hero whose courage and conduct contributed always and largely to the success of our cause. Passion is of the moment; the spirit and the principles of justice are immortal. These days of injustice and the passions of these days are passing away. The country will accept the statements of General Sheridan and the message of the President, and hold them officially and personally in higher estimation than ever before.

In times of public peril men in authority must meet and check the peril by every constitutional means. There is, there can be, no higher public duty, and the neglect of this duty in times of public danger is the chiefest of political crimes. Remember how humiliating, how ignominious the course of affairs, how terrible the results, when Buchanan sat in the executive chair, and without resistance permitted the dismemberment of the Union and the overthrow of the Constitution which he had sworn to support. These days are only less serious and threatening than were those; and were such a man as Buchanan President, or were the President disposed to leave the South to the control of the white race, the Government would be overthrown before the close of the present term. Whenever the Administration at Washington shall be in sympathy with the unsubdued and rebellious element of the South, that element being in extent and power what it now is, the Government of the country will be easily destroyed.

That the nation is now in great peril I cannot doubt; but if the peril were less serious there might be less hope of our final escape. If the country shall realize this peril, the peril itself will then be averted. But evils and dangers are not averted by closing our eyes to them, and the tendency, the unmistakable tendency of public opinion and of public affairs, is to place the administration of the Government in the hands of those who are fresh from the contest for its destruction. This attempt to blacken the character of the President and to destroy the power and drive from office the Lieutenant-General of the Army are movements in harmony with the plans of those who seek the ruin of the Government. Thus it appears that the events at New Orleans are an important chapter in the history of the rebellion. Thus are the events at New Orleans connected with the rebellion, and thus do they foreshow the danger to which the country is exposed.

In 1866 or 1867 General George H. Thomas testified that there was a secret organization extending over the whole South whose purpose was the dissolution of the Union or the destruction of the Government, while the forms of union were allowed to exist. Although he then commanded the Department of the Tennessee, and although his means of information were superior to those of any other person, the statement seemed so improbable that no heed was given to it even by the committee before which the statement was made.

Of the truth of those statements there is now no doubt. General Thomas was a southern man, but his devotion to his country knew no limits, and he gave himself to her defense without reserve. He possessed the three great qualities of courage, patriotism, and integrity, and it is in vain to inquire in which he most excelled. As his statements were supported by additional evidence from time to time, the leaders of the South and their allies in the North strenuously asserted that the whole was a fabrication; but when the existence of the organization could no longer be denied, its innocent character was asserted as universally and with the same assumed confidence.

An extraordinary and not agreeable side of human character is exposed by the testimony of men of influence in the South who were members of a secret organization, whose purposes, as they declared, were entirely innocent.

At length in 1872 the true character of the organization, its purposes, its crimes, were disclosed to the country. Some of its leaders in murderous undertakings and many of its dupes were arrested and punished; but its leaders in council, they who were most guilty, escaped.

It truth the White League of 1875 is, in the knowledge we possess of its character, in the assertions of innocence made by its members and defenders, in no important particular different from the Ku-Klux organization of 1871; and I anticipate that its career, history, and the exposure of its crimes will render the evidence of its identity complete and conclusive.

Confidence cannot be placed in the statements of those who pass for honorable men; hence they who seek the truth are quite likely to be deceived, and hence the country will wisely wait for a full disclosure of the character of the White League before accepting as final the opinion of a committee that has trusted, manifestly, to a superficial examination of the subject.

Men upon the ground, who are members of the organization, will not expose its character, whether it be innocent or criminal; those who are not members of the organization have no trustworthy knowledge, and usually they dare not give voice to their suspicions.

The testimony taken by the committee on the Ku-Klux organization in 1871 illustrates the point I am now considering, and I refer for our instruction to the examination of J. B. Gordon, of Georgia, made in July of that year, recorded in the first volume of the testimony taken upon the existence and character of the Ku-Klux order in Georgia, pages 321, 322 and 323.

After a lengthy examination this simple question was put to the witness:

Q. Was there a chief of the whole order in the State?

A. Well, sir, such a thing was talked about; I do not know that the organization was ever perfected. Such a thing was talked about for the purpose of keeping down any general movement on the part of the negroes; but I do not think it was found necessary. We had no lodges, councils, nor anything of that sort.

This answer seems explicit, but the record shows that after two hundred and eighty-eight questions had been put and answered, all relating to the nature of the organization, the committee return to the charge in this manner:

Q. What office did you hold in it, if any?

A. I did not hold any office. I was spoken to in regard to holding an office, but I never held any. The organization never was perfected, as I have already stated.

Q. In regard to holding what office were you spoken to?

A. I do not know that it is necessary to answer that question unless you insist upon it.

Q. I insist upon an answer.

A. I was spoken to as the chief of the State. I said very emphatically that upon that line I could be killed on if it was necessary. But the organization never was perfected, and I never heard anything more about it after that time.

In presence of this record who can say that in the search for truth upon this subject the talk of the town, the casual or even formal statements of citizens to committees, the testimony of travelers, the letters of correspondents, whether for a private eye or the public ear, are, one or all, of any value whatever? The time will come when members of the White League through fear of exposure and punishment, or moved by an uneasy conscience, will make the secrets of the order public. What we now know is that the order exists in Louisiana, and we know of no other order in Louisiana capable of doing what has been done by organized force in that State and in the neighboring State of Mississippi.

When the friends of peace, order, and justice complain that murders are frequent in Louisiana they are met by the counter assertion that murders occur elsewhere, in Indiana and Massachusetts. This we are compelled to admit; and immediately those who deny the existence of the White League, or assert its innocence, or excuse and defend its proceedings, assume that they have gained their cause—that equality in crime in some sense absolves the criminals.

Murder is the greatest of crimes, and as a legal offense it is always the same; but as an offense against society, against the State, it has many degrees of turpitude.

Murders which are the result of the fiery passions directed against a real or supposed offender are not usually repeated even if the murderers go unpunished. Society is shocked, the example is pernicious, but the cause or the occasion of the crime has disappeared with its commission. In other countries, and perhaps occasionally in this, desperate men have combined for purposes of robbery and plunder, and accepted murder as a means to the end. Such men justly have been called banditti. But the sphere in which banditti operate is a limited one. Their victims are drawn from a small class of society, and from a class, the wealthy, which always and everywhere has the largest influence in the State, and from its resources is better able than other classes to provide for its own defense.

The banditti of Italy would be shocked by a truthful narrative of the crimes of the Ku-Klux in America; but in Italy there was none to excuse or defend the crimes of the banditti. I speak now of the Ku-Klux, because its organization and character are fully known; but I do not doubt that the organization discovered by General Thomas in 1866 and 1867 and the White League of 1874 and 1875 are identical with it.

If the Ku-Klux had not existed in the South, if it had not included many leading men of the South, if it had not made murder an engine in politics, if it had not overawed the well-disposed white people of the South, if it had not oppressed the poor, if it had not robbed, maltreated, maimed, and committed murder without specific personal hate but in obedience to a law of its organization, it would be cruel injustice to suggest or imagine the existence of such an order at this time.

But the order of the Ku-Klux having been shown to exist in 1872 it remains for us to inquire whether it now exists under another name. Present facts are therefore to be considered.

The cause or the occasion which gave rise to the organization remains. There are still loyal people in the South, most of them negroes and freedmen, acting politically with the republican party of the country. The visitations of the Ku-Klux were confined to them, they were the only sufferers, and therefore the inference is natural that their extermination as a political power was the object of the order. In Tennessee, North Carolina, and Georgia that object has been attained. In South Carolina the undertaking may for the moment be considered hopeless. In Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas, and Louisiana the negroes are a political power even now; and it is wise to consider whether the successes of the Ku-Klux in North Carolina, Tennessee, and Georgia have strengthened or impaired the purposes of the men by whom those successes were achieved.

Secondly. The number of murders committed in Louisiana shows that they were the act of an organization, inasmuch as it is impossible to conceive of a society moving by the force of its own impulses, however criminal, in which the daily homicides without authority of law, using the mild language and gentle rhetoric of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] average one to a million of people. Indeed, such a fact, if in the end sustained by proof, would be more discouraging than the existence and power of the Ku-Klux as made known to us. This organization at most includes only a small minority of the white people. The majority are for the time indifferent or overawed, but they are not positively criminal. If, however, these murders are the result of unregulated passions developed in individuals without concert, and perpetrated without punishment or the fear of punishment, then indeed we are forced to the conclusion that society in Louisiana is wholly criminal. This conclusion I reject, this conclusion the country must reject, and the alternative of the existence of a criminal political organization alone remains.

Thirdly. The events in Louisiana on the 14th of September and the 4th of January concur in support of the position I have taken. What otherwise meant the purchase of arms in great numbers previous to the 14th of September? What otherwise meant the robbery of the public arsenal? What otherwise meant the presence of twenty-five men in the hall of the house of representatives at the hour of meeting each with a badge as assistant sergeant-at-arms hidden beneath his over garments? Thus independently of direct proof is the existence of the order shown and its purposes sufficiently indicated.

Murders of passion affect the peace, the well-ordering of society; but they do not touch the source of its life. Combinations for robbery and plunder with the design to commit murder as an incident or as a means are more dangerous to the public peace, and the criminals are justly considered the enemies of the human race; but even they do not attempt through their criminal acts the destruction of the state itself. It is the essence of a republican government that the citizens shall have entire freedom of thought and action in political affairs. The least restraint upon the humblest citizen as upon the highest is an offense to the body-politic. What, then, shall be said of an order, and how shall it be characterized, that by intimidation, maiming, stealthy murder, and open assassination seeks to obtain power for a class; of an order that seeks through these means to change the character of the government by corrupting it at its source? Thus with them the chiefest of personal and social crimes are also the chiefest of political crimes.

As murder for the destruction of the state is a higher, a grosser crime than murder which is the result of personal passion; and as organizations which propose murder as a means of changing, overthrowing, or corrupting the government at its source are fouler than those which contemplate murder as a possible means of robbery and plunder, so the deeds which have been committed in the South by the Ku-Klux and kindred organizations must ever be denounced as the basest and most dangerous of the crimes recorded in the annals of mankind. Nor is there any excuse in the suggestion or statement that the members of this organization make no war upon the Government of the United States. They make war upon citizens of the United States and they make war upon the States which are integral parts of the United States.

They know the power of the States, and we, too, know the power of the States. These same men organized the rebellion of 1861 through the existence and power of the rebel States; and one of our chief means of suppressing the rebellion was found in the existence and power of the loyal States.

Do we need further instruction upon this point? Is not the concerted attempt of the rebel leaders to place every Southern State in rebel hands a warning to the people of the North? Their policy is plain, their course is clear. First, either by fraud or violence, they secure control of those States in the South which, if left to themselves, would be republican; and then within the National Government they use its power for their own purposes, or failing in that they again attempt its overthrow.

Within the Government they can effectually undermine and ultimately destroy it. A government without credit is contemptible in peace and wholly powerless in war. At the commencement of the rebellion our debt did not exceed a hundred million dollars, but we are now embarrassed by a debt of two thousand million. An administration in the hands of the South could easily augment this debt to twenty-five hundred or three thousand million dollars in four years. Meager sources of revenue, negligence and profligacy in its collection, extravagance of expenditure, the return of the cotton tax, and the payment of cotton claims and war claims would work out the problem within a single presidential term. To every country a vast public debt is a public calamity to be tolerated and endured only as pestilence and famine are tolerated and endured; but to our vast public debt is now a public national danger. The great error of our politics, both as regards the continuance of power in the hands of the republican party and the preservation of the Government itself, was the reduction of our revenues.

But this unlawful conspiracy in the South, now apparently directed against negroes and the much-abused class of northern men known as carpet-baggers, is in truth a conspiracy against the Government of the United States; and it is not too much to say that it has in its hands the means of accomplishing its object unless the North again offers the united resistance it offered during the war. The democratic party, which challenges the judgment of the country for support, is in its organization a tyrant. It never respects individual opinion; it never recognizes individual will. It is indifferent to personal wrongs; it questions, it disputes, it denies the authority of the General Government, but it admits, adorns, dignifies, crowns local rule. This is the ethical, the political basis on which the conspiracy in the South rests, and resting on this basis it has the power to destroy the National Government. Can you offer to the enemies of the negro, to the enemies of the National Government, to the friends of secession a more acceptable basis in politics than this? And this is what the democratic party offers.

The events in Louisiana as they are connected with and relate to the general conspiracy, are important to the country; indeed they are important to so many of the human race as are struggling in other lands for equality of rights; but we are unnecessarily disturbed if the question is only whether Kellogg is rightfully and lawfully governor of that State, or whether five men by an error as to the scope of military authority were unlawfully removed from the hall of its house of representatives. These are grave questions, but they do not touch the vital interests of the country. Hoffman was two years governor of New York through a fraud upon the ballot-box, and yet the event, though a reproach to our institutions, did not disturb the business or check the growth of the country or in any large sense affect the personal or political rights of the people. The military power has sometimes exceeded its authority, but not on this occasion, and the act of the military at New Orleans, however judged, has in it no quality of danger to the Republic. Are these minor events magnified that the serious dangers to which the country is exposed may be kept from sight? If, however, I deal with those events in detail, I so deal with them in deference to a public opinion which is due to a temporary excitement and destined soon to give place to a healthier tone, and to a desire as strong as any of which my nature is capable to contribute something to a thorough union of sentiment and action in the North on which alone the well-being, the safety of the country depends.

The fourth section of the fourth article of the Constitution of the United States was designed to secure to every State a republican form of government, to protect it against invasion, and upon application of the executive when the Legislature cannot be convened, against domestic violence.

The duty and power of the United States to secure to each State a republican form of government and to protect it against invasion do not depend upon the action of the people of the State or its authorities. The duty is imposed upon the Government of the United States; the power is there, the discretion is there; but the duty and the power of the United States to protect a State against domestic violence depend for exercise upon the authorities of the State. It is to be observed that it is the executive that is named as the authority that may call upon the United States for aid against domestic violence when the Legislature cannot be convened.

Usually the executive is the governor whose right to the office is not disputed; but the Constitution has so carefully provided for the peace of the States that a call from the executive, whether governor or other officer, whether acting under an authority recognized by everybody or disputed by everybody, is, without inquiry as to the legality of his title, to be heard and obeyed by the President. Were it otherwise the chief means of promoting and continuing domestic violence in a State would be found in the denial of the right of the executive to his office. Were it otherwise the President would be compelled to inquire for himself into the title of the executive, and this independently it might be of legislative, executive, and judicial proceedings within the State; this inquiry to be made, it might be, while the State was given over to domestic violence, its constituted authorities fugitives, and the evidences of their titles in the hands of their enemies. Therefore it follows that whenever a call is made upon the President for the aid of the United States to suppress domestic violence in a given State and the President is satisfied that the person making the call is in the possession of the executive office and in the exercise of the functions of the executive office in that State, he must obey the call for aid without further inquiry.

William Pitt Kellogg was in possession of the executive office of Louisiana and in the exercise of the functions of that office in September last, and he had been so in office and so exercising the functions thereof from January, 1873, and therefore, without inquiry as to his legal right to such office, the President was bound to obey his call for aid to suppress domestic violence in that State. Thus it appears that the military force of the United States was lawfully in Louisiana the 14th of September last for the suppression of domestic violence; and so being there they were entitled to the legal and constitutional support of the civil authorities and to the moral support of the people of the United States.

The troops being lawfully in Louisiana for a lawful purpose, how long could they lawfully continue there? Clearly until one of three events should occur. Until the executive of the State should signify to the President that the troops might be withdrawn, or until the President upon his own judgment should withdraw the forces, or until the Legislature of the State should have convened and a reasonable time been allowed for legislative action upon the subject. Neither of these events had occurred on the 4th of January last, and therefore the troops were lawfully in Louisiana and in Louisiana for a lawful purpose on the day when the acts complained of were committed.

But this part of my argument does not rest alone upon the formula which I have presented, although this formula is a sufficient legal basis for all that was afterward done.

There does not appear to have been a moment of time when the spirit of domestic violence did not exist in Louisiana, and indeed the danger of outbreak appears to have been constant and imminent. While I omit all specific reference to the reports of Major Merrill and other officers in command in the interior of the State, I refer to the dispatches of Major-General Emory, commanding the Department of the Gulf. The 1st of October, he informs the President that he is unable to recover the arms that had been stolen from the arsenal, and that Admiral Mullany informs him that he will leave two ships at New Orleans for the preservation of peace in the city. His dispatch of the 5th of the same month states that bodies of armed men, from twenty to sixty in each body, meet in the street at night for the purpose of drill, and that armed bodies of men, whose numbers are not known, meet in the league-rooms.

In his dispatch of the 7th of October he says that he thinks the white-leaguers would like to be assailed, and that they have at least six thousand well-instructed men, accustomed to arms; and on the 21st of October he says that he shall bring the troops from Jackson barracks to keep the peace and prevent possible conflict between armed bodies.

In his dispatch of the 16th of December he informs the President that disturbance is impending and may happen at any time.

These facts not only show that a necessity existed for retaining the troops in Louisiana, but they also show the character and power of the conspiracy in that State.

But the troops being lawfully in the State, and their legal right to remain there having been established, I next inquire who had authority to designate the objects and subjects of military action or surveillance? The President was not there, and it is not in the nature of his office that he should have been there; and therefore in a constitutional sense he cannot be made personally or officially responsible for the military operations except so far as he may have given definite orders to the officers in command. The President not only had not given specific orders, but he did not even know that any occasion for action would arise. Therefore, whether the acts of the military on the 4th of January were lawful or unlawful, they were acts for which the President was not responsible either in his personal or his official character. What he had done and all he had done was in strict conformity to law. And now and thus, upon the facts and by the force of reason and of law, all the accusations made against the President fail; and as a consequence all the denunciation heaped upon him is shown to have been the voice of personal and party hate.

Within the limits of a State the executive is the chief magistrate, and upon him more than upon any other magistrate rests the duty of keeping the peace; and this is especially true in times of domestic violence. The officer in command of the United States forces, under the circumstances existing in Louisiana, might, upon his own motion, suppress acts of violence taking place before his eyes; but usually he would wait for the authority and direction of the executive of the State, and this authority must be a sufficient justification for the commander, unless without inquiry the case was clearly such as to leave no reasonable doubt that intervention would be a misapplication of military power. Hence it follows that the authority of Kellogg is a sufficient legal justification to General De Trobriand for the removal of the five men from the hall of the house of representatives.

My argument thus far has proceeded upon the proposition that Kellogg was in possession of the executive office of the State of Louisiana and exercising the functions of that office; and it follows that the United States were bound to protect the people against domestic violence, whether his title to the office was recognized by everybody or disputed by everybody.

Whoever admits that the military forces of the United States were lawfully sent to Louisiana in September last upon the call of Kellogg must accept as legal conclusions therefrom all that occurred in that State which is the subject of our present inquiry, including the removal of the five men from the hall of the house of representatives, and excluding only the appearance of General De Trobriand in that hall upon the request of Mr. Wiltz. There was no house of representatives, and of course no speaker; but if there had been a legally-organized house and Mr. Wiltz had been its speaker, he would have had no right to call upon the military force of the United States for any service or duty.

The United States under the Constitution can know only the executive of a State; and in a case of domestic violence in a legally-organized house of representatives neither the house nor the speaker could obtain the aid of United States troops except through the agency of some person exercising the functions of a magistrate, and more properly through the agency of the person exercising the functions of chief magistrate. General De Trobriand may be justified by the fact that upon his own motion he suppressed domestic violence of which he then had personal knowledge, but the request of Mr. Wiltz furnishes no justification whatsoever.

The provisions in our State constitutions and in the national Constitution for frequent elections were designed to secure the country against revolutions of force. In every government questions arise touching the title of rulers to the places they occupy; in America these questions are not more frequent than in other countries, but in America we have a constitutional mode of deciding them.

Should the right of the person in possession of the office of governor of Ohio be drawn into controversy and should the supreme court of the State decide that he was entitled to his office, Congress and the country would accept the opinion as final and conclusive, even though the decision rested upon a technicality, and even though the facts of public fame were such as to justify the belief that he did not receive a majority of the votes of the people. This is the demand, the necessity of constitutional government. Every question of which the law can take notice and does take notice must be settled. The court is the tribunal, the court of final jurisdiction is the ultimate tribunal.

If an appeal can be made to arms, if conspiracies can be formed for the purpose of overruling the decisions of the courts or thwarting their judgments, and especially if those conspiracies can find influential defenders, then the Government ceases to be a government of laws and becomes a government of men. But with us so checked and guarded are all the powers of government that even a corrupt or incompetent court can be brought to justice. Corrupt judges can be brought to the bar of the legislative department and there deprived of their places if found guilty of malfeasance or misfeasance in office. Do you say that these proceedings are too slow, the remedy too uncertain, the punishment too remote? My answer is that deliberation is the highest attribute of justice; and therefore delay grows with the gravity of the cause. Thirty years ago the public mind was as much concerned in the affairs of Rhode Island as it is now in the affairs of Louisiana, although the occasion for such concern was then much less than it now is.

Finally in the case of Rhode Island the voice of the court was heard and the clamor ceased.

If you ask me whether William Pitt Kellogg was duly elected governor of Louisiana by a majority of the votes of the people who voted for governor of that State in 1872, I answer that I do not know. Perhaps no one knows.

All the proceedings may have been voidable or even void for fraud and uncertainty. Does it follow therefore that Louisiana has no legal governor because neither you nor I can say whether any person was duly elected by a majority of the votes of the people? A person legally in an office holds that office not only de facto but de jure, even though an analysis of all the proceedings might show a wide departure from the forms required by law, or even an absence of the substance required by law. Upon a collateral question the right of Kellogg was considered by the supreme court of Louisiana. The majority of the committee of the Senate in referring to the case The State ex rel. P. H. Morgan vs. J. H. Kinnard, say:

The utmost that can be claimed for this decision is that the court recognizes the Kellogg government as a government de facto.

De facto is a term used to denote a thing actually existing or done; and inasmuch as it was then of public fame that Kellogg was in the office of governor, it needed no court to tell the people so much or so little as that he was de facto governor. If they said that and nothing more, then what they said was of no value whatever. It is a maxim that that is certain which can be made certain. The same court, in the case of State ex rel. Attorney-General vs. Wharton et als., (Louisiana Reports, volume 25, page 14), did find that of the two contesting returning boards one was a valid, that is, a legal board, and the other was not; and it is not only proved, but it is of public knowledge, that the board so declared to be legal did make return that William Pitt Kellogg was elected governor of Louisiana at the election held in November, 1872. Therefore the court did find that Kellogg was the lawful governor of Louisiana.

As these facts cannot be denied, we are met by the allegation that the acts of the returning board were fraudulent. If this were so there should be a legal remedy which those who consider themselves aggrieved are bound to pursue; but if there be no legal remedy, or if its pursuit be ineffectual, shall the disappointed resort to conspiracy and revolution, and shall conspiracy and revolution for such cause find defenders? These questions have a larger public interest than the question of Kellogg's right to the office he holds. A larger public interest because upon this pretext people in Louisiana have formed conspiracies and hatched rebellion, and such conspiracies and rebellion have been excused, palliated, and defended by the democratic party of the country.

It is the old controversy between a government of laws and a government of men. We have chosen a government of laws; the conspirators and their allies demand a government of men, whenever the administration of the law does not promote the purposes they seek. Nothing is better understood than that the administration of the law, even by able and pure magistrates, does not always meet the demands of justice and equity, and we know, too, that the administration of the law is not always in the hands of such magistrates. But we have chosen, and wisely chosen, a government of laws.

The experience of mankind shows that the evils of a government of laws, as far as these evils are the result of administration, steadily and visibly diminish; and the experience of mankind also shows that the evils of a government of men rapidly and fatally increase.

I now ask the indulgence of the Senate while I recall the events of the 4th of January in New Orleans. The statutes of Louisiana provide for a returning board, to whose custody, examination, and decision the votes given for members of the house of representatives should be submitted. Such a board, legal in its organization and character, assembled in New Orleans for the purpose of examining and passing upon the returns of votes for members of the house of representatives cast at the election held in November, 1874. That board acted. By its report one hundred and six persons were elected, and five seats were left vacant for the reason, as stated, that the board could not decide whether the claimants were entitled or not.

The names of the persons so returned as members were furnished to the secretary of state, and a list thereof was by him furnished to the clerk of the preceding house of representatives as required by the statutes, of which the following is a copy:

The statute that regulates this subject is the twenty-fourth section of the act of November 20, 1872, which declares in these words—

That it shall be the duty of the secretary of state to transmit to the clerk of the house of representatives and the secretary of the senate of the last General Assembly a list of the names of such persons as, according to the returns, shall have been elected to either branch of the General Assembly; and it shall be the duty of said clerk and secretary to place the names of the representatives and senators elect, so furnished, upon the roll of the House and of the Senate respectively; and those representatives and senators whose names are so placed by the clerk and secretary respectively, in accordance with the foregoing provision, and none other, shall be competent to organize the house of representatives or senate.

Nothing in this act shall be construed to conflict with article 34 of the constitution.

Article 34 of the constitution gave the usual authority to each house to judge of the election, qualification, and return of its members.

In presence of these facts and of this statute it is clear, if anything in logic or law be clear, that the one hundred and six persons returned by the returning board, whose names were borne on the roll made by the secretary of state and transmitted to the clerk of the last house of representatives, and none other, were competent to organize the house of representatives.

It is, however, maintained that five other persons who are not returned by the board, and whose names were not on the list, were entitled to act, and upon two grounds:

First. That they were improperly and fraudulently rejected by the returning board.

Secondly. That the law of Louisiana for the organization of the house was invalid, and that the members-elect might organize in disregard of its provisions.

The first defense set up is a confession that the attempt of Wiltz and his friends to organize the house was a revolutionary proceeding, justified on the part of its defenders by the allegation that the returning board had failed to perform its duty. This defense needs no further discussion; at most, it is but another fact in the long catalogue of crimes in Louisiana, tending to show that it is the policy of the enemies of equal rights to use the forms of government whenever they can be made subservient to their purposes, and to trample them in the dust whenever they become an obstacle in the way of the execution of their revolutionary undertakings.

The second ground of defense is equally desperate in its character.

What is a law? The expression of the will of the people through a constitutional channel and taking effect upon a subject within the constitutional domain of the law-making power. Who are the members-elect of a Legislative Assembly? They are only citizens having a right to enter upon the performance of certain duties. They are subject to the laws like other citizens; and the fact that when they are actual members of a legislative body they will possess certain powers, does not absolve them from the authority of the law while they are on the way to membership. The law of Louisiana prescribing the mode of organizing the house of representatives did not in any way affect the powers of a house when organized. The constitutional power of the house to judge of the election, qualifications, and returns of its members, of which so much has been said in this debate, did not commence until the organization was legally accomplished. There could be no conflict, as there could not be a moment of time when both the law and the constitutional provisions were operative. The power of the statute was exhausted the moment the house was competent to take notice of the constitutional provision,

More than thirty years ago the State of Massachusetts legislated upon the subject, and under the lead of a distinguished and recognized authority. I refer to Mr. Cushing, the author of the great work on parliamentary law.

In the year 1843 the Massachusetts house of representatives was so equally divided that several days were passed in the effort to elect a speaker. The circumstances of the trial caused much solicitude to thoughtful men of both parties, and in the year 1844 Mr. Cushing proposed a special committee to consider whether any legislation to provide for the organization of the house of representatives was necessary and practicable. It was my fortune to be upon the committee, of which Mr. Cushing was chairman. A bill was reported and passed which provided that the secretary of state should make a list of persons having certificates of election and furnish the same to the sergeant-at-arms of the last house of representatives. It was made the duty of the sergeant-at-arms to admit those persons and those persons only to the hall of the house whose names were upon the list. Further, it was made the duty of the eldest senior member whose name was borne upon the roll to call the house to order and to preside until a speaker should be chosen. The constitution of Massachusetts made no provision for such legislation, and it rested upon the inherent right of the people, through the legislative body, to direct the manner in which each succeeding house of representatives should be organized. The statute of 1844 remains in force, and I have not heard that any parliamentary, statute, or constitutional lawyer has called its validity in question. It differs in no essential respect from the statute of Louisiana; and as an exercise of power it differs not at all; nor do I hesitate to say that the statute of Louisiana would never have been challenged had it not been necessary to justify the revolutionary proceedings of the 4th of January.

Assuming that the validity of the laws of Louisiana is beyond any honorable controversy, it follows that the five men whose names were not upon the clerk's roll had no right to be in the hall, and that no one but the clerk had a right to preside at the election of speaker. In defiance of law the five men were there; in defiance of law another than the clerk did assume the place of presiding officer; in defiance of law another than the clerk did declare that Mr. Wiltz was chosen speaker; in defiance of law Mr. Wiltz assumed to be speaker; and thus in fine all the proceedings, from first to last, were in defiance of law. It is not pertinent to the question, nor does it furnish the slightest aid to those who defend these revolutionary proceedings, to say that the returning board had not decided that the five men were not elected. The returning board had not decided that they were elected, and only those who were declared elected by the returning board were entitled to admission to the hall.

Nor does it furnish aid to the defenders of these proceedings to say that the five men were afterward declared members by the body over which Wiltz assumed to preside. That body was not a house of representatives; and therefore it was not competent to pass upon any question. It had no legal character, although it had a character known to the laws. It was a mob, the fruit of a conspiracy consisting of fifty-two persons legally elected to the house of representatives, and five persons claiming to have been elected, but wholly without evidence to entitle them to take part in the organization. Being a mob, it had no rights; but being a mob, a great public right, the right to have the mob dispersed, was invoked, and for the time this right was paramount to all others. It had no character as a legislative body, it had no rights as a legislative body, and it could not demand protection as a legislative body. This unlawful assemblage presented itself to the magistrates in two aspects: First, as a disturbance of the public peace, such as might occur at a theater or circus, and therefore to be suppressed by any magistrate authorized to summon the posse comitatus, of which the military could lawfully form a part. Secondly, it presented itself as a body of men engaged in domestic violence. It clearly appears that those men were engaged in the attempt to organize the house of representatives by force and in violation of law. This is a mild presentation of the case. It was, in short, an attempt to seize the government of the State. Does such an act meet the demand made by the phrase "domestic violence," as used in the Constitution? Can it be doubted that an attempt to seize the government of a State, whether made by two men or two thousand men, is the most dangerous sort of domestic violence?

The troops being lawfully in the State, and for the protection of the State against domestic violence, it was the duty of the officer in command not only to have removed the five men, but to have removed all others who had conspired with them in their unlawful purposes.

Thus it is seen that the acts of the military forces were lawful, whether these men be regarded as ordinary disturbers of the public peace or as conspirators, as they really were, engaged in an act of domestic violence, against which the United States was bound to protect the State of Louisiana.

This, Mr. President, is a brief and a very imperfect statement of the legal aspect, or what seems to me the legal aspect, of affairs in Louisiana. I have dealt with these affairs to the extent that I have for the purpose of making some observations on the general character of these events, and to suggest what I think should be the policy of the country in reference to them. While I shall vote as I have opportunity to recognize the legal authority of Mr. Kellogg as governor of Louisiana, I know perfectly well that no recognition by this body, by Congress, by the President, by all combined, will have an important effect upon the condition of affairs in the South. If Mr. Pinchback shall be admitted to a seat here, it will have no considerable influence upon the great question which we are forced to consider.

I should be glad for one to accept as conclusive the condition of things in the South as presented this morning by the senior Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. RANSOM;] but it was my fortune to sit in the peace congress in 1861, fourteen years ago this month, and I there listened to speech after speech made by honest and I believe patriotic men from the border slave States, of which the speech made by the Senator from North Carolina to-day is only a reproduction. They were made by patriotic men, men devoted to the Union, and against civil war; but on the 1st day of March they left the hall of assembly in this city and in less than thirty days they were enveloped in the fires of civil war. I know very well that there are patriotic men on this floor who do not believe in the existence of any conspiracy or any purpose in the South hostile to this Government; but if I chose to analyze, as I might analyze, the speech made by the Senator from North Carolina this morning, we should observe elements of danger which, if not removed from the minds of the people of the South, will end in civil war. He said in reference to the negroes:

We have the kindest feelings toward them, and we treat them with Christian mercy.

That is all very well. He gives expression to the doctrines of humanity, of civilization, of Christianity. But there is a political question which the people of this country also consider important. If the Senator could make this Senate and this country believe that what he said was the sentiment of the people of the South, then there would be reason for hope. If he had gone further and said, "we treat these people justly, we recognize their political equality, they are men;" if he had not asserted the dominance of the white race, as though it were a divine right in the white race to rule races of a different color, then there would be some reason to believe that the troubles which we are considering were at an end; but so long as the spirit of political superiority remains among the white people of the South, so long will these evils and dangers continue to disturb the country.

I was not one of those who in 1865, 1866, 1867, and 1868, when the measures of reconstruction were considered and adopted, believed that peace, continuous, undisturbed peace, would follow. I knew that neither civil war nor the kindness and generosity with which those who had been engaged in civil war were received by the people of the North could change the character of eight millions of people. I knew that the rising generation would carry with them the ideas, the principles, and to a certain extent the purposes which they had inherited from their ancestors. If I could have dictated a policy it would have been as liberal a policy in administration toward the South, but it would have been a more reluctant policy as to the restoration of those States to the Union. As evidence of it, I may say that I was one of twelve men only in the House of Representatives who voted against the admission of Tennessee in July, 1866. I then believed that the time had not come when with safety any of those States could be restored to power in the Union. But they are in the Union, and the question before us is a grave one: What is to be done?

I listened in the early part of this debate to the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. SCHURZ.] It is not often in his speeches that he gives us specific advice on questions of policy. On that occasion he did proffer one bit of advice as a remedy for the existing condition of things. He proposed that one-half of the colored people of the South should join the democratic party and vote the democratic ticket. That was a specific, clear bit of advice; but, for one, I cannot indorse it. Would the Senator have advised his countrymen, citizens of the United States, in 1854 and 1855, when the know-nothing excitement was at its height and the members of the order were taking possession of State after State with the design of wielding power in the legislation of this nation against all citizens of foreign birth—would he have advised German citizens in this country to have joined, one-half of them, the know-nothing party? When we were fighting the battles of the Union from 1861 to 1865, would he have dared as an American citizen, as a soldier in the cause of the Union, to have advised that half of the soldiers of the Republic should join the forces of the rebellion? If in the first case he had given such advice he would have been a traitor to the cause of liberty in two countries—his own and this. If in the second case he had given that advice, he would have been a traitor to the cause of liberty and of constitutional right in this country; and such advice given now to the negro population of the South is treachery not only to the negro race but to the rights of man.

It is the fortune of every progressive party, and especially of every organization that seeks to advance the interests of the human race, to find men from time to time abandoning the party. Every such movement is in itself revolutionary. It attempts to overturn the existing order of things and to provide something better. Therefore there are men who fall by the way; there are men who abandon party organizations in the belief, no doubt, (they always make the assertion, and no doubt in the belief,) that the party is not good enough for them. But I have observed, and with pain, during a third of a century, that every man, whether high or low, who has abandoned the cause of human rights has fallen under the power of the people.

A third of a century ago Mr. Webster was at the height of his fame. His mental powers were undiminished. He stood among Americans the first, the illustrious model on which his own great sentence was formed: "A superior and commanding human intellect, a truly great man; when Heaven vouchsafes, so rare a gift is not a temporary flame burning brightly for awhile and then giving place to darkness. It is rather a spark of fervent heat, as well as radiant light, with power to enkindle the common mass of human mind, so that when it glimmers in its own decay and finally goes out in death, no night follows, but it leaves the world all light, all on fire, from the potent contact of its own spirit."

The man who wrote those great words was himself the most illustrious example that America has furnished that there was a being of earth to whom those words could with justice be applied. In eighteen days it will be a quarter of a century since that man spoke in the Senate Chamber under peculiar circumstances. He had stood for thirty years the defender of two great American ideas. In 1820 on Plymouth Rock he had anathematized slavery as it had never been before on this continent anathematized. Twelve years later he had defended the Constitution and the Union in a speech which has no parallel; but there came a day, the 7th of March, 1850, when the ways parted, when it seemed no longer possible to defend liberty in its broadest sense and to defend the Union and the Constitution. This is his defense. The ways parted, and it seemed no longer possible to stand for liberty and for the Union. He made his choice—a fatal choice—but he had to him then presented the gravest personal and political question that could be presented to a public man. He had, with his associates, struggled for thirty years to maintain the Constitution and the liberty of the people under it. In the rock and tumult of those times he felt that concessions must be made; he yielded and fell. Liberty did not fall; the people of this country recovered from the shock. They closed their ranks as when one dies, and like a drop in the ocean disappears. The people were true to liberty, and they declared that the Constitution and liberty should stand together. Other men in this contest, in my opinion less important men, have had the courage, in the presence of such an example and such a fate, to abandon justice as the foundation on which human liberty and human rights can rest. They, too, have fallen—fallen justly. The law and the fate are the same now. They will be the same hereafter. There are four millions of people on this continent whom we have brought out of slavery. We are bound to them by many cords. For one I hope to be preserved from the thought of ever deserting them. I say nothing personal to myself, nothing of my party. I have fought as well as I was able to do in the minority. I can do that again. If the people of this country in 1876, or at any other time, shall falter in their devotion to human rights, to the rights of American citizens, to the establishment of liberty in America, of liberty as liberty, and not liberty for white people only, I hope to remain firm. If the country is not true in 1876 or in 1880, it still will return to its duty; and I say to the men of the South, in all kindness, in all sincerity, the way to peace is the path of justice—political justice, political equality, the recognition of the black man as your equal politically, and accept the consequences in good faith.

With power for the time in the hands of the friends of the negro, I am for the constant assertion of that power within the limits of the Constitution; and first and now, such legislation by the authority of the Constitution, including the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments, as will give to every citizen his rights, not as a citizen of a State merely, but as a citizen of the United States.

The fourteenth amendment to the Constitution reads thus:

All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside.

"Citizens of the United States, and of the State wherein they reside." First citizens of the United States, and then citizens of the State wherein they reside. Now mark what follows:

No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States.

These words were chosen with care. The Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] remembers with what care the committee of fifteen, of which he was a member, selected those words. What is the first immunity of a citizen of the United States? The first immunity is that he is a citizen of the State where he resides, and therefore the Government of the United States is clothed with the power of dealing with its own citizens, to enter, by its law and by the power of its law, into every State, and secure to every citizen there his rights as a citizen of that State. If that be not so, then this constitutional amendment is a failure.

Mr. EDMUNDS. A fraud.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I would not have said it was "a fraud." The Senator from Vermont says it was a fraud if it be not as I construe it. The Supreme Court of the United States in the Slaughter-house case has taken a different view, and what do you say of the Supreme Court if it has taken a different view? I respect the courts, the decisions of courts, the mandates of courts; but then the law as laid down by the Supreme Court will not stand the test of time and scrutiny. That decision is contrary to English precedents from the act of settlement in 1663 to this time. I cannot believe that anywhere else there is a tribunal administering English law that would recognize a monopoly for business purposes covering eleven hundred square miles of territory and maintain it as a police regulation. I cannot but believe that in future times there will be a court which will say that it is the duty of the Government of the United States to protect its own citizens in the several States in all their rights as citizens of the several States.

I say, then, that the power of protection under this amendment is sufficient for such legislation as may be necessary to secure the black people and the white people of the South in all their rights; but we are to bear in mind, sir, that the mere existence of a constitutional provision is of no considerable value to the people unless it is enforced by law, and unless the law is enforced by magistrates who are willing that the law shall be executed.

But I come, sir, to consider, not because I am sure that there is a case to-day which justifies the application of the power that I invoke, but because I apprehend that the time may be near when we shall be compelled to consider the fourth section of the fourth article in reference to the power and the duty of the United States to guarantee to every State a republican form of government. I am of course familiar with the argument or the statement that that means only that the United States shall guarantee to each State a paper constitution which is republican in form, which does not provide for a hereditary monarchy or an order of nobility, and that there is no authority to inquire into the processes by which the government is organized and the powers by which it is kept in motion. If so, then that provision of the Constitution is a nullity; but I believe that it means that we are to inquire into the established method of expression or practice in the States under the form of government which they have.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And you are right.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I am glad now that for the first time in my life I have reached a conclusion upon a legal point that corresponds with that of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] but I should submit to him if it were otherwise even now.

The established method of expression of the popular will in a State, if that be the reading of the phrase "republican form of government," then the United States has the power to do what is necessary to be done in all these cases where there is any occasion for the application of the power.

The mere fact that somebody gets an office in a State, whether it be Mr. Hoffman in New York or Mr. Kellogg in Louisiana, by fraudulent practices, does not furnish a case for awakening the sleeping power of the Constitution; but when we find that through a period of years and as a general fact in reference to the affairs of that State fraud, corruption, and misconduct taint the proceedings generally or wholly, thus defeating the right of the people to enjoy the benefits of a republican form of government, then, I say, the time has come when the Government of the United States under this guarantee clause will find it its duty to disestablish a State and establish some form of government which shall secure to the people their rights.

Is Louisiana in this condition to-day?

I announce this doctrine now and here, because I have foreseen that if this work of disintegration, fomented by conspiracy and rebellion in the South, goes on, the time will come when the Government of the United States will be compelled to choose between the duty of protecting its citizens under this provision of the Constitution and accepting the fact that there are States in this Union whose citizens cannot be protected by the power of the United States.

I have said, sir, that I was not of those who expected that the difficulties in the South would be healed by the restoration of those States to the Union. Therefore I am not disappointed in the fact that there is disorder, confusion, fraud, domestic violence in the South; and I wish to say to the representative men of the South that their duty and their policy are in the same direction. Do justly by the emancipated men of the South. It is in vain that you tell us that northern men may emigrate to the South and make money. We can make money elsewhere. The world is large. My own State has citizens who have made homes in China, on the coast of Africa, in Madagascar, the Sandwich Islands; every continent and every sea they have visited, and upon every continent and upon every island they have made homes. It is not necessary that you give us security that we shall be well treated if we go South and may make money. We want something better. There is something that, as patriots interested in the welfare of the country, we prize more; and that is justice to our fellow-men who are with you. Promises to treat us well are no compensation for wrong done to our brethren who cannot find homes elsewhere.

But, sir, what is the ultimate and last and complete remedy for these wrongs? It is in educating the people of the South, black and white, upon the idea of human equality. So long as men believe there is a difference of race and that that difference affects political rights, so long this question of caste and condition will arise, so long will there be disorder and confusion in the State. The rising generation in the South is to be educated. And now I come to say what I know will be more disagreeable than anything I have said.

When the children of the white people and the black people are compelled to go into the same schools, sit upon the same forms, accept the same teachers, study the same books, become rivals in education and in the pursuits of life, you will have a community that will believe practically in human equality. Therefore it is that that provision which has been stricken out of the civil-rights bill in the other House is of more consequence than all the other provisions of that bill and than all the provisions which the ingenuity of all the lawyers in both Houses could frame with reference to the future peace and prosperity of the South.

In that provision of compulsory common-school education, supported by universal taxation, I see the dawn of a day that will surely come when there will be peace in the South upon the accepted ideas of human equality—just human equality. Hotels, circuses, theaters, railway cars, open their doors and gates to all comers who can pay for what they desire. Money will be the passport that will carry black as well as white into all these institutions and to the enjoyment of all these privileges; but the common school, if shut by law or custom against one class of people, necessarily makes distinctions in society. These distinctions grow and increase, and all the ills of which we now complain will be augmented by the increase of population in the South. Sir, the policy I propose is due not to the negro race merely; it is due to the white race; it is due to the country.

Thus, Mr. President, I have treated the subject upon the idea that those questions which apparently now concern us, which affect the judgment of the Senate, which disturb the peace of the country, are only symptoms of a disorder, evidences of an evil. That disorder or evil can be controlled for the time being by the power of the Government. I have sought in the Constitution to find the source from which the power can emanate; but the relief, the permanent relief is in a system of public instruction for the South which shall know no distinction of race or color.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I have listened with great attention to the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL,] and I am sincere when I say that the large population of the South, of the West, and of the Southwest desire peace upon the basis of the Constitution as much as he does; but the honorable Senator from Massachusetts is entirely mistaken in attributing all the disorders to the South. Sir, the Senator seems to think that all our present perils which now threaten constitutional government are attributable to the southern people. It is not so, and the suggestion does them great injustice. The Senator looks to one side of this question. He referred to Daniel Webster and to his splendid ability; he might have added his patriotic devotion to constitutional liberty. But does the Senator remember that even Daniel Webster, great as he was, was hissed in Faneuil Hall for standing by the Constitution and for exhorting obedience to its exactions? Let me tell the Senator to-day, let me tell the Senate, let me tell the entire country, that if we desire peace and prosperity, if we desire to see turbulence and violation of law put down, we must rebuke sectional intemperance at the North as well as in the South. There is a sectional fanaticism still nascent in the North more formidable, more mischievous, than any in the South. This spirit exists in the Senator's own State to-day, although he seems unconscious of it. It is a bigoted hatred against the South which nothing can propitiate. The South has already given to the colored race schools and all those rights which the Constitution accords them. They will never accord to them mixed schools so long as their manhood is left to them.

But, Mr. President, if every privilege was yielded which the Senator has asked it would not satisfy the sectional hatred which is still lurking in the breasts of some of the fanatics in Massachusetts, which would deny to the Southern people any rights under the Constitution. The Senator says Mr. Webster went down. Yes, sir; and his great crime was, the enforcement of the Constitution and the equal rights of all sections under it. That fanaticism, now that slavery is extinct, still pours out its hatred against the downtrodden, brave people of the South. It desires no justice to them. As a proof of this statement, sir, I read the utterances at a meeting which took place in the city of Boston but a week ago. A discussion occurred in an assemblage of Methodist preachers. One of these professed servants of Him whom the Scriptures say was all love gave vent to his feelings, which manifest as much of the evil one as any performance of civilized people ever does within or without the bounds of Christian civilization. The speaker to whom I allude in that meeting—composed of the professed ambassadors of the Lord Jesus Christ—was Rev. B. I. Ives. I never heard of this man before, and if he is truly reported by a religious paper from which I read I never desire to see or to know him. In proof of this fanatical spirit of some of the Senator's constituents let him listen to what the Right Reverend Mr. Ives said—an utterance which disgraces civilization, which disgraces humanity, which libels Christianity, but a sentiment which I grieve to say was loudly applauded in the city of Boston. Mr. President, had such a sentiment been uttered in Kentucky, or in any southern State, I venture to say that it would have met with the scorn and detestation which it so richly merits. Such a sentiment would have been reprobated everywhere by republicans and democrats alike in Kentucky. It should be denounced everywhere. I now quote the language of this man:

We are undertaking now to coax the devil out of the miserable whelps down South, when nothing but strychnine and cannon ought to be used; and that we rather agree with Phil. Sheridan's declaration during the war, that if he owned hell and Texas, he would lease out Texas and live in the other place, and that he longed for the appearance of some negro man able to become a leader wielding the sword and the torch.

And he capped the climax by publicly declaring "that he believed the more he hated the rebels of the South, the more he loved God."

I ask the Senator was that the spirit of the North to the South when the Constitution was ordained? Was that the spirit which brought South Carolina and Virginia to the aid of the noble, brave men of New England who dared at the cannon's mouth to demand that the right of representation and taxation should go together, even if England denied it? O no, sir!

Mr. President, it was love; it was mutual dependence and mutual love of liberty that created this Union and ordained the Constitution; and that same love and that same confidence and mutual fraternity must alone maintain it. If the sentiment of insatiate sectional hostility announced by Mr. Ives, or the one-sided partisan views of the Senator himself are shared in by a large portion of the people of New England, then, as Mr. Webster said, "The days of constitutional liberty are numbered." I cannot, I will not believe that such a fate is in store for us. I speak for the people of a State that has always stood by this Constitution. In their name I say to the Senator from Massachusetts that love and confidence created this Union; mutual trust, mutual dependence, mutual forbearance can preserve it. Our model system of free republican government is the admiration of the world. It should be the exemplar to humanity struggling for freedom throughout the world. Let us stand by the Constitution; let no party spirit excuse usurpation or a violation of its guarantees at any time or under any circumstance. Let all obey its behests and uphold its guarantees. Then we shall put liberty on a sure and perpetual foundation, and make our Government an asylum for the oppressed throughout the world. I desire to see liberty supported by law. I will denounce violence and disorder everywhere. I exhort my southern brethren to forbearance and a rigid adherence to law. But when the Senator from Massachusetts is justifying the recent oppressions of Federal power in Louisiana, let him remove the mote of party in order to see the sins and delinquencies of some of his own fanatical constituents. I ask with confidence and I appeal with hope to republicans in the North and in the West to aid in the rebuke of usurpation and misrule in the South. Then shall we put the Constitution of our fathers on the rock of safety, and the inestimable blessings freedom won by their valor and intrenched behind the bulwarks of a written Constitution of limited powers will be perpetuated to us and to our children. Such an undertaking should meet a warm approval in Massachusetts, and be far above the low behests of sectional distrust or party discipline.

The VICE-PRESIDENT, (who had resumed the chair at seven o'clock a. m.) The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. HAMILTON.]

[Mr. NORWOOD addressed the Senate in a speech which appears in the Appendix.] Having spoken an hour and a half—

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. GORDON in the chair.) Does the Senator from Georgia give consent to be interrupted?

Mr. NORWOOD. I will hear what the Senator from Maine desires to suggest.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 3855) to change the time and places for holding the circuit and district courts of the United States for the district of Minnesota;

A bill (H. R. No. 3996) conferring jurisdiction upon the United States courts in the Territory of Utah in certain cases;

A bill (H. R. No. 4536) prescribing the fees of jurors and witnesses in the courts of the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 4559) to prevent and punish the false making and uttering of certain instruments;

A bill (H. R. No. 4662) to change the location of the office of the United States marshal in the northern district of Georgia;

A bill (H. R. No. 4743) to amend section 649 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 4744) to punish certain larcenies and the receivers of stolen goods; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4351) for the relief of the judge of the district courts of the United States for the western district of Pennsylvania.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1938) to extend the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1871, entitled "An act to provide for the collection of debts due from southern railroads, and for other purposes."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I wish to address a word to the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. NORWOOD.] I do not desire to interrupt the Senator without his consent, but I understood the Senator to say as he commenced his speech that he was not particularly solicitous to go on this afternoon.

Mr. NORWOOD. I am not.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If the Senator continues of that mind I have a suggestion to make. I am extremely reluctant to interpose against the proposition now before the Senate; but being in some sense charged with business of the Senate which is of an urgent character, I feel it my duty to say to the Senate, and especially to my honorable friend from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON,] that in my judgment the Senate of the United States ought not at the present moment to occupy any more time on this proposition as against the class of business which I propose to submit to the Senate, namely the appropriation bills. As I have had occasion to say before this week, there are still nine appropriation bills to be acted upon by the Senate. The time left to us is very short—hardly twelve days, indeed not exceeding eleven including to-day—a shorter time than I have ever known so many bills of this character to be disposed of within; and therefore it seems to me that it is the absolute necessity of the Senate to pause in this debate at the present time to consider the appropriation bills, and I have risen with that view to say to my honorable friend and to the Senate that such is my judgment of the situation of the business of the Senate as relates to the appropriation bills, that the Senate cannot afford to spend further time in this debate at the present moment. When these bills shall have passed away from the Senate, there will be opportunity then for the Senate to proceed with the consideration of other questions.

I wish to say further that the usage justifies me in making this appeal to the Senate and commands me to do it. The appropriation bills are always the exigent necessity of the session. They must be attended to, whatever else suffers, and I appeal to my friends on both sides to consider them, according to the usage of the Senate and according to the general understanding.

I feel myself charged with making these observations to the Senate and endeavoring to arrest its attention at this time with the view of proceeding to the consideration of those measures. I appeal therefore to my honorable friend from Indiana to recognize this condition of things and allow this resolution to be laid aside for the purpose of taking up the Indian appropriation bill, which was reported on Monday and which has been awaiting the action of the Senate since that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. GORDON.) Does the Senator from Maine submit a motion?

Mr. BAYARD. I wish to ask the Senator from Maine how many appropriation bills are now ready to be placed before the Senate, reported from the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Four.

Mr. BAYARD. Will the Senator state what they are?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. They are the Indian appropriation bill, the post-office bill, the Military Academy bill, and the pension bill. I make no motion just at this moment, but I make the suggestion to the Senate.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I regret that the Senator from Maine feels it to be his duty to make such a motion at this time. We have been engaged in this discussion now for some hours and entertained hopes of bringing it to a speedy conclusion; but if the debate is now broken, the labor and the physical inconvenience we have all suffered will be lost. I had supposed that the appropriation bills would not take very much time, that they were so close-rigged, had been so trimmed down that they would speedily pass the Senate, and would not perhaps occupy the time that they have on former occasions.

But, Mr. President, if this debate should be protracted so that the appropriation bills could not be passed, taking the worst view of it, and an extra session should become necessary, the responsibility will not be on those who are ready to vote upon this question now if this debate can stop. This Louisiana question has been discussed here for two years, more or less, and during this session it has occupied nearly one-half the time. More time has been spent in debating it than in debate upon all other questions put together; and I have felt that this prolonged debate was unnecessary, that we are all prepared to vote, to vote this resolution up or vote it down, and that it was important it should be settled in some way.

Let me call the attention of the Senate very briefly to what the President said in his late message on this subject:

I have heretofore urged the case of Louisiana upon the attention of Congress, and I cannot but think that its inaction has produced great evil.

Are we at liberty to doubt that the inaction on the part of the Senate for the last two years, the failure of Congress to give expression and to define the status of the present government in Louisiana has resulted in violence and bloodshed in that State, and that our inaction has been used as an argument by the turbulent elements in Louisiana? They have been encouraged by our inaction to treat that government as a nullity and to resist it by violence and by blood, and the President has appealed to us upon the subject to come forward and take action. Allow me to read one further extract from the close of his late message. The President concludes the message by saying:

I now earnestly ask that such action be taken by Congress as to leave my duties perfectly clear in dealing with the affairs of Louisiana, giving assurance at the same time that whatever may be done by that body in the premises will be executed according to the spirit and letter of the law, without fear or favor.

The peace of a State is in all probability involved in the settlement of this question. If Mr. Pinchback shall be admitted, it will be such a recognition of what is called the Kellogg government upon the part of the Senate of the United States that it will take away from the white-leaguers of Louisiana any pretext, excuse, or hope for setting aside that government. But if we shall fail to admit him, or if we shall fail to take action, we leave that government in the condition in which it has been for the last two years; we expose that people to the same disasters and to the same troubles under which they have labored. It is a grave question, involving considerations even of life and death. We are not clear of all responsibility in view of our failure to act for the last two years.

And in what position do we leave the President of the United States? If we shall fail to seat Mr. Pinchback, it will be because we repudiate one-half of the Kellogg government. We cannot consistently accept one-half and repudiate the other; and some of our friends here, I fear, have forgotten the origin of what has been called the executive interference in Louisiana. Some seem to think that the President had only recognized Kellogg as the governor of that State, and to forget that the first recognition the Executive gave to the government of Louisiana was to the Legislature a month before Kellogg became governor of that State. I read from the Attorney-General's dispatch of December 12, 1872, addressed to Mr. Pinchback when he was the acting governor ex officio by the impeachment of Warmoth:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, December 12, 1872.

Acting-Governor PINCHBACK,

New Orleans, Louisiana:

Let it be understood that you are recognized by the President as the lawful executive of Louisiana, and that the body assembled at Mechanics' Institute is the lawful Legislature of the State; and it is suggested that you make proclamation to that effect, and also that all necessary assistance will be given to you and the Legislature herein recognized to protect the State from disorder and violence.

GEO. H. WILLIAMS,
Attorney-General.

Here is the recognition of that Legislature more than a month before Mr. Kellogg came upon the stage at all. The President has appealed to us for two years to decide the question. Our failure to act will be regarded as a repudiation of that government. There may be fearful consequences attending it, and can we say that we are free of all responsibility? I therefore suggest to my friend from Maine—I know he simply wants to do his duty and that he does not interfere from any other motive—that there are principles of more important consideration attending the disposition of this measure now before the Senate than even the passage of the appropriation bills. If they shall fail, an extra session can be called, and the responsibility would hardly be with the republican party for that. We should then have a new House of Representatives organized, and the majority in that House would have an opportunity of displaying the spirit and purpose by which they would be actuated and of adopting a policy for the administration of this Government. I doubt whether our democratic friends are anxious to enter soon upon that experiment. I think, so far as mere political considerations are concerned, they would shrink from it much more than we should. For my part I would deprecate an extra session on my personal account, on account of my health and personal convenience and personal arrangements; but at the same time, if it becomes a public necessity by reason of our attending to these things that are so important and overshadowing in their importance, such as we now have before us, let it come.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, among the earliest and most prominent lessons that were taught me with regard to the Government of this country was the necessity of separating the departments, the executive, the judiciary, and the legislative, which had their functions, neither to be invaded by the other. But it seems that on this question, which I had supposed was one exclusively for the Senate, a question of which under the Constitution they are the sole judges, being the judges of the elections, returns, and qualifications of their own members, we are, according to the doctrine of the Senator from Indiana, to be controlled in our action by the wishes of a different branch of the Government, to whom none of the responsibility and no portion of the power is confided under our form of government.

Therefore, Mr. President, with all respect for a co-ordinate branch of the Government, I apprehend that this Senate have nothing to do with the wishes personally of the Executive or his official wishes in regard to our action in determining who shall or who shall not become members of this body; and with due respect to the Senator from Indiana, I take it that his suggestion that we should be so influenced was improper in the strongest and most constitutional sense of the word.

Now, in regard to the disposal of business before this body, I recognize thoroughly the responsibility of the majority, who, having the power, should not escape the responsibility; and I would also say on the part of the minority and of each individual of it, there is a responsibility that nothing unworthy or simply dilatory or considered in partisan ends should enter into their conduct in the management of public business. I do not think the Senator from Indiana can lay his finger, and I do not understand that he will venture to make the charge that there has been for one hour during this session a disposition on the part of the minority in this Chamber to interfere with the regularity of public business, or for any reason, wise or otherwise, of a political or partisan nature, to attempt to control the operation and passage of bills in this body. Nothing of the kind has been done. I appeal to the record of our debates during the past two months—during the past three weeks especially. Let it be read; let it be seen who has in any degree made such debate as authorized any suggestion that delay was an object for any purpose of a partisan or political nature. No, Mr. President, I do recognize the power and the responsibility of the majority, and I do it with all respect; and so I have sat here patiently and properly at my place for more than twenty-four hours—yes, sir, for nearly twenty-eight hours now—simply abiding the will and pleasure of the majority respecting their disposition of public business. There has been no attempt at delay. I have my own views of this system of protracted session. I cannot but think the people of this country in their calmer moments will have their views of these protracted sessions. The human frame and the human brain has its limit of power. Men already have sickened under this debate. One of our brethren stood here to-day unable to continue a debate that every man felt was urged by his conscience and by nothing else simply because of physical indisposition, caused by the prolongation of this session. There is no act of human life, however important, in which consideration is not given to the human instrumentality to perform it, except it seems the business of legislation in the Senate of the United States. I will admit that if there had been exhibited here a desire improperly, disrespectfully, regardless of rules or in abuse of rules to prolong debate, there might then come a necessity for this sitting out of measures of the present kind. I agree with the honorable Senator from Indiana that few measures could surpass in importance to the people of this country that which we have had under consideration for the past day and a half in continuous session.

I have nothing to say in regard to the prospect of an extra session which the Senator has referred to, which he has, with his usual consideration for his political opponents, warned us of the effect of. Sir, I neither desire that session nor do I shrink from it. My duties, come they as they may, will find me, I trust, placidly awaiting their execution. It has been, I think, more than three weeks ago that in conversation with a distinguished and leading Senator of the administration party on this floor I drew his attention to some report in the Republican, the Administration organ of this city, that there was a desire upon the part of the minority to delay the public business so that an extra session would be made necessary for the passage of bills essential for the continuance of the Government, and I told him then that there should not be one hour of the remaining weeks of the Senate's session when he could not command every vote of the minority on this floor to bring forward the regular business of the body and pass it and make an extra session unnecessary. It was said privately—it is now said publicly—although there was nothing in what was said to prevent its being known to all gentlemen who are interested in considering the transaction of business in this body.

And so now, Mr. President, I would say, if there were nothing else than a consideration for the proper frame of mind and body in which we are to consider the very important questions involved in the resolution from the committee of which the Senator from Indiana is chairman, we should have reasonable, proper, ordinary delay; and I mean by delay opportunity for that mental and physical refreshment and rest, which we all need. In twenty-eight hours I have had some fifteen minutes sleep, and I presume I am but like others who stand around me and who stand here with the same feeling and intent that I have stood.

I do not wish to find fault; I do not wish to upbraid gentlemen in any way in regard to the condition of the business and the fact that they are now pressed for time; but it seems to me that there is a decorum, that which our forefathers called a proper respect for the opinions of mankind, that would make us approach great questions in a manner worthy of them. How can we do this with frames enfeebled by fatigue and minds irritated by want of necessary rest? I am sure that the best rule for the government of this body is the unwritten rule that prevails between honorable and candid men in their private transactions, that there shall be simply good faith in all their dealings; and so far as I have been able to establish it, and so far as I hope in the future to assist it, I should be as much ashamed of a party trick that would delay action upon a necessary measure or obtain by indirection an advantage that I would not venture to proclaim openly—I should be as much ashamed of it in my capacity as a Senator representing in part a State upon this floor, as I should in my personal relations to gentlemen whom I see around me.

Now, Mr. President, it is for the Senate to say whether the regular order of business of the body—that is to say, the appropriation bills of money necessary to conduct our Government—shall be promptly, regularly, sensibly, moderately, and justly discussed while there is plenty of time for them, and no man doubts it, or whether they shall be pressed aside for this continuous and necessarily heated discussion of a political question which I will admit is far more valuable than money, because it touches the operations at the very foundation of a Government for which we propose to vote money to carry it on.

Mr. President, I shall vote with the Senator from Maine to take up and consider duly and regularly the necessary appropriation bills to defray the expenses of the Government. I shall not delay nor seek to delay or avoid discussion upon any other measure that may be brought before the body; but can we of the minority in opposition serve our brethren in this Chamber and our fellow-citizens all over this country out of it better than by an honest, candid expression of criticism to measures which we think would be hurtful to the public good? If our debate is to be conducted in a spirit worthy of the measures and the objects of this resolution, which are contained within it, then debate is laudable and profitable. We do consider that this debate is of the highest interest and importance, and the minority would have craved of those who control the business a proper opportunity for calmer consideration than has been given to us in the last twenty-eight hours.

But, sir, the Senate must control their business. I have spoken for myself, but I believe that I have expressed, lamely perhaps, but still in the main correctly, the opinions and wishes of the minority on this floor. We wish to see everything moderately, regularly conducted, so that no extraordinary session of Congress may be made necessary. I will not discuss with the Senator from Indiana what might be the political advantage or disadvantage of it, in what embarrassment the new House of Representatives might find itself. I only hope that, whatever may be the duties set before them, they may meet them with honest hearts, trusting to an intelligent and honest public opinion to sustain them when they have tried to do what is best for our common country. That is all we hope. I do not desire to see, and I entirely repudiate, if it were necessary, the suggestion that any thought of partisan advantage or disadvantage has actuated the course of the minority in the debates in this body during the present session of Congress.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, it is not my desire to attribute motives to any Senator, other than those which guide his conduct and his words; but of course I cannot help thinking, when this Louisiana question has been before us so long, has been so often discussed in every aspect, that we are now quite as well prepared to vote, and have been for several days, as we should be if the discussion were longer continued.

I beg leave to suggest that something is due to a State. The Constitution declares that each State shall have two Senators. That is the law of the existence of this body. The continued violation of that law, the extended violation of that law, would result if not in civil war in the destruction of the Government itself. Louisiana has the same right that Delaware and New York have to two Senators on this floor. For two years she has had but one. She has been denied one-half of her representation. Another candidate, duly commissioned, has been knocking at the door, and has been kept out upon grounds and upon pretexts that are in my judgment without adequate foundation. The question of admitting a Senator is one of the highest privilege as well as of the highest importance.

For these and other reasons that I have mentioned I hope that this Congress will not adjourn without this question being settled. But the other considerations to which I adverted go beyond the right of a State to representation, because they involve perhaps the peace and the prosperity of that State. I cannot say more than to express the hope that those who are disposed to do Louisiana justice will stand by this resolution until it shall be disposed of, and if there be those who are disposed to protract this debate so that the appropriation bills shall not be passed at this session and an extra session shall become necessary, then upon them the responsibility will rest before the country.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to make one suggestion. The question now before the Senate is one to be decided by the Senate alone. It is not a question for the consideration of Congress; it is a question for the Senate, and the Senate alone. If, as we have been told, there is to be an extra session of the Senate on the 4th of March, at that extra session this question can be disposed of with ample time to consider it. There is no necessity therefore for occupying our time with it now, if by so doing we imperil the passage of the necessary appropriation bills. If the one or the other has to go over, manifestly the question now before the Senate, one which is to be determined by the Senate alone, is the question that should go over to that extra session of the Senate, which it seems to be admitted on all hands will convene on the 4th of March.

I shall therefore vote for the motion to take up the appropriation bill whenever that motion shall be made, believing that our first duty is to provide the means to carry on the Government, and that a delay of a few days in determining the question which is now before us will not prejudice the matter in the slightest degree.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Mr. President, I am disposed to regard this entirely as a question of the order of business. I hope the Senator from Indiana does not suppose for a moment that I make this motion in any spirit of hostility to the measure with which he is charged. It is simply from the conviction on the part of the Committee on Appropriations that the absolute necessities of the service require the action to which I have referred.

With the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, which was reported on Monday, I move to lay the present resolution on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine that the pending resolution be laid on the table.

Mr. MORTON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. I paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] a short time ago upon any question of adjournment that might arise, he desiring to go out to take a nap, as he said. I presume that this question involves the principle of that pair. I therefore withhold my vote. I should vote "yea," and I suppose he would vote "nay."

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 39, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Bayard, Bogy, Conkling, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Edmunds, Fenton, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Ingalls, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Merriam, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Norwood, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Schurz, Scott, Sprague, Stevenson, Stockton, Thurman, Tipton, Wadleigh, Washburn, Windom, and Wright—39.

NAYS—Messrs. Doremán, Cameron, Chandler, Clayton, Conover, Cragin, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Hamlin, Harvey, Howe, Jones, Logan, Morton, Oglesby, Patterson, Pratt, Ramsey, Sargent, Spencer, Stewart, and West—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Boutwell, Brownlow, Carpenter, Dorsey, Ferry of Connecticut, Gilbert, Hitchcock, Lewis, Mitchell, Pease, and Sherman—12.

So the resolution was ordered to lie on the table.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will ask the Senator from Minnesota to give way while he lays before the Senate several House bills for reference.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (H. R. No. 3996) conferring jurisdiction upon the United States courts in the Territory of Utah in certain cases;

A bill (H. R. No. 3855) to change the times and places for holding the circuit and district courts of the United States for the district of Minnesota;

A bill (H. R. No. 4536) prescribing the fees of jurors and witnesses in the courts of the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 4559) to prevent and punish the false making and uttering of certain instruments;

A bill (H. R. No. 4662) to change the location of the office of United States marshal in the northern district of Georgia;

A bill (H. R. No. 4351) for the relief of the judge of the district court of the United States for the western district of Pennsylvania;

A bill (H. R. No. 4743) to amend section 649 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4744) to punish certain larcenies and the receivers of stolen goods.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CONKLING. I present a memorial signed by A. A. Low & Brother; Drexel, Morgan & Co.; J. & W. Seligman & Co.; E. D. Morgan, and a large number of leading bankers and merchants in the city of New York, remonstrating against the annulling of the contract with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for the transportation of the mails between San Francisco, Japan, and China. They protest, for reasons which they state, against the injury which they allege would be inflicted upon commerce by suspending the postal and other service to which I have alluded. As a report has been made upon the bill to which this remonstrance refers, I move that it lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SCHURZ presented a resolution of the Legislature of Missouri, in favor of the establishment of a branch mint at Saint Louis, Missouri; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BOREMAN presented several petitions of members of the medical profession of the State of West Virginia, praying for such legislation as will the better promote the efficiency of the Medical Corps of the Army; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOWE presented a petition of citizens of Wisconsin, praying an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the importation, manufacture, or sale of alcoholic liquors, to take effect from January 1, 1876; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. HAMLIN, it was Ordered, That Sarah Parker have leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate her petition and papers, on leaving copies of the same with the Secretary.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HOWE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1325) authorizing the Wisconsin Central Railroad to straighten the line of their road; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STOCKTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1326) to authorize the purchase of certain improvements in ordnance, and pay for the use of the same, heretofore made; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LOGAN subsequently said: I wish to ask to what committee the bill in reference to ordnance was referred, which was introduced a few moments ago.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Committee on Naval Affairs, the Chair is informed.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not know of any ordnance department belonging to the Navy. I think it should go the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator make that motion?

Mr. LOGAN. I move the reference of the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 17) authorizing the President to terminate certain treaties; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WINDOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 3821, being the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. WEST. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT put the question on the motion to adjourn, and declared that the yeas appeared to prevail.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask for the yeas and nays. Let us take up the appropriation bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 6, nays 52; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Boggs, Harvey, McCreery, Oglesby, Patterson, and West—6.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Bayard, Boreman, Cameron, Chandler, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones, Kelly, Lewis, Logan, Merriam, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Norwood, Pratt, Ramsey, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Schurz, Scott, Spencer, Sprague, Stewart, Stockton, Thurman, Tipton, Wadleigh, Washburn, Windom, and Wright—52.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Boutwell, Brownlow, Carpenter, Dorsey, Ferry of Connecticut, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Hitchcock, Howe, Mitchell, Pease, Saulsbury, Sherman, and Stevenson—15.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. INGALLS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 3821) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WINDOM. I now renew my motion to take up the Indian appropriation bill, and I want to finish this bill to-night if we can.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WINDOM. Before the Secretary proceeds to read the bill, I wish to make a very brief statement as to the amount appropriated in comparison with the amount appropriated last year. The appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, were $5,690,000. As reported in this bill the amount for the coming fiscal year is $5,127,924, being less than last year by $562,076. The Senate committee have added to the House bill $277,317, and I can state in a moment what the items are, so that Senators may understand them.

The bill reported to the Senate is less than the estimates for 1876 by $1,723,757; and I think if Senators will glance through the bill they will find that there is very little objectionable matter in it. I think it has been kept very clean. The $277,000 added by the Senate committee is composed mainly of the following items: For the Chipewas of Lake Superior, $30,000; for the Osages, to pay interest on funds arising from the sale of lands, $38,700. We have added to the appropriation for the Apache Indians $100,000; for the Arickarees, Gros Ventres, and Mandans, $10,000; for the Utes, under treaty stipulation, overlooked by the House, $45,000; for the Round Valley reservation, $30,000; to increase the amount for Oregon, $10,000; and for the peace commissioners, which was omitted in the House bill, $15,000. This makes $278,700 more than the aggregate which I mentioned a moment ago; but we have made several small reductions; so that the aggregate is only $277,000.

I hope that, weary as the Senate is, it will take into consideration the present condition of business before the Senate and enable us, if possible, to complete this bill before we adjourn to-night.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I move—

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Will the Senator from West Virginia yield to me a moment?

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I move that debate on amendments to this bill be limited to five minutes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine moves that debate on the amendments to this bill be limited to five minutes by each Senator.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. We have now been in session about twenty-eight hours, and I appeal to my colleague on the committee who has charge of this bill to let us adjourn, and we will come here to-morrow and understand everything properly about the bill. None of us are in a condition to consider it properly this evening.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator from West Virginia who is a member of the Committee on Appropriations knows that there are three other bills prepared by that committee ready to be presented to the Senate. He also knows that there are but eleven days left of this session; and although we are weary, I think we can stay here an hour or two longer to finish this bill. I appeal to the Senate to remain at least and make an effort to do it.

Mr. DAVIS. I know well what my colleague on the committee has stated, that we have four appropriation bills now ready. I also know that there is not a Senator here who is not weary, and none of us perhaps are now in a condition to consider this bill properly. We know this is an important bill, and I therefore ask my colleagues on the committee not to insist upon going on to-night, but let us come here in the morning for the purpose of disposing of it. I must insist on my motion to adjourn.

HOOR OF MEETING.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Will the Senator yield to me one moment to make a motion which I think will be satisfactory?

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I desire to appeal to the Senate and ask unanimous consent to take from the table the resolution which I offered on Monday last to provide for the meeting of the Senate at eleven o'clock hereafter.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, and others. Not to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent to take up the resolution providing that the Senate shall meet at eleven o'clock. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Let it be read.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I would suggest to the Senator from Maine that it be after to-morrow. If the Senate is to remain and finish this bill to-night, it will certainly hardly desire to meet early to-morrow.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I hardly expect the Senate will do that either. Let the resolution be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the daily hour of meeting of the Senate shall be eleven o'clock a. m. from and after to-morrow.

Mr. CAMERON. I should like to know by what rule of the Senate that resolution can be considered now?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. By unanimous consent. The Chair asked for objections and there was no objection made. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. Let us understand that resolution. It does not apply to to-morrow. ["No."]

Mr. DAVIS rose.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I wish to say to the Senator from West Virginia that we have just laid aside a resolution which excited a good deal of interest and on which many persons wished to speak for the very purpose of disposing of the appropriation bills. I think the Senate in good faith is bound to stand by this bill and work two or three hours so that we can get through with it in time.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator from Maine asked me to yield while I was about to move an adjournment. I now make that motion with his consent, as I understand.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I hope the Senate will not adjourn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to adjourn. The motion was not agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3821) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill, as follows:

That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury—

Mr. STOCKTON. I have just heard read the words "hereby appropriated." I should like to submit whether this is a time, after twenty-eight hours' session, to appropriate anything. I move that the Senate do now adjourn. I am not willing to vote to appropriate anything to anybody in the present condition of the Senate.

Mr. WINDOM. I call for the reading of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. LOGAN. We just took a vote and voted down that motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A few words of the bill have been read since. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

The question being put, a division was called for; which resulted—ayes 22, noes 28.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill, and the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations will be acted upon in the order in which they are reached in reading the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was on page 1, line 1, before the enacting clause, to strike out the word "resolved."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 1, line 10, before the word "agents" to strike out "sixty-nine" and insert "seventy," so as to read:

For pay of seventy agents of Indian affairs, at $1,500 each, except the one at Iowa, at $500, namely, &c.

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to say a word on that amendment. That is an increase of agencies. It is an increase of three over last year.

Mr. WINDOM. An increase of one only from last year. We have added two in Dakota and dropped one in the Indian Territory, making an increase of one in the aggregate.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I see the Senate is not in a condition to listen. I have something to say on this amendment. It has come to our attention in committee, or rather to my attention while I was present in committee. I will, however, reserve what I wish to propose until to-morrow and let the committee's amendments be acted on first.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Senator can raise the question when the bill is in the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 29, in the enumeration of the agencies for the tribes in Dakota, to strike out "Brulé" and insert "White River."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 33, before "for," to strike out "four" and insert "five," and in line 34 before "Abiquiu" insert "Pueblo;" so as to read:

Five for the tribes in Mexico, namely, Pueblo, Abiquiu, Navajo, Mescalero, Apache, and Southern Apache agencies.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 65, to increase the aggregate appropriation for pay of Indian agents from $102,500 to $105,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 84, before "interpreters" to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "seventy-eight," so as to read:

For pay of seventy-eight interpreters, as follows:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the provision for interpreters, in line 101, to strike out "thirteen" and insert "twelve" before "for;" in line 102 before "Red Cloud" to insert "two at Fort Berthold, and one each at;" in line 104 to strike out "Fort Berthold;" and in line 105 to strike out "Brulé" and insert "White River;" so as to read:

Thirteen for the tribes in Dakota, namely, two at Fort Berthold, and one each at Red Cloud, Spotted Tail, Yankton, Ponca, Crow Creek, Grand River, Cheyenne River, Sisseton, Devil's Lake, Black Hills, and White River agencies, at $400 per annum each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the provisions for interpreters in line 111, to strike out "six" and insert "seven" before "for;" and in line 113, after "Apache" to insert "Pueblo;" so as to read:

Seven for the tribes in New Mexico, namely, two for the Navajo agency, and one each for the Cimarron, Mescalero, Apache, Southern Apache, Pueblo, and Abiquiu agencies, at $500 each per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the provisions for interpreters, to strike out "three" in line 133 and insert "four" before "for;" and in line 134 before "White Earth" to insert "Boise Fort;" so as to read:

Four for the tribes in Minnesota, namely, Boise Fort, White Earth, Red Lake, and Leach Lake special agencies, at $400 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 141, to increase the aggregate number of interpreters at $400 each from forty-seven to forty-nine; in line 142, to increase the aggregate number of interpreters at $500 each from twenty-eight to twenty-nine; in line 143, to increase the appropriation for temporary interpreters from $600 to $1,100; and to increase the aggregate amount appropriated for this item, in lines 144 and 145, from $33,400 to $35,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and concluded the reading of the following clause, on page 7, lines 146 to 152:

For pay of three Indian inspectors, at $3,000 each, $9,000: Provided, That after the commencement of the next fiscal year there shall be but three inspectors; and the provision of law requiring that each agency shall be visited and examined by one or more of the inspectors at least twice in each year is hereby repealed.

Mr. BOGY. I move to strike out this entire clause, from line 146 to line 152.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, in the chair.) That amendment will not be in order until the amendments of the committee have been acted upon.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 190, to increase the appropriation for the Arickarees, Gros Ventres, and Mandans, to be expended in goods, provisions, &c., from $75,000 to $85,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "dollars" in line 191, in the appropriation for the Arickarees, Gros Ventres, and Mandans, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That $10,000 of said amount be available immediately: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to use so much of this appropriation, not exceeding $775, as he shall deem just and proper, to reimburse L. B. Sperry and William Courtenay for the losses sustained by them by the destruction of certain personal property by fire at the Fort Berthold agency, Dakota, on the 12th day of October, 1874.

Mr. INGALLS. I would like to hear some explanation of this proviso.

Mr. WINDOM. The $10,000 added was to make up for a loss by fire which occurred last year. It was a loss of agency buildings and a loss of goods. The amount appropriated for Mr. Sperry and Mr. Courtenay stands upon a rather different basis from any other private claim. These gentlemen were agents at Fort Berthold, and at the time of the fire they neglected their own property and saved a large amount of Government property. In addition to that, Mr. Sperry, for whom the appropriation is made, has managed Indian affairs so admirably for Fort Berthold and has saved the Government so large an amount of money that the committee thought he ought to be reimbursed for this loss.

Mr. INGALLS. The first clause of the proviso, from the statement of the Senator from Minnesota, is nothing but a deficiency appropriation, and it appears to me it should not be adopted by the Senate. With regard to the second clause of the proviso, it is in direct violation of a rule of the Senate which declares that no amendment shall be received upon an appropriation bill "whose object is to provide for a private claim, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation." If Mr. Sperry and Mr. Courtenay have suffered any loss in the service of the Government, it is a matter for which a bill might properly be introduced for their relief, be referred to a committee, and acted upon by the Senate; but it is certainly entirely out of place on an appropriation bill. Besides that, it is entirely unfair and unjust to a great many other private claimants who have equally meritorious claims and who would be glad to have them paid. I hope the Senate will not set the precedent of adopting this amendment in violation of an express rule of this Senate.

Mr. SARGENT. The resolution in reference to the meeting of the Senate hereafter at eleven o'clock was passed in the legislative day of yesterday. There is no legislative session of Thursday, but it was the legislative day of Wednesday when that resolution was passed. Consequently on Friday, that is to-morrow, we meet at eleven o'clock, according to the letter of the rule. It is very necessary that this should be understood, so that if we are to meet at eleven o'clock Senators may be here in order to make a quorum. I have no doubt myself as to the construction of the resolution, as it was adopted in the legislative day of yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood that when the Senate adjourned to-day it would meet on Friday at the usual hour, but thereafter at eleven o'clock.

Mr. SARGENT. The object was to meet on Friday at twelve o'clock. I will make that motion and would make it now, except that I want to make a remark in justification of the motion, which is that all of us have been here for nearly thirty hours. I am entirely worn down and have had but one hour's sleep since yesterday morning. I consider it a great prejudice to health to remain here, and no doubt it is the disposition of Senators to adjourn now and come back to-morrow at twelve o'clock. I think we shall have nothing that resembles factious opposition to the appropriation bills. I submit the motion that when the Senate adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet at twelve o'clock on Friday.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. And that we adjourn now.

Mr. CONKLING. May I make an inquiry for information? If we pass the order that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet at twelve o'clock to-morrow, on what day does the resolution fixing the hour of meeting at eleven o'clock take effect?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. "From and after to-morrow"—on Saturday.

Mr. CONKLING. "From and after" the Chair would hold meant from the next day?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would take effect on Saturday. The Senator from California moves that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Friday at twelve o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. I now move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. WINDOM. No; we are going on well.

Mr. SARGENT. No; we are not going on well. The Senate is not in a condition to consider legislation after this exhausting session.

Mr. WEST. The question is not debatable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is not debatable.

Mr. SARGENT. The clerks are entirely worn out, and the reporters have had no sleep.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is not debatable. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 24, noes 14.

So the motion was agreed to; and (at four o'clock and forty minutes p. m. of Thursday, February 18) the Senate adjourned till Friday, February 19, at twelve o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 17, 1875.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole upon the tariff bill, and pending that motion I move that all debate upon the bill in Committee of the Whole be limited to three hours and a quarter.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Will not the gentleman allow me to report back some bills from the Committee on War Claims?

Mr. AVERILL and Mr. RANDALL called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the joint resolution reported from the Committee on Elections, which they were authorized to report at any time; but pending that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the tariff bill, and submits a motion to limit debate.

Mr. RANDALL. In case the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts is voted down, will it not be in order to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the Army appropriation bill?

The SPEAKER. A motion to go into Committee of the Whole is in order always.

Mr. RANDALL. And a motion to go into Committee of the Whole on an appropriation bill requires only a majority.

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. DAWES to limit debate; and on a division there were—ayes 58, noes 42; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. DAWES and Mr. WOOD were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 62, noes 65.

So the motion was agreed to.

The question recurred on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the tariff bill; and being put, there were—ayes 71, noes 64; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. DAWES and Mr. WOOD were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 90, noes 56.

So the motion was agreed to.

TAX AND TARIFF BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. HALE, of Maine, in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being House bill No. 4680, to further protect the sinking fund and provide for the exigencies of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all general debate upon this bill will be limited to three hours and a quarter. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BURCHARD. Mr. Chairman, for several years past the agreeable duty has fallen to members of Congress to reduce taxation. We are presented for the first time since the close of the war of the rebellion with a bill reported from the Committee on Ways and Means proposing to increase instead of lessen the revenues of the Government. The bill does not increase the taxation upon the country above what it has been during the past six years. Prior to 1870 and 1872 there was collected from customs revenue over $200,000,000, and a larger amount from internal revenue than this bill will give. The proposition is to collect as large an amount as has been heretofore collected from some of the same items or upon different items from those upon which duties are imposed.

The question at once occurs: Is there any necessity for raising more revenue? Are the receipts in the Treasury or the receipts that may be expected to come into the Treasury during the next fiscal year and from year to year sufficient to meet what should be the proper expenditures of the Government? This will depend upon the amount of necessary expenditures as well as the receipts. The Secretary of the Treasury has sent to Congress in the report presented for the fiscal year 1874 an estimate of the necessary expenditures for the next fiscal year, the year 1876. His estimate is that the expenditures will be $272,778,000. The estimate made by him of receipts are $293,000,000, without any provision for the sinking fund, giving a deficit after paying $32,140,914 for the sinking fund of $11,920,914. In my judgment the duty of this House is not to see what is required for the Government for this fiscal year ending 1875, so much as to look into the future and to examine as to what is required for the necessities of the Government for the next fiscal year. The Secretary shows in the actual receipts for one quarter and in the estimated receipts for the remaining three-quarters of the present fiscal year there will be a deficit of $22,093,748.43 for the present fiscal year. If we attempted to provide for the sinking fund as the law requires, it would be impossible, Mr. Chairman, in my judgment, to impose taxation that would meet the deficit for the sinking fund for the present year. If we attempted to impose taxation to meet the probable deficit of $22,000,000, it would require three times the increased revenue that will be provided by this bill for the next four months. But how much is to be provided for the next fiscal year; and to that I wish to call the attention of the House.

The Secretary of the Treasury, in the same report to which I have already called attention, after speaking of the reductions made by the last Congress, recommends to us economy. He says that he would impress upon Congress the importance of the most rigid economy in the public expenditures. The general depression following the late financial panic has compelled the people to lessen their individual expenditures, and the Government should not be slow to follow their example.

The present condition of the revenues requires the utmost economy in public expenditures, and the most careful scrutiny of the estimates herewith transmitted is invited. So far as they relate to the Treasury Department, the Secretary has required them to be kept within the appropriations of the last session of Congress, when a large reduction was effected. He is gratified to be able to express the opinion that such reduction has not affected injuriously the public interests confided to his care, nor has it tended to obstruct or delay the public business.

Lavish outlays of moneys by the Government lead to corresponding habits of extravagance among the people. The general depression following the late financial panic, the Secretary says, has compelled the people to lessen their individual expenditures, and the Government should not be slow to follow their example. He adds that he is gratified to be able to express the opinion that the reduction that was made has not affected injuriously the public interests confided to his care, nor has it tended to restrict or delay the public business. He recommends to us a rigid examination of the estimates that he has made, and promises that in the expenditures he will abide by the action of Congress, and limit them to the appropriations.

It is yet uncertain what amount will be appropriated by the present Congress for the fiscal year 1876. Upon that subject the Committee on Appropriations can speak more authoritatively than I can. I wish the chairman of that committee was here, that I might ask him whether the ordinary appropriations recommended by that committee to the House would equal or exceed the estimates made by the Secretary of the Treasury. My opinion is that the action of that committee will be such as to reduce rather than increase those estimates by several millions.

From what sources does the Secretary of the Treasury estimate that we shall receive the amount that he has given as the probable receipts, $293,000,000? From customs, $170,000,000; from internal revenue, $106,000,000; miscellaneous, $17,000,000; making a total of $293,000,000. Now will the receipts for the fiscal year equal the estimates? In my judgment they will not. I have given that subject some consideration. I have made an examination of the estimates for the last fiscal year, and I find that the Secretary of the Treasury, or those making the estimates, have for the last few years rather overrated than underrated the amount that will come into the Treasury. Taking the estimates made prior to the commencement of the fiscal year and comparing them with the receipts afterward, we find that for 1873 the estimates were $192,000,000 and the receipts only $188,000,000. For 1874 the estimates made prior to the fiscal year were $200,000,000. After we had passed the law that made reductions in the revenue the year afterward, the estimates were $160,000,000, and the actual receipts were $163,000,000. For 1875 the estimates were $180,000,000; they now estimate that there will be received $162,000,000.

For 1876 the estimates are $170,000,000. In my judgment the receipts will not exceed those of the present fiscal year.

Grouping the estimates and customs receipts from 1873, they have been:

	1873.	1874.	1875.	1876.
Prior to fiscal year.....		$200,000,000	$180,000,000	$170,000,000
During fiscal year.....	$192,000,000	160,000,000	162,000,000
Actual receipts for fiscal year.....	188,089,523	163,103,834

The statement was made by members of the Committee on Ways and Means who have preceded me that the indications at present are that the amount of the receipts for the fiscal year will not be over $152,000,000. In some remarks that I made upon this subject a year ago I estimated the amount of receipts for the fiscal year at $162,000,000; falling short of the amount actually received by $1,000,000.

I wish to give some reasons why I think you will require about $20,000,000 to meet the necessary and unavoidable expenses of the next fiscal year, unless the House shall reduce the appropriations for expenditures to a large extent. We are not to judge as to what is to come into the Treasury by looking ten days or a month ahead or by looking at the receipts from day to day. We must look at those great causes that affect trade and commerce. What induces large importations into the country? When the prices of commodities in the country are high and the cost of production great, a good market is afforded for foreign commodities and large importations are the inevitable result.

In 1872 we were on the top wave of high prices. Now the market-places all over the world have been lessened—abroad as well as here; and, of course, that has affected the markets of this country, and to a large extent affected the importations. Always after a commercial crisis there has been a falling off in importations. Look back through the tables for a series of years, and you will find that to be the case. For several years the importations of this country exceeded the exports by from $40,000,000 to $100,000,000. The importations grew from about $450,000,000 in 1870 to $640,000,000 in 1873, far exceeding the exportations. The importations were above anything that the country ever before witnessed; but they have now fallen off.

The Treasury reports for the last twenty years show the following amounts and fluctuation:

Statement showing the imports and exports from 1855 to 1874.

Year.	Net imports less re-exports.	Exports, gold value.	Excess of exports over imports.	Excess of imports over exports.
1855.....	$233,020,927	$246,708,553	$13,688,326
1856.....	298,361,364	310,586,330	22,324,966
1857.....	336,914,524	338,985,065	2,070,541
1858.....	251,727,008	233,758,279	42,031,271
1859.....	317,873,053	335,894,385	18,021,332
1860.....	335,233,232	373,189,274	37,956,042
1861.....	332,093,960	228,680,486		$103,403,474
1862.....	261,300,966	210,688,675		50,612,291
1863.....	226,796,336	241,997,474	15,201,138
1864.....	309,308,194	243,977,589		65,330,605
1865.....	216,441,495	197,092,093		19,349,402
1866.....	430,770,041	420,161,476		10,608,565
1867.....	391,121,801	337,560,517		53,561,284
1868.....	351,214,010	353,135,875	1,921,865
1869.....	411,896,374	318,082,663		93,813,711
1870.....	431,950,423	420,500,279		11,450,143
1871.....	513,033,809	512,802,267		231,542
1872.....	617,569,017	501,285,371		116,283,646
1873.....	675,467,636	578,938,985		56,528,651
1874.....	572,080,910	629,133,107	57,052,197

At that time I said that unless the exports largely increased, our importations under the laws of trade could not exceed from $550,000,000 to $600,000,000; that I did not expect to see them go to $600,000,000, and they probably would not reach over $550,000,000. They actually reached last year $595,000,000, while our exports largely increased. I have here a table showing the amount of imports during the last fiscal year and the amount of exports. The exports of merchandise increased $64,000,000; the imports of merchandise diminished $74,000,000. During the last fiscal year the imports were less than the exports by $59,000,000; that is, the balance of trade was in our favor by $57,000,000. During the last fiscal year the exports reached $629,000,000, and the imports $572,000,000.

Comparison of exports and imports.

EXPORTS.
Year.	Merchandise, gold value.	Total exports.
1873.....	$505,033,439	$578,938,985
1874.....	569,433,421	629,133,107
Increase.....	64,399,982	50,194,122

IMPORTS.
Year.	Merchandise, net imports.	Total net imports.
1873.....	$624,689,727	$635,467,636
1874.....	550,556,723	572,080,910
Decrease.....	74,133,004	63,386,726

Imports and exports of 1874 compared, (gold values.)

Exports.....	$569,433,421
Net imports.....	550,556,723
Excess.....	18,876,698
Total exports.....	$629,133,107
Total net imports.....	572,080,910
Excess.....	57,052,197

As our exports have been increasing, I do not expect that the results of the late commercial crisis will sink the imports much if any lower for the next fiscal year than they have been during the last fiscal year. I think instead of realizing $152,000,000 from receipts of duties on imports, the amount that we are from the present indications realizing this year, that we shall for the next year realize $160,000,000, but not $170,000,000. In my judgment there will be about $20,000,000 of deficit after providing for the sinking fund, and for that we ought to provide.

SOURCES OF REVENUE.

Now, from what sources shall we make provision? The committee have reported a bill proposing revenues from distilled spirits, tobacco, sugar, and a reimposition of about 4 per cent. additional duties on certain leading articles embraced in what is called the 10 per cent. reduction. On the consumption of those articles during the last fiscal year it will give a revenue upon distilled spirits of about $18,500,000, upon tobacco about $4,200,000, upon sugar $8,700,000, and upon the tariff reimposition $6,000,000; giving a revenue of $37,400,000. From that it is proposed to take the tax on matches, now giving us about $2,400,000; so that the net return will be $35,000,000.

Increased revenue from bill for four months of this present fiscal year and for next fiscal year.

Articles.	Four months.	Year.
	1875.	1876.
Distilled spirits.....	$3,000,000	$18,500,000
Tobacco.....	1,300,000	4,200,000
Sugar.....	3,000,000	8,700,000
Ten per cent. repeal.....	2,000,000	6,000,000
	9,300,000	37,400,000
Loss by repeal of tax on matches.....	800,000	2,400,000
	8,500,000	35,000,000

In my judgment that is more than we need. For the present fiscal year it would give us about $8,500,000. It will not provide for the sinking fund. We cannot meet the obligation of the sinking fund this year any more than we did last year. Whether we have lived up to our duty or not in maintaining the credit of the Government, that is past and gone. In my judgment we should look to maintain our credit in the future, and hereafter see that the revenues are sufficient to meet the expenses of the Government. Hence I believe and shall insist to this House that we can reduce the amount proposed to be collected by this bill.

TEA AND COFFEE.

Now, from what sources shall we collect the $20,000,000? Tea and coffee have been suggested. For one, I should have no objection to a reimposition of the former duty on tea and coffee. I never voted to take it off; I voted against its repeal, and never had, so far as I know a single one of my constituents challenge or question the vote. It is pure revenue. Every dollar collected from it goes into the Treasury, and it is equally diffused over all parts of the country. But it was thought by other gentlemen that perhaps this tax would not be acceptable to the House, and it was dropped.

DISTILLED SPIRITS.

Another source in the bill of revenue is distilled spirits. Nobody objects to that so far as I know. The distillers as a class do not object to it; the corn raisers in Illinois do not object, so far as I have heard. From Illinois is collected, in the first instance, one-fourth of all the tax on this article; yet I hear no objection there. It also is pure revenue, and it is only a question as to how much you can collect. I have taken some pains to examine into the amount collected in other countries. Great Britain imposes a tax of 10 shillings per imperial gallon, equal to about $2 per wine gallon.

Statement of gallons of spirits produced, rate of taxation, and amount collected in the United Kingdom of Great Britain from 1858 to 1874, inclusive.

Years.	Rate.	No. of gallons.	Amount collected.
1858.....	8s.....	21,902,576	$44,876,180
1859.....	8s.....	22,603,480	44,769,210
1860.....	8s. to 8s. 1d.....	24,435,443	48,901,970
1861.....	8s. 1d. to 10s.....	19,639,938	46,127,690
1862.....	10s.....	19,335,136	48,091,455
1863.....		18,884,529	46,998,535
1864.....		19,423,444	43,462,575
1865.....		20,323,375	50,883,655
1866.....		20,978,473	52,185,840
1867.....		22,146,382	54,279,245
1868.....		21,019,670	52,557,650
1869.....		21,930,393	52,781,095
1870.....		22,855,229	54,845,940
1871.....		23,843,448	57,319,495
1872.....		25,560,864	61,372,980
1873.....		28,425,563	68,747,715
1874.....			73,997,810

In Great Britain the amount collected has increased within the last twelve years, under the tax of $2 per gallon, from $46,000,000 to $74,000,000, the collection being at first on only about 19,000,000 imperial gallons, and during the last year over 30,000,000 gallons, nearly 35,000,000 gallons. I do not see why, with our present laws, our present system of taxation, we cannot collect $1 per gallon upon this article. That will give us about $18,000,000. The production of the last fiscal year was about 69,000,000 gallons; but a portion of that was withdrawn under our export laws, leaving the amount of tax paid on spirits at about 62,000,000 gallons.

Statement of distilled spirits produced in the United States since July 20, 1868.

	Gallons.
1869, (for eleven months and ten days of this year).....	53,367,884
1870.....	71,337,099
1871.....	54,576,446
1872.....	68,275,745
1873.....	68,236,567
1874.....	68,805,374

Before we had the present law, with its system of stamps and Government charge of the distilleries, we had a tax of about $2 a gallon. Under the former law, with the continual changes and fluctuations, our experience was not favorable to the imposition of that high rate. We had special commissioners of the revenue, Messrs. Colwell, Hayes, and Wells, who made a report, and in that report you will find when the tax was $2 per gallon they recommended a reduction to $1 per gallon. They made the statement that the consumption would probably be about 60,000,000 gallons, and that we could collect it on that amount.

The special commission of the revenue in 1865-'66, in regard to the rate of tax on distilled spirits, said:

It was the opinion of the late Commissioner of Internal Revenue, whose judgment on this subject is well worthy of consideration, that the Government under a stringent law might probably collect two-thirds of the amount, $84,000,000, on 42,000,000 gallons, or from fifty-five to sixty million dollars. On the other hand, with a reduction of the tax to $1 per gallon, the commission believe that the aggregate production and consumption through an increased demand for industrial purposes would approximate closely to 60,000,000 gallons per annum; and as a tax of $1 per gallon is conceded by all parties to be not unreasonable, it seems probable that with an effective law an immediate revenue of at least $50,000,000 might be collected, with a subsequent annual increase.

In regard to the propriety of the tax they said:

That distilled spirits ought to contribute a very large proportion of the amount which the necessities of the country require shall be annually raised by internal taxation is, we believe, the almost unanimous sentiment of the whole country. It may, indeed, be considered as an axiom in political economy, that there is no article which constitutes a fairer subject for excise, and none which can be made to produce so much revenue with so little suffering to the tax-payer. In Great Britain, where the duty has been for the last four years at the very high rate of 10 shillings per imperial gallon, the concurrent testimony is to the effect that of all the methods adopted in that country to raise a revenue this is the one most cheerfully borne and least oppressively felt by the people.

In fact, the commission regard the present standard of consumption of distilled spirits for drinking purposes in the United States, which they now estimate at 39,000,000 proof gallons per annum, as one which no legislation and no augmentation of tax can materially diminish. They believe, furthermore, that there are no people less inclined to regard expense in the gratification of their desires and appetites than the Americans.

The commissioners conclude in regard to the rate of tax as follows:

The result of this inquiry has led to a reversal of their original opinion, and induces them to believe that, in a revenue, industrial, and moral point of view, it would be expedient to reduce the existing excise of $2 per gallon on distilled spirits, and to substitute therefor a lower rate of $1 per proof gallon.

The total amount of gallons upon which the tax has been collected since it was first imposed has been furnished me by the Internal Revenue Office:

Statement showing the number of gallons of spirits distilled from materials other than apples, peaches, or grapes, on which the tax was returned to this office, together with the amount of tax returned and the rate of tax per gallon, for the several fiscal years from 1863 to 1874.

Year ending June 30—	Total number of gallons.	Number of gallons at each rate.	Rate of tax.	Amount of revenue returned at each rate.	Total amount of revenue.
1863.....	16,149,954	16,149,954	$0 20	$3,229,990 79	$3,229,990 70
1864.....	85,295,393.05	{ 56,863,595 28,431,798.05	{ 20 60	{ 11,372,719 00 17,059,078 83	{ 28,431,797 83
1865.....	16,936,780.13	{ 4,828,525.8 4,828,525.83 4,853,152 2,426,576.5	{ 20 60 1 50 2 00	{ 965,705 16 2,897,115 50 7,279,728 00 4,853,153 00	{ 15,995,701 66
1866.....	14,599,289.07	14,599,287.07	2 00	29,198,578 15	29,198,578 15
1867.....	14,148,132.15	14,148,132.15	2 00	28,296,264 31	28,296,264 31
1868.....	6,709,546.37	6,709,546.37	2 00	13,419,092 74	13,419,092 74
1869.....	61,183,539.13	{ 95,561.43 61,087,997.7	{ 2 00 50	{ 191,122 86 30,543,998 85	{ *30,735,121 71
1870.....	77,266,368.26	77,266,368.26	50	38,633,184 13	38,633,184 13
1871.....	59,842,616.96	59,842,616.96	50	29,921,308 48	29,921,308 48
1872.....	65,145,880.32	65,145,880.32	50	32,572,940 16	32,572,940 16
1873.....	62,945,154.02	{ 14,725,943.12 48,219,210.9	{ 50 70	{ 7,362,971 56 33,753,447 62	{ 41,116,419 18
1874.....	61,814,874.07	61,814,874.7	70	43,270,412 29	43,270,412 29

* By the provisions of section 59, act of July 20, 1868, a tax of 10 cents per gallon in addition to the tax of 50 cents was imposed on all distilled spirits in warehouse at the time said act went into effect, to be paid when the same were withdrawn from warehouse. Twenty-four million three hundred and eighty-three thousand nine hundred and fifty-one and three-tenths gallons were subject to this tax.

The above statement is made up from reports of collectors to this office on form 22, and shows the amount of tax actually returned during the several fiscal years. (See pages 118, 119, and 120, Commissioner's report for 1874.)

By act of July 1, 1862, the tax imposed on distilled spirits was 20 cents per gallon; by act of March 7, 1864, it was raised to 60 cents; by act of July 1, 1864, to $1.50; January 1, 1865, it was raised to $2; by act of July 20, 1868, it was reduced to 50 cents; by act of June 6, 1872, it was raised to 70 cents.

Section 56 of the same act provided that all distilled spirits in warehouse shall, within nine months after the passage of said act, be withdrawn from warehouse, and the taxes paid thereon. Section 1, act of April 10, 1869, extended the time of such withdrawal to June 30, 1869, but imposed an additional tax of 1 cent per gallon per month on such spirits as were not withdrawn prior to April 20, 1869. Five million one hundred and sixty-nine thousand five hundred and twenty-seven gallons were subject to this tax.

Two million four hundred and ninety thousand and ninety dollars and forty cents, the amount collected under these two provisions, added to $30,735,121.71, give $33,225,212.11, the sum found opposite number 2 on page 119 Commissioner's report for 1874.

OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, February 15, 1875.

TOBACCO.

Another item is tobacco. Upon that during the last fiscal year we collected about $21,000,000 on 104,000,000 pounds. A tax of 4 cents per pound would give us about $4,200,000. This is a less rate than some other countries impose. On smoking-tobacco the rate in Russia is 50 cents per pound; and we have had no difficulty under our present system in collecting the present rate. That rate of taxation will give us $22,000,000 on whisky and tobacco.

SUGAR.

Another item is sugar. Our importation of sugar for the last fiscal year was 1,645,000,000 pounds, and of molasses 47,000,000 gallons. According to the census returns there was produced in the United States in 1870, 87,000 hogsheads only. The duty collected last year was $35,000,000, which would give us $8,700,000 additional, if we increase the duty one-fourth and the consumption continues as large as it has been.

Sugar and molasses statistics.

[Duty collected in 1874, $34,852,600.75; add 25 per cent. additional duty, making $8,713,150.]

Year.	Quantity imported.
	Sugar.	Molasses.
	Pounds.	Gallons.
1872.....	1,412,854,405½	42,057,924
1873.....	1,418,583,521½	44,112,413
1874.....	1,644,709,767½	47,205,641

Census statistics of sugar and molasses produced in the United States.

Year.	Cane.	Sorghum.	Maple.	Molasses.
	Hhds.	Hhds.	Pounds.	Gallons.
1850.....	277,577	34,253,436	12,700,806
1860.....	230,982	40,120,205	23,000,000
1870.....	87,043	24	23,443,645	23,000,000

Census statistics of sugar produced in Louisiana.

Year.	Amount.
	Hhds.
1850.....	226,001
1860.....	221,726
1870.....	80,706

The same remark in some respects can be applied to this tax that is applied to the tax on tea and coffee. It is not entirely revenue; but it is almost all revenue. More than nine-tenths of all the sugar and molasses consumed in this country is imported from foreign countries. About 150,000,000 of pounds is the estimate of the amount produced in this country during the last year. It will not probably equal that amount.

If there is any advantage anywhere, if any portion of the country ought to receive incidental benefits from the increase of tariff duties, I think it should be those portions of the United States where this great staple is to some extent produced. We know that the people of the South and West, the people living along the Mississippi River, have been asking for an appropriation of $2,000,000 to help restore the levee system which has gone into decay; we know the disordered condition of their industries. If it is allowable—and many of my friends think it is not only allowable but the duty of the Government to aid struggling industries—it is right that the sugar-producing regions of the South should receive this little advantage from the tariff system which in other respects is to them a heavy tax.

Sugar, giving us $8,700,000, would run up the footings from these items to $31,000,000 of revenue.

REPEAL OF THE 10 PER CENT. REDUCTION.

The Bureau of Statistics has furnished me statements which I submit and will print with my remarks, showing the amount of imported commodities entering into consumption subject to the 10 per cent. reduction during the last and preceding fiscal years, with the duties collected on the same.

IMPORTS.

Statement of the value of imports subject to the reduction of 10 per cent. of the rate of duty under act of June 6, 1872, imported into the United States during the fiscal years ended June 30, 1873, and 1874, with estimated rate and duty on the same.

Articles.	Fiscal year ended June 30—		Decrease of 1874 from 1873.	Estimated—
	1873.	1874.		Average rate of duty.	Amount of duty for 1874.
	Value.	Value.		Per cent.
Cotton and manufactures of.....	$35,201,324	$28,183,873	$7,017,446	36	$9,846,196 08
Glass and manufactures of.....	7,430,044	6,257,978	1,162,066	46	2,878,669 89
Iron and steel and manufactures of.....	59,309,452	33,713,455	25,595,997	31½	10,619,738 33
Metal, metal composition, and manufactures of, not otherwise provided.....	9,114,221	4,781,041	4,333,180	31	1,462,122 71
Paper and manufactures of, including books.....	4,928,963	4,139,729	789,234	25½	1,055,630 90
Wool and manufactures of.....	71,509,400	55,130,279	16,379,121	54½	30,046,002 05
All other articles.....	4,340,340	3,703,347	636,993	32	1,185,071 04
Total.....	191,823,744	135,909,707	55,914,037	42.02	57,113,433 99

The committee will notice a large reduction in the amount imported and the high rate of duty now remaining on the articles. The proposition is to add to these duties 10 per cent. or on an average over 4 per cent. on their dutiable value, making the average rate of duty over 46 per cent.

INDUSTRIES DISTURBED.

To this, Mr. Chairman, I must express my dissent. I believe this House ought not to return to the high rates of duty which existed in various articles prior to 1872. The present duties in my judgment are sufficiently protective. I might recall the history of the legislation of the last Congress as well as of the Forty-first Congress in regard to tariff duties and their reduction. Go back to 1864 and 1865, when high rates were inaugurated, consider what the previous rates were and that the necessities of the Government were then the excuse for the increase, and ask whether we ought at this time to disturb the present rates of duty by repealing the comparatively slight reduction made in 1872. In the first place the repeal will affect articles imported annually to the value of about $140,000,000 and articles produced in this country of the value of nearly $1,000,000,000. Indeed, sir, you disturb all the industries of the country to raise only $6,000,000. Iron, steel, cotton, woolsens, and all the other articles enter largely into all branches of industry and all pursuits of life. Last winter the Committee on Ways and Means had before them the tool-makers, the manufacturers of agricultural implements, consumers of steel in this country, asking us to reduce the tariff on steel, saying that at present prices it was driving them out of foreign markets where they could compete successfully with foreign manufactures but for the high rates of duty.

Mr. Chairman, I might go through all the industries of this country interested—the manufacturers of paper, the manufacturers of books, the manufacturers of cotton, woolen, and worsted goods—and show you how many millions of consumers and how many thousand millions of dollars of values will be affected by the repeal. The great body of people consuming these articles would with one voice, I have not a particle of doubt, say to Congress, do not disturb these industries by increasing the present high rates of duties upon these articles of necessary consumption.

I have referred to the legislation of 1864. Now, sir, how did we come to raise our tariff duties from about 30 per cent. ad valorem 15 and 20 per cent., making them 40, 45, and 50 per cent.? We did it in 1864 because of the internal-revenue tax on domestic manufactures. We then said that it was not fair to impose these burdensome duties upon American products without putting equivalent duties upon articles imported from foreign countries. Two or three years ago we took off all these internal taxes upon domestic productions; and I recollect very well the question was debated before the House whether it was best to reduce or raise duties. I do not forget the speech made by a member from Iowa at that time, [Mr. ALLISON,] who has since been deservedly transferred to another if not a higher field of legislative duty. He called attention to these high rates of duty and insisted there should be a reduction of the tariff of at least 15 or 20 per cent. One of the present Senators from the State of Illinois, then a member of this House, in an able speech took the same position. The House agreed with these gentlemen, and very properly, I think, so far as the action of the House in committee was concerned, voted to reduce the rates of duty. During the last Congress, Mr. Chairman, I remember how you insisted there should be lower rates of duty on coal and salt and hides and leather, and how we stood by you in that position, and that the House, by a two-thirds vote, voted for free salt and free coal. Finally, as a sort of compromise measure, the republican members of the House agreed to the 10 per cent. reduction; it gave to New England a reduction of over 50 per cent. on salt, a very large reduction on coal, as well as giving her free hides and nearly all the reductions she asked.

I insist, therefore, that this compromise measure shall not now be disturbed. I protest against the proposed higher rates of duty in behalf of the laboring men and producers scattered throughout the North, South, and West. I took some pains to look at the census reports to find how many are engaged in the industries to be affected by this increase of duty—how many are producing the articles of woolen, cotton, iron, and steel:

Manufactures.	Number employed.	Value products.
Cotton manufactures.....	135,000	$178,000,000
Glass manufactures.....	15,000	20,000,000
Iron and steel manufactures.....	149,000	356,000,000
Metals.....	10,000	27,000,000
Paper.....	21,000	51,000,000
Woolens and carpets.....	105,000	199,000,000
All other articles.....	20,000	32,000,000
Total.....	455,000	$63,000,000

The census reports for 1870 give of all the producers of all the articles mentioned in this 10 per cent reduction less than half a million, or about 450,000 people, while in agricultural labor nearly one-half of the people of the United States are engaged in one way or another. Compare the number engaged in some of the leading industries with those engaged in manufactures of iron, steel, cotton, and woolen goods, and the wages paid:

	Number employed.	Per cent.	Production.	Wages.
				Total.	Annual per cap.
All occupations.....	12,505,923
Total agriculture.....	5,922,471	.47	$2,447,538,658
Farmers and planters.....	2,977,711
Farm laborers.....	2,885,996	.23		$310,286,285	$107
Cotton manufactures.....	135,369		178,000,000	39,144,132	290
Iron and steel manufactures.....	148,572		350,000,000	76,759,148	517
Woolen and worsted manufactures.....	93,108		177,000,000	31,246,432	335
Total cotton, iron, steel, and woolen and worsted manufactures.....	377,040	.03	705,000,000	147,149,712	389

Number employed in a few other pursuits.

Blacksmiths.....	141,774
Carpenters and joiners.....	344,596
Boot and shoe makers.....	171,127
Railroad employes.....	154,027
Draymen, hackmen, and teamsters.....	120,756
Clerks in stores.....	222,504
Teachers.....	126,822
Masons.....	89,710
Painters.....	85,123
Carriage and wagon makers.....	42,000

In 1870 there were reported 2,885,000 farm laborers in the United States, and only 377,000 men engaged in the production of cotton, iron, steel, and woolen and worsted manufactures. Now, are the relative wages lower in these industries than the wages paid to farm laborers? Look at the census report. The report of wages paid show that farm laborers received $107 per annum, while in iron and steel manufactures, laborers received over $500 per annum. The rates paid to farm and agricultural laborers are not such that this increase should be asked for in the interest of labor. It is not justice to the great body of the consumers in the country. It is especially burdensome to the agricultural States of the South and West that must contribute their share of the taxation without receiving the benefits. Contrast the relative proportions engaged in agriculture, as shown by the census returns in regard to the following States:

States.	All occupations.	Farming.	Per cent.
United States.....	12,505,923	5,922,471	48
Illinois.....	742,015	376,441	50.32
Indiana.....	459,369	268,777	58
Iowa.....	344,276	210,363	61.07
Kansas.....	123,852	73,226	59.12
Michigan.....	404,164	187,211	46.39
Minnesota.....	132,657	75,157	56.65
Missouri.....	505,565	263,918	52.20
Nebraska.....	43,837	23,115	52.73
Ohio.....	840,889	397,024	44
Wisconsin.....	292,808	159,687	54.53
Pennsylvania.....	1,090,544	260,051	24.05
New York.....	1,491,018	374,323	25
Massachusetts.....	579,844	72,810	12.53
Connecticut.....	193,421	43,653	22.56
Rhode Island.....	88,574	11,789	13.29

It is not in the interest of labor. It is in the interest of the manufacturing industries of the country. Where are they situated? Three-fourths of the cotton and woolen manufacturers of the country are within the borders of five of the New England and Middle States. There are proportionally more woolen mills and manufactories in the other States than there are manufactures of cotton or iron and steel, but of the woolen and worsted mills the census of 1870 shows the following in five States:

Manufactures of woolen and worsted goods.

	Capital.	Hands.	Wages.
United States.....	$108,910,309	92,973	$31,246,432
Massachusetts.....	23,472,900	25,825	8,976,764
Rhode Island.....	10,467,500	7,894	2,862,492
Connecticut.....	12,991,000	7,667	2,981,070
New York.....	10,199,482	9,063	2,891,926
Pennsylvania.....	17,588,913	16,632	5,736,962
Total.....	74,719,795	67,081	23,449,214

Are not the profits of these manufacturers sufficiently remunerative, although they may not now be receiving the high rates that they did during the war and previous to the war?

MANUFACTURERS' PROFITS.

Under the tariff of 1832, the compromise tariff, when the average rates were 30½ the profits were 8.71 per cent. Under the high tariff of 1842 the profits went to 12½ per cent. Under the low tariff of 1846 they went to 6½. In 1854 they were at 6½. In 1861 we raised the tariff, and then their profits through actual dividends, according to the table before me, went up to 12½ per cent., and that was about the average all through that tariff period.

And now, taking the bankrupt companies and all the companies that declared no dividends, aggregate all these manufactories, and what do you think their profits were during the last year, during the year following the panic? They were, as these tables show, (and they are in the Congressional Library, where gentlemen can have access to them,) 8 per cent.; and these companies want this 4 per cent., or some of their Representatives do, to raise the tariff rates so that they can make 12 per cent. profit, while the profits of agricultural labor are not 3 per cent. on the capital invested; and these tables show that there have been no returns from any industry through the country more certain or more reliable than from these manufacturing industries.

I have taken from a standard authority that was quoted by the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROBERTS] in the last Congress, Martin's Tables of New England Manufacturing Companies, printed in 1871, and annual supplements, showing since 1832 the actual dividends of the manufacturers of New England, and inserted a column showing the corresponding rate of duty on dutiable imports for the same years, as shown by the Commerce and Navigation Reports:

Profits of New England manufacturing companies under high and low tariffs, as shown by Martin's Tables of Manufacturing Dividends, published in 1871, and appendix on annual imports consumed, from the Bureau of Statistics, and average rate of duty.

Year.	Average per cent. duty on dutiable imports.	Average duty in different tariff periods.	Annual per cent. dividends.	Average dividends for same periods.
1832.....	41.66		13.
1833.....	45.21		11.12
1834.....	25.63		10.
1835.....	41.00		12.50
1836.....	26.39		11.
1837.....	17.92	30.72 per cent.	5.50	8.71 per cent.
1838.....	27.67		9.
1839.....	28.69		10.
1840.....	30.58		3.75
1841.....	25.11		7.
1842.....	28.13		3.
1843.....	27.39		6.
1844.....	32.88	30.00 per cent.	14.25	High tariff.
1845.....	30.61		15.50	12.44 per cent.
1846.....	29.22		14.
1847.....	23.64		10.25
1848.....	25.26		6.50
1849.....	23.93		7.50
1850.....	26.79		7.
1851.....	26.85	25.54 per cent.	4.50	Low tariff.
1852.....	27.99		5.	6.36 per cent.
1853.....	26.14		7.50
1854.....	25.53		6.50
1855.....	26.28		4.50
1856.....	26.02		6.
1857.....	22.53		5.

Profits of New England manufacturing companies, &c.—Continued.

Year.	Average per cent. duty on dutiable imports.	Average duty in different tariff periods.	Average per cent. dividends.	Average dividends for same periods.
1858.....	22.30	20.27 per cent.	2.50	Low tariff, 6.71 per cent.
1859.....	19.83		7.
1860.....	19.85		9.66
1861.....	19.10		7.66
1862.....	38.18		10.50
1863.....	37.26	45.90 per cent.	16.50	High tariff, 12.25 per cent.
1864.....	38.91		14.50
1865.....	54.30		7.50
1866.....	49.86		19.25
1867.....	49.48		12.75
1868.....	49.78		10.50
1869.....	46.72		11.
1870.....	48.58		7.75
1871.....	43.88		10.75
1872.....	41.50		12.25
1873.....	39.07	8.	11.62
1874.....	38.53		8.

Mr. BANNING. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BURCHARD. Certainly.

Mr. BANNING. Is it not the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury that $1 tax on whisky is too much, and that its collection will meet with much opposition and difficulty?

Mr. BURCHARD. I am not authorized to report for the Secretary of the Treasury. He makes his communications to the House and to the country. His opinions are in his official reports. I do not know what his individual opinion on this matter is. I do not know how much experience he has had in the enforcement of the law. His deliberate opinion would be entitled to weight, but to no more than the opinion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. He believes $1 tax on whisky can be collected, and he has had experience in that Bureau for a number of years and ought to be in a position to speak.

Mr. BANNING. I only ask the question of the gentleman supposing he knew what the opinion of the Secretary was.

Mr. BURCHARD. I do not think that the Secretary has expressed any authoritative opinion on that subject. I am assured by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] my colleague on the committee, that he has not. I desire to present a statement, which I will not stop to read, giving the numbers engaged in several of the Western States in agriculture.

Over 50 per cent. of the population are there engaged in agriculture and a still greater proportion in the South. Now, how can the gentlemen who favor this bill and who agree with me that we ought to have more revenues—how can they insist upon putting upon the bill this 10 per cent. increase of duties? Do they suppose that men who represent western constituencies and men who represent southern constituencies will vote for the imposition of that 10 per cent. rate? I hope and trust that the committee will strike that out, and then I can vote cheerfully for the bill, and I think other gentlemen will do so, who feel that they ought not and cannot vote for the imposition of 10 per cent. additional duty.

Why, sir, the duties collected on these 10 per cent. articles last year were an average of 42 per cent.; and you want to carry them about 4 per cent. higher to raise $6,000,000. The reason why gentlemen here seem to favor it is because they hope it will protect industries by giving higher prices. If it raised the prices to the same extent, it would add 3 per cent. to the price of $1,000,000,000 worth of commodities consumed in this country and give from twenty to thirty millions of additional profit to the men engaged in those industries.

Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to occupy so much time. I intended only to say a few words in regard to the effect of this bill upon the revenue and upon the people. I shall not trouble the committee longer. I ask those who are representing the interests to be effected, who believe that the Treasury ought to be sustained, to help amend this bill. Let us make it acceptable to the whole country. I believe the increase on tobacco, whisky, and sugar would not be burdensome or unequal, and would raise sufficient revenue. I do not think there would be any serious objection from consumers to an increased tax upon those articles if the revenues demand it. Let us pass a revenue bill affecting only those articles, and strike out the remainder.

I yield now the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

TAX AND TARIFF.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, on the 8th of January last I introduced this resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to furnish this House with a statement of receipts from the revenue for the second quarter of the fiscal year of 1874-'75; also to state whether the estimates of receipts furnished by him in his report on the 7th of December, 1874, for the remaining three-quarters of the current fiscal year have undergone any modification which may require additional taxation.

To this the Secretary has answered by a revision of his former estimates. Like some other "revisions," it is not in one sense satisfactory. He revises his former estimate from the customs for the year ending June 30, 1876, and places it now at $150,000,000. This is $20,000,000 less than his estimate when we met in December. Partly on this estimate the present bill is founded.

ESTIMATES REVISED.

When we recall the fact that the revenue from customs for the year ending June 30, 1872, was $216,000,000; for 1873, $188,000,000, and for the year 1874, $163,000,000, it may well be asked, as competent men are asking, is there to be another panic; and a worse one? Since the estimates are revised on the basis of less imports next year than the last, this query is not irrational.

There has been no attempt, let it be understood, to amend the tariff by reducing the rates. It is presumable, therefore, that the Secretary is alarmed; and this bill is the result.

Gentlemen of the committee have discussed the question of internal-revenue resources. My opinion—whatever it may be worth—is, that there will be, from all sources, and applicable to the general expenses, after the interest and sinking-fund are taken care of, at least $170,000,000. This, with economy, under honest administration, is amply sufficient for a frugal government.

ILL-TIMED TAXATION.

The most direct answer to the resolution quoted is the present bill to supply the expected deficit. New taxes are to be raised; fresh contributions from labor are asked. The Government is discredited, and the country surprised. Are we in a condition to bear more burdens? Not only has there been immense losses as the direct consequence of the civil war, but since then, by a policy of continued outrage and evil government, here and at the South, we are advised that we are moving toward general impoverishment and bankruptcy.

I may well ask, Mr. Chairman, is this a time to cultivate economy, or to levy taxes? Surely, if the efforts for economy had been equal with those for taxation, we might have escaped these additional exactions. Do you know, sir, under what burdens the people of this country now groan? It is well authenticated that in the past ten years we have paid in taxes $7,000,000,000; three-fifths of this to the Federal and two-fifths to the State and municipal governments. It is ascertained that this sum is nearly one-half of the total assessed wealth of the country in 1870. The yearly average of this taxation for the past decade is $700,000,000—5 per cent. of our whole taxable valuation. When you remember the rate of interest which the widow or orphan and savings' bank depositor receive for their investments, this 5 per cent. a year is crushingly enormous. In every twenty years, as Governor Tilden has said, there is assessed for taxation a sum equal to all the assessed wealth of the country; so that within twenty years, under bad administration, we consume the cost of governing it. Is not this the true index to our adversity, and the sure key to our panics? It matters not that some grow rich while people grow poor. A nation is not made rich by the transfer of property—one class to another—the one accumulating, the other paying out; this is not general wealth. When we reflect that this all-devouring taxation eats out the whole substance of the people every twenty years, it hardly becomes gentlemen to talk about slavery or incivility among races, or disabilities among men. Do not such attempts to tax beget pillage and speculation? Besides, the largest amount of this tax goes to feed a temporary cormorant like the Federal administration, and that administration thus swells its pride and power. And what is this Federal Government, as it was first established—not as now administered—that it should absorb more than twice as much as all our State governments and municipalities?

LABOR BURDENED.

These facts indicate that the country is paying more taxes than it can afford. These taxes are inordinate beyond the history of any other nation, for they invade the net earnings of the people. Men must live, and their families must be supported. The French revolution, and indeed all revolutions have their sanguinary fountain in the extravagance and prodigality which impoverish the humble and the poor, to enrich the aristocratic and the wealthy. Wise statesmen should now discuss, day and night, how to diminish expenditures, if they would avoid strikes, agitations, and pauperism; for these are inseparable from the industrial systems of other countries, where similar exactions prevail. If I am prodigal in my own household, I dare not be with other people's interests. Dr. Franklin's rules of economy, pleased my ancestors who were here. They do not suit me; but in public affairs, I venture to follow his "Poor Richard" philosophy. Better be a stingy Appropriation Committee, sir, than a gay and festive "Ways and Means."

The leader of the House [Mr. DAWES] told us that some $35,000,000 or more would be required for the next fiscal year; and we are advised by him not to embarrass our credit at home or abroad by refusing this necessary taxation. There is a little spice of unparliamentary threat in this kind of remark.

Its announcement, like the menace against Louisiana and Arkansas, comes to us in the unredressed and helpless condition which I have depicted. The channels of trade are still; the wages of labor are cut down, and their purchasing-power diminished; transportation is to some extent, and at this season, closed, and its cost enhanced.

while the industry and production of the country, already half dead, is languishing into complete prostration.

Sir, is it at this time that we are asked, in this sinister fashion, to add nearly a half hundred millions to our taxes?

As a representative of a free, industrious people, and as a member of this peculiar body, where, for traditional and other reasons, "all bills for raising revenue originate," let us challenge this bill in every light, moral, constitutional, and economical.

If this bill is in any wise in the interest of protection, so called, and not of revenue properly considered; if it is in the line of grabbing, monopoly, and selfish precedents; if it raises less revenue than other plans, while it taxes more the labor of the masses; if it re-enacts old swindles, or propounds new ones; in fine, if there be other and better modes of sustaining the Government, which a vigilant committee could ascertain, but fail to adopt or present, then let us assume the responsibility and vote against the measure.

TRY RETRENCHMENT.

The capital question to be asked, when such bills appear, is, have we first endeavored by all means to economize? A household which is living on its capital, and beyond its income, must retrench, or go into smaller quarters, or sell out. Where is there any evidence here of reform in this regard? Why must we tax thirty or forty millions more, as absolutely necessary, when millions on the Navy, buildings, rivers, Indians, Army, &c., can be saved without detriment to the public?

Is there any reason why the cost of our Government should not be lessened, at the very least, to the amount of this proposed tax? What were the pledges made by gentlemen at the last Congress, after our contests upon the appropriation bills? When thus proposing, as we on this side have, step by step, this session to cut them down, we are now tauntingly asked, "Where can we economize?" Sir, did not the Navy cost, in 1871, nineteen and a half millions? In 1872, over twenty-one and a quarter millions? In 1873, twenty-three and a half millions, and in 1874, twenty-one millions? Is there any reason why it should not be reduced to the expenses of 1860? Was that not a time of peace? Then the expenses of the Navy were only eleven and a half millions. Is not the Navy, with our diminished and diminishing commerce, an expensive luxury? Again, why should our public buildings and river and harbor improvements cost $15,000,000 now, when, in 1860, less than $1,200,000 was expended? We need not cast our eye upon the Army in its present service. It is a painful observation. We need not go further than this Congress or Capitol, or the Treasury Bureaus, or the customs service, or the Interior Department, where one-half of the official labor may well be spared. Millions might well be lopped off from the Federal expenditures, and the blessings of a burdened people would follow. The radical mistake is that the Government is for its officials and not for the people.

CLAMORS FOR TAXATION.

We should not be deterred from a proper discussion and a just vote upon this question by the cry that we are "embarrassing the Government by withholding supplies." That is a stale and insane cry. It is as old as the Tudors and as silly as sin. During the war I voted against the legal-tender, and against many kinds of taxes, along with eminent republicans like Lovejoy and Conkling. No one thought of charging repudiation or lack of patriotism. Such a bugbear cannot intimidate any but babes in the legislative wood. Measures are not to be judged by the ugly visors which men draw over their faces to scare honest legislation.

SWORD AND PURSE.

Will gentlemen tell us why we are, this year of depression, and when we are hardly out of the ashes of disaster, to raise and expend more than in 1871 and 1872? What other object than general expenses should there be in this new levy? Is it expected that the Army should be enlarged? If so, for what? Is it because the presidential election draws near? Is it because money is needed to corrupt, as well as swords to smite, prostrate States?

If that is the surmise, let us pause. If one molecule of the good old blood remains to stir the impulses of patriotism and liberty, let us revert to the elemental thoughts of our ancestors! Let us resist any unnecessary increase of taxes, at least until the Executive fulmination over reviving and contented Arkansas is withdrawn and the Army and Navy retire from manacled Louisiana! Our duty is plain.

PARLIAMENTARY LIBERTY.

We may learn it from the very function and heroism of the English Parliament. Kings, like the Stuarts, forgot the true source of their power, and a brave Parliament opposed their ill-advised requisitions. The ship-money is an example to all time. The Stuarts were dethroned; and Parliament ruled because it executed the popular will. "In early days," says Mr. Capen, (in his History of Democracy, page 60), "the oaks of freedom had begun to drop their acorns; and the Puritans were born to scatter them to a distant soil." (Bancroft, vol. 1, p. 296.) He meant America. Where are the descendants of these superb sires? Where is the remonstrance of some congressional Hampden, or some Puritanic Pym? Where is your elegant Selden to adorn the cause of "no supplies" against insolent absolutism? When our Congress inquires into the taxation of our necessities, to aid the practices of our Army South, is there no New England member to rise against it? Do you remember the scene so historically and logically pertinent to our time, when Sir Henry Vane saw Colonel Worsley enter the Parliament-house followed by soldiers, by command of Cromwell? He exclaimed, "This is not honest. It is against morality and common honesty." "Sir Henry Vane," replied Cromwell, "O, Sir Henry Vane! The Lord deliver me from Sir Henry Vane! He might have prevented this. But he is a juggler, and has not common honesty himself." But, sir, history honors the one, and execrates the other. The parliamentary hero lives, with an humbler, but a nobler name, than that of the Iron Dictator.

Is it intended to fill your Treasury for purposes of aggression on State rights or municipal freedom? Let me remind gentlemen of their own provisos which defeated the Army bill in 1856. It was then pretended that it was better to starve the Army than blight the virgin, free soil of Kansas; and the bill failed in that summer of 1856. Subsequently, another Army bill failed, under the leadership of Henry Winter Davis in 1865; why? because of the outrages upon personal liberty and the laws of the land, under the law of necessity, which was no law. "Let this bill perish!" exclaimed Winter Davis—"a thousand times rather than that any vote should go on the records of this House, declaring that the protection of the liberties of the citizens of Maryland are not of paramount importance to a vote of money, for the violator of their rights." These instances smack of the heroic parliamentary period of English privilege, when the heads of kings were uneasy upon their shoulders, and when one, at least, lost his crown with his head!

DIFFICULTY OF ADJUSTING TARIFFS.

Whatever these splendid triumphs of freedom spring from, patriotism or selfishness, one thing is sure, sir: no one likes to be taxed. No one, especially, likes to be taxed on what he uses; and, generally, he likes to tax what others use. As with persons, so with localities and classes. Hence the difficulty of framing a fair tax system, in a country so diversified in interests and production as our own. It would be a little unjust, therefore, to the Committee of Ways and Means for us to be unduly critical upon their measures. Any member can find fault with the bills which are here offered; but it is not every member who can dare to be just by taxing himself or his own constituency. We, upon this side, were properly reminded of the labor and anxiety shortly to devolve upon us, in the solution of our fiscal problems. I hope to discuss the present measure in the gentlest spirit; but in doing this, I will not bate a jot of that life-long conviction against the partial and excessive use of the taxing power which has done so much to dethrone our republican friends from power in this body.

INDIVIDUAL AND LOCAL BIAS.

This bill concerns mainly three articles, spirits, tobacco, and sugar. These articles are consumed, not by members merely; it would be unparliamentary to attribute the action of members to their appetites. A Massachusetts lover of bourbon may vote for tea and coffee, provided his constituents are as temperate as a constabulary can make them. A devotee of the cup that only "cheers," if he have a distillery in his district, may vote against taxing whisky. A member who uses sugar in his tea and whisky is, perhaps, in the most embarrassing situation on the saccharine question, provided he does not obey the voice of duty, which is too often the clamor of local selfishness.

Few there are, sir, who, rising above personal appetite and constituent locality, or who, having a constituency which uses these various "imbibations," with or without sugar, can vote against or for all these articles, respective only of the true principles of "equal and exact justice."

HOW PROPERTY ESCAPES.

The true principle of taxation in this country should reach property, and not labor. There is scarcely a tax existing to-day that does not break this rule. The income tax, with proper exemption, and if properly executed, would not infract it. The tax on tea and coffee, purely revenue, comes as near taxing all alike as any levied by tariff. But, sir, the great interests which control the funds in bonds and banks, as well as in real and fixed estates, are not reached by this bill.

Our tax bills have not been framed to save labor, but to oppress it. Why, sir, what do the authors of these bills care about levying eight millions on the sugar and tobacco of the poor, if only the bouds of the rich are enhanced on the bourse, and the money-bags of the Treasury are made plerotic? What care they that the tax on whisky raises the price of corn to the poor man, not only directly, but through the increased price of meats and medicines, provided the millionaire is not disturbed in his investments?

Our whole taxing system, from the time it became so great and complex—growing out of the war into gigantic size—has perpetually oppressed labor. It is simply audacious cruelty. The men who fought in the war, on both sides—the men of all colors, if you please—who went into the ranks and took the burden and heat, the rain and snow, and the hardships of the war, are made to pay twice; because through our system of substitutes and pecuniary immunity wealth escaped these risks and hardships. I well remember, Mr. Chairman, when I offered a resolution here to tear up by the roots the substitute system, that it was voted down in the interest of the dilettanti, the nice, the rich, and the comfortable portion of our people. They would give their means somewhat, but their precious health, comfort, and life, rarely!

When, therefore, I would be charitable to the tariff-mongers, and recognize their difficulty—the difficulty of those who are overlaid with plunder—I will never yield one honest thought on this thesis for any human persuasion or power; and that thought is, the right to challenge the villainies of the protective system, by which labor is fleeced and the sources of prosperity dried up by immoral, unconstitutional, and uneconomic taxation!

It is nothing new for me to protest against such taxation. Never, however, was there more need of an indignant protest than now, when the barracks rule in parts of our land, and where, by every canon of faith and truth, law and order should obtain. Hence, when I object to further taxation, because I would not trust the administration with the magisterial sword, I would at the same time, as in the aforesaid, object to the harassing and unnecessary exactions of this kind of class legislation.

SUGAR, TEA, COFFEE.

Let me illustrate in detail. Take sugar. It is a parliamentary word, made immortal by a speech of the elder Pitt. This bill proposes an additional tax of 1 cent per pound, or 25 per cent. The quantity of foreign sugars used in the United States is 1,644,000,000 pounds; the home sugar, 300,000,000; making in all, say, 2,000,000,000 pounds. The protection is 4 cents per pound. How much does the Government get, and how much do the people pay of this tax? The answer involves the doctrine of protection. This I shall consider fully before I am through. The Treasury gets $8,000,000 increase duty, while the people pay $20,000,000; so that there is an extraordinary tax of $12,000,000 on this article. To this we can never consent. Sugar is as essential as bread. It is a part of our life. If sugar were a cent a pound, every child, by instinct—maternal or otherwise—would have his tiny fist full. This tax is equal to $2.50 per capita on sugar alone. We use, of foreign sugars, $81,500,000; of home sugars, $10,000,000; so that $91,000,000 worth of sugars are now consumed, at $2.50 per head.

How is it on tea and coffee; and why are these objects of a purely revenue tariff omitted? Is it moral courage that is wanting here, or is it political economy? Is it badness or ignorance? The coffee we use amounts to $54,000,000, tea to $21,000,000; the per capita on tea is only 50 cents, on coffee $1.25; and no exactions for home producers in the guise of protection.

ANSWER TO MR. DAWES.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] yesterday began by stating that when the President's message, in December, intimated that a restoration of duty on tea and coffee would be proposed, the tea-trade turned its attention to importation, and that in consequence of this there is now in the country over a year's supply, the importations only being limited by the foreign production. The facts are that when the proposed restoration of duty was intimated in the President's message, the importers, instead of ordering further supplies, countermanded the orders they then had in foreign countries. They almost universally apprehended that the increase of duty would be applied to goods on shipboard; and, therefore, the goods on their way are less than they were at this time last year in consequence of this countermanding. Such as were shipped prior to the orders being canceled are all that the importers will receive; and they have been very unhappy about them.

The honorable gentleman [Mr. DAWES] further stated that there is now in the country a year's supply; when the truth is, that the stocks now on hand do not equal a half year's supply, and are no larger, or very little larger, than is usual at this period of the year.

As regards coffee, nothing is said in the newspaper report of his speech. The reason why he did not refer to coffee probably was, that the facts which he assumed regarding tea applied in no sense whatever to coffee. The stock of coffee is not only below the usual stock, as any one knows, but is extraordinarily and extremely short. We have not on hand in the country enough for a month's consumption.

The repealed duty upon tea of 15 cents a pound is equal to an average of 40 per cent. ad valorem. The repealed duty on coffee of 3 cents a pound is equal to an average of 16 or 17 per cent. ad valorem. The proposed duties, as increased by the bill, on sugar, are equal to from 80 to 100 per cent. ad valorem, which of course opens the door to all sorts of frauds and evasions of taxes. And this is the sort of tariff commended to the consumer and in the interest of revenue! We had a "little tariff" some days ago. This is little in another sense. Perhaps the vision, once dispelled here, of a cheap breakfast-table, still haunts the Ways and Means. Let them begin anew to calculate the cost of such a table, from the taxed lumber in its legs and the taxed cloth for its cover, the taxed knives and forks and spoons, and especially, sir, the taxed sugar.

To explain some of the delusions under which the Committee on Ways and Means have fallen, let me say, that the crop of tea is gathered in July and August. The cargoes are not shipped till September. This is on account of the southwest monsoon which prevails on the Chinese coast, so that no vessel can leave till after it is over. Of the 54,000,000 pounds of tea which arrived here in one year, 35,000,000 arrived in January, February, March, April, and May; these are the heavy months for such importations. There is a reason for this, and it may account for some of the mistakes of gentlemen who consider that the tea-market is drugged now. Out of the 64,000,000 pounds shipped in 1874, 13,000,000 only came across the Pacific to San Francisco, while 50,000,000 went to New York, and the rest to Baltimore,

Boston, &c. The bulk, therefore, came in sailing-vessels, as is well known. Perhaps 75 per cent. is under way now on the sea. Tea is like hops; if it is over one year old it dries and loses much of its strength and value. New tea is worth 15 cents a pound more than the old, so that there is no great inducement to keep large stocks on hand. As to coffee, it has no special season. From 19,000,000 to 20,000,000 pounds per month is the average. Large stocks of coffee are not kept on hand for other reasons. Eighteen million dollars could be raised on a tax of 3 cents on coffee and 15 cents on tea. Besides, it is a purely revenue-tax. As a devotee of democratic principle, I will, if I vote for any tax now, prefer a revenue to a protective tax.

This tax on tea and coffee, all of it, reaches the Treasury. Nay, more, if you think the tax on sugar is limited to the increase of the nominal tax itself, you are mistaken. If sugars are high, less is used; families economize, and revenue falls off. If our paternal Government, which hankers after the control of railroads, telegraphs, and what not, would have more revenue, with less burdens, let me invite them to the woolen and cotton manufactures, and the steel wires, and the railroad iron.

My friend seems to be impressed with the idea that there is now in importers and speculators' hands a large stock of tea, enough in fact to supply the wants of consumers for one year without further importations. I therefore take the liberty of submitting the following figures, taken from carefully prepared statistics and verified by those on record at our Importers and Growers' Board of Trade, showing that there is scarcely three months' supply available:

Stock in importers and speculators' hands, 13,500,000 pounds.
Afloat in China and Japan, to arrive before 30th June, 27,000,000 pounds, at 15 cents.....	$4,000,000
New crop of 1876, to arrive before May 1, 1876, 60,000,000 pounds, at 15 cents.....	9,000,000
	13,000,000
Less probable stock in bond June 30, 1876, 14,000,000 pounds.....	2,000,000
Amount that would be received by Government to June 30, 1876....	11,000,000

This shows conclusively the Government would receive $11,000,000 prior to July 1, 1876, with a duty of 15 cents per pound.

The stock on hand is smaller than usual at this period, and the dealers, having had little faith in the prospect of the passage of the bill, are also lightly stocked.

The importations have been retarded rather than stimulated, as our importers canceled their orders in December last in anticipation of an immediate application of the duty.

The Government would reap an almost immediate revenue if the tax was laid and made to apply to goods afloat. I can hardly understand why, with these facts in their possession, the committee do not urge it in this form.

This tax would fall lightly on the consumer, as the producer would be obliged to sell the article at the compensating difference in the East; the price at retail being in a great measure fixed and almost unalterable, and the descriptions of tea used in this country not being exportable to any other. Thus the Government would be able to collect a certain revenue on an article of constantly increasing consumption, and the producer be forced to pay the tax. The stock in speculators' hands is light.

TAX ON SPIRITS.

But it seems that the committee do not frame their bills on principles of revenue or fairness. How is it with this added tax on spirits? Will it yield more revenue by the additional tax? The answer to this question I hinted at yesterday, in proposing a question to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.] He held, on the authority of the present Commissioner of Internal Revenue, that the additional tax of 30 cents a gallon on whisky would give additional receipts. He held this irrespective of the question of who administered the revenue from 1864 to the present time, whether under President Johnson and his republican Commissioner, or under Grant's administration. He held it irrespective of the question as to whether the President or the Senate were most responsible for the appointment and confirmation of corrupt officials. Let me give you the figures and the conclusions.

WILL A LARGE TAX PRODUCE MOST REVENUE?

The conclusions are not merely mine, but of such economists as ex-Commissioner Orton and David A. Wells. In 1864 spirits were taxed 20 cents a gallon; the receipts were $28,431,000. In 1865 the tax was raised to 60 cents for six months of the time, and to $1.50 for the other six months; the receipts fell to $16,000,000. In 1866 the tax was raised to $2 a gallon; the receipts ran up for some inexplicable reason to $29,000,000. In 1867 they were $28,000,000. In 1868 they dropped to $13,419,000. Then under the pressure of intelligent economy the tax was reduced to 50 cents, and the receipts more than doubled, amounting to $33,225,000. In 1870 the same tax—fifty cents—gave $38,000,000 of receipts. In 1871 the tax was raised to 70 cents; and the revenue fell at once to $30,000,000. In 1872 it was $32,000,000. These are sufficient to illustrate the principle that too much pressure may make larger leakages. It will be perceived that when the tax was at $1.50 the lowest sum was collected; and when it was at 50 cents the largest average in the two years was collected. Is this not consonant with correct reasoning? O, but this tax is in the interest of temperance and morality. I do not know about that, sir. The drinking did not fall off during the years when the tax was highest; nor did the production and consumption. There never was a greater farce than the attempt to make men moral by statute. It is the very foolishness of this lower world. When you raise this tax nearly five hundred per cent. above the cost of production, you give a premium to fraud, and fraud is not morality. To be sure, the tax ought to be collected; but it is not, and will not be. There is a principle in mechanics which, at first sight, is a paradox: that the greater the pressure the more power may be evolved, as in pneumatics; but it is ascertained that after a certain pressure the very interstices and rivets of the cylinder are sluices for the escape of the power.

It may be said that the highest tax on whisky ought to be collected, even to the destruction of the distillery. But when we legislate it is for revenue, and that which depresses the revenue cannot be considered the highest obligation upon the legislator. Now, the telegraph-wires for their power do not depend on their length, but on the size of the conductor. Put copper on the iron, and you have more conductivity. This is correct, apparently, and its opposite is also a paradox. But there is another condition, that the two metals combined corrode, and copper alone has not the strength of steel between the posts, and will not answer. The failure is not more absolute than the failure to collect more revenue by simply increasing the tax, for as you increase you lose. Am I asked the question, "Suppose you reduce the tax from seventy, where it now is, to fifty, or from fifty to twenty, or even from twenty to ten, would you get more revenue?" I answer that it depends upon the circumstances—the frailty of human nature, perhaps. Certainly fifty cents, according to the figures before given, will produce the largest revenue upon this particular article. If it were reduced to twenty, I cannot say that it would produce more. If it were reduced to ten, then I am compelled to answer, if I may be excused the use of such an illustration, that a fine-tooth comb has a specific object. If the teeth are too coarse, the object will fail; if the teeth are too fine, you have got to reduce the size of the object, or it will fail also. Just as no teeth at all in a comb is an absolute failure, if the tax is too small the officers have not the same responsibility. They become careless, and have no results. You have to adapt the teeth of the comb to the object of the fine-tooth comb's creation.

This tax on whisky, while it will not afford any more revenue by the increase, will break down all distillation before the close of the year. I prophesy that whisky will be sold at less than the tax before the year is over, if the increased tax be levied. When the present stock runs out, men who produce and deal in the article, and who will reason on the uncertainty of Congress, will cease production, and the revenue will fall off.

As between a tax on sugar, tobacco, and spirits on one side and tea and coffee on the other, give me the latter; the more so, because the doctrine squares with the indestructible doctrine of

FREE TRADE.

There is one portion of this law to which I particularly except. It is that which refers to the re-enactment of the ten per centum on the duties referred to in the fifth section. This is a general aggravation of the present monstrous and fraudulent protective system. Since I have been in Congress, in season and out of season, I have thrown down the glove to all champions of such legislation. Public opinion marches in one direction. The victories won the past year in my own State and in the Western States are greatly owing to the extraordinary taxation imposed by this indirect protective system and to the hearty denunciation of the system by the democracy. In detail I oppose any further addition by this general and sweeping fifth section. I propose on this occasion to give my reasons for it. Others may neglect this theme; to me it is the inspiration and impulse of most of my congressional labors.

The principle of the tariff is simple; it only becomes complicated when we reach details. It has been the object of its advocates to confuse by details and by mixing specific with ad valorem duties, and, as in this bill, internal with external taxation.

I learned my lessons of political economy and moral science from Dr. Wayland, of Brown University. His keen and exhaustive analysis has kept me steadfast through twenty years of debate to the cardinal thought which lies at the bottom of all intelligent and honest discussion on this theme. If I were called upon to train a boy or a Congressman in the rudiments, I should commence first with the moral, then with the constitutional, and wind up with the strictly economical features. Once prove that a protective tariff, like this bill, involves oppressive, unequal, and illegal exactions, and, though it may have statutory power, it is nothing but a statutory fraud.

NATURAL JUSTICE OF FREE TRADE.

I. I would begin with the right of property, then show me how it is violated by society or by government. All history teaches that while government may prevent the infliction of slavery, personal or taxable, as between individuals, it is by no means innocent of doing the same thing as against individuals and classes. The levy of tribute by stronger powers, through satraps and barons and pirates, whether on the Rhine or on the Mediterranean, was no less an infliction of wrong than unjust tariff legislation. The gist of the question in a moral point of view, is this: the enacting of unjust laws by which property is subjected to oppressive confiscation or spoliation; in fact, the word "tariff" comes from a little port in the Mediterranean which levied tribute upon all who passed by. Not to speak of the atrocity of government turning its altar of refuge into an arsenal of oppression; not to speak of the example which government sets of peculation and brigandage, which individuals are not loath to follow, it will be conceded as a general principle that public oppression leads to revolution. It stops production. Under its malign influence, labor and capital emigrate, society is more or less disorganized, and the eternal law that wrong breeds wrong prevails until the sword and bloodshed do their work.

THEORIES AND PRACTICES.

Men who hold these ideas have been sneered at as doctrinaires, mere theorists; but there can be no true theory unless based on irrefragable facts. The facts furnish the repertory from which the theorist draws his material for generalizing. It is no answer, therefore, to say that a theory may be correct, and yet inapplicable to human affairs. When I affirm that abundance is more useful than scarcity, I am not to be answered by saying that scarcity brings high prices to the producer, or abundance low prices. For the question, both in morals and economy, is, what is best for the body of the masses of society? One glance at the census reports will show that these are the consumers. And this must be so from the variety of human employment. It must be so from the principle underlying all discussion, which Adam Smith states, that a nation is rich or poor in proportion to the cost of subsistence and necessary commodities. Take away the liberty of liberties, the privilege of the consumers to buy as well as to sell in the best market, and you enslave that people which tolerates the tyranny.

Why should we be afraid to say "free trade?" Once, in 1869, a member in Congress arose and said, "No one here dare avow himself a free-trader!" I arose and accepted the odium, but I choose to define my own thought. When I exchange equivalents—when I buy abroad and give an equivalent—that is both dignified and honest, and then I trade freely. When protection begs bounty, it is (as Bonamy Price said) a subscription for New England and Pennsylvania from the people. When we compel our people to produce that which costs us more to produce than it costs other people, (transportation cost, which is a sort of protection, not now counted,) then we cripple our productions and pay more for goods than we should. What is that but a compulsory fraud in the shape of a mysterious tax!

Assuming, then, that the moral phases of this question are upon the side of free trade, let me, before touching the constitutional and economical points, expose a fallacy very common with the advocates of protection. Mr. Speaker BLAINE used it recently in attacking the reciprocity treaty in his canvass in Maine. And this fallacy is a mere matter of verbiage, hanging upon the meaning of the words "free trade." Suppose I should, instead of "free trade," say "unenslaved trade," "unrestricted interchange," "unfettered commerce," "unshackled labor," where would the anti-slavery protectionist find a crevice in my armor for his spear? And yet free trade means each and all of these expressions. No one means by it absolute free trade, regardless of Government restrictions or taxation. There is free trade between our States, even as we seek free trade between Canada and our country, and the Sandwich Islands and our country. But no one proposes by free trade to abolish all taxation. In some form taxation is a necessity, to which we must submit even as we submit to government. It is the condition of an organized community. Civil order depends on it. The protection of persons and property cannot be had without it. Government may be a luxury, and the way some governments are run, notably our own in the last ten years, an expensive luxury. But contributions for its sustenance must be exacted. The problem is, in what form shall the necessary taxation be imposed. What is the loss of the earnings of labor for the supply of the government? In answer to this a preceding remark is pertinent. Why should any other expenditures than those actually necessary for the protection of the Government be levied? And that brings me to ask a review of what I have said as to "sugar" in this bill, and then to the second point.

UNCONSTITUTIONALITY OF PROTECTION.

II. May I refer to the Constitution to ascertain the powers of taxation? Unless they are written in that instrument they should not be exercised. They are, then, among the ungranted and reserved powers; in fact, they are not Federal powers. That instrument says "that the Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes duties, imposts, and excises to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States." The purposes of taxation are herein strictly defined. Any duty on imports not for the purpose of revenue for the Federal Treasury, but to protect classes in particular industries, is clearly unconstitutional. What does protection mean, if it has any meaning? Is it not the power to make a forced loan to compel the mass of the people to pay bounties upon peculiar articles to peculiar classes? Is not this done through a tax or duty on imported articles of the same description which come into competition with the domestic? It is the more insidious, enormous, and troublesome because entrenched behind the law. The farmers and laboring-men, as the census shows, form the great preponderating majority of the people. If they are robbed, oppressed, and impoverished under the name of protection, then protection is a scoundrelly alias and a pious fraud. A tax can only be tolerated—can only be borne cheerfully—when imposed for the actual needs of the Government. If the protectionist answers that he does not desire taxation to put money into his pocket, what, I ask, then, is the need of protection, since it does not protect? What is the use of this clamor for sugar, above tea and coffee, if some one is not to be benefited by this bill outside of the Treasury? Why this discrimination in favor of the home-producer? If protection does put money in his pocket, which is taken from the pockets of the unprotected, then my argument has no need of further elucidation.

One-half of our people are unprotected agriculturists; they produce, we will say, one-half of our wealth; all their pursuits, except a small percentage, are in other than protected pursuits. These unprotected classes have as much right, moral, natural, and constitutional, to live and labor without Government exactions and class-rapacity, as they have to speak, or print, or locomote. They have a right to extend their market for all they produce to all the world, and to buy whatever is produced abroad at the cheapest rate, while they sell what they produce at the highest rate. There is no more moral or legal restriction between exchanging with Europe than there is in exchanging between Pennsylvania and Ohio.

The tariff of 1846, framed by Robert J. Walker, and Edmund Burke of New Hampshire, was an honest, friendly, and economical response to the repeal of the corn-laws by Great Britain that year. Great Britain got the cheap loaf by overturning the monopoly of many hundred years which her landed gentry and farmers had, while we obtained a larger market in which we sold hundreds of millions of bushels of our grain.

Time will not allow me now to show that our grain-product, rated at English prices, is diminished every year by hundreds of millions because it makes its bounties when it buys its machines its shelter, its clothing—all its needs—at home and cannot buy them freely in the open market of the world.

Let me here remark that science—progressive science—has enlarged all markets. The steamship and the telegraph have reduced the expense of traversing distances. If we can gather within a day from the Antarctic the scientific results of the transit-of-Venus expeditions which, five years ago, would have been accounted a marvel, how wonderful is that abridgment of distance and expense when it comes to the matter of transporting and distributing the products of industry! Macaulay, in a free-trade speech in 1852, hinted at this idea; but had he lived the last twenty years his wonderful rhetoric would have received added points and more affluent illustration. He then said that New Zealand was nearer for all practical purposes to England than New England was to the Puritans who fled thither from the tyranny of Laud; that the coasts of North America were, in 1852, nearer to England, within the memory of persons then living, than the county of Donegal was to London. He had the secret even then which has enabled Great Britain to add four-fold to her tonnage and ten-fold to her production, while we have been losing ground. "Our countryman," he exclaimed, "who goes abroad is not lost to us; wherever he settles he is bound to us by close ties. If he is not a neighbor he is a benefactor and a customer. For us he is turning the forests into corn-fields on the Mississippi, and tending sheep and preparing his fleeces in the heart of Australia; while from us he receives the commodities which are produced with vast rapidity in an old society, where great masses of capital are accumulated. His candlesticks and his pots and pans come from Birmingham, his knives from Sheffield, the light cotton duck, which he wears in summer, from Manchester, and the good cloth coat, which he wears in winter, from Leeds; and, in return, he sends back what he produces in what was once a wilderness—the good flour out of which is made the large loaf which the Englishman divides among his children."

What is it, since 1860, that has destroyed this element of reciprocity? Why is it that we have not the mutual advantage which both France and England received from the treaty of Cobden-Chevalier? Did that treaty injure either country? It hurt neither. The only question was, and is, which was helped in the greatest measure?

CHEAP FOREIGN LABOR.

Am I asked, "Does not this enlarged trade at once strike down certain branches of industry which should be stimulated and developed by restricted tariffs?" I answer by asking another question: "Wherein are they to be thus stricken down?" Again, I am answered, "By cheap foreign labor, which enables the foreign producer to undersell the native producer." There is only one way to meet this in a plain talk, and that is by the reductio ad absurdum. Go with me to Rochester, New York. You will find water-power in abundance, grinding wheat and making the best flour. That water, or a portion of it, by its specific gravity turns a mill-wheel. No one will deny but it is cheap labor; it is simply nature in harness working for the welfare of men. It costs little to harness it; and a large loaf at less price is a consequence. But why should that water if it comes from the Canadian side—unpatriotic water; unglorified hydrostatics—unstarred and unspangled specific gravity—be used to cheapen bread? Is it not foreign, and worse than foreign—British? And worse than British—provincially British? Worse than provincial British—French, British, Indian? And every consumer of the flour, if he be a patriot, should stop damming that water. He should tear out the water-wheels, and insert in their stead steam-engines made in Pittsburgh, to be driven by caloric from Lehigh coal; for this machinery and caloric are produced on our own soil and demand protection. They are such precious "infants."

ECONOMIES OF FREE TRADE.

III. This brings me at once to the economical point. Without going into the details of our tariff; without showing the difference between the tariffs of other countries, which are levied upon a few articles, while ours covers so many; without calculating the cost of its collection and the frauds at the custom-house; without further comparison between other countries and our own; without showing how, by reducing our tariff, we can get more revenue, or how, by reducing the number of articles, we can aggrandize our greatness and prosperity; without showing the necessity of having the raw material free, as with steel and wool, which even manufacturers are clamoring for; without enlarging upon the selfishness of isolation which has destroyed our commercial prosperity—let me come at once to the question: "Wherein does the protective tariff injure individuals or classes?" When protection is asked for, something is asked for. For whom is that something? Is it for individuals or for classes or for States? Does it not come from one to go to another? And if it does not go into the Treasury is it for revenue? And if not for revenue is it not robbery? Is it not robbery to take from the farmer, who buys his plow; the blacksmith, who buys his anvil; the carpenter, who buys his chisel; the sewing-girl, who buys her machine, and the ship-builder, who builds his iron ship, to give it, not to the Treasury, but to the iron-monger? Who can doubt it? It is a more definite and pertinent question to ask, when a certain customs duty is levied, how much of that duty goes to the Treasury and how much goes to the protected class or individual? There has been great divergence of opinion on this point. Some have reckoned that where we collect $200,000,000 of revenue by the customs, that as much more goes into the pockets of those in this country engaged in manufacturing a similar imported article. Some have placed it as high as $1,000,000,000. Others have doubled it. I incline to the larger sum. But, irrespective of the amount, no one denies that an immense amount is thus indirectly paid by the consumer. We can only approximate the amount of this robbery.

WHEREIN ARE THE BOUNTIES TO THE FAVORED CLASSES.

On the 2d of June, 1864, in opposing Mr. MORRILL's war-tariff bill, intended to be temporary, I undertook to ascertain the sums paid for protection outside of revenue. At that time, as now, we had the greenback system. No calculations as to the tariff, which does not take notice of the greenback as a factor, are worth considering; hence, I laid down some self-evident propositions as the basis of my calculation. First, in all commercial transactions between two foreign countries, the basis of exchange must be specie, and the currencies of the countries must be reduced to their par values. The difference in the gold values, say of the United States and Great Britain, was $\frac{8}{10}$ per cent., which, owing to more alloy in the gold currency of the United States than that of Great Britain, had to be added to each American dollar. This exchange depends, of course, upon demand and supply. Second, this rate of exchange is also according to the depreciation of the paper currency of the one below the gold or standard specie currency of another. Suppose that the depreciation of United States currency is 10 per cent., compared with United States gold. Thus, it takes \$1.10 of greenbacks to buy one dollar of United States gold. Our Government requires that duties shall be paid in gold. The importing merchant, therefore, must purchase the gold with depreciated paper, paying for it the market premium. To this are added the freight and charges, and 10 per cent. profits to the importer. Now we come to the elements of cost of all the merchandise imported from foreign countries into the United States. They are, first, the first cost abroad; second, the difference of exchange; third, the duty; fourth, freight, insurance, and other charges of importation; and fifth, the importer's profits. Now, it is at this very point of cost that the imported article comes into competition with the corresponding article of the home manufacturer. Does not the aggregate, therefore, of the items above mentioned constitute the protection which the tariff gives to the home manufacturer? And who pays this bounty unless it be the consumer of the domestic article? I am not speaking now of duties so high as to be actually prohibitory—that involves a by-way into which I am not now traveling. Does not this system, therefore, tax the labor and capital employed in the one class for the benefit of the labor and capital employed in another?

HOW THE CURRENCY AFFECTS THE TARIFF.

These thoughts may seem abstract, but they will not seem so when I illustrate. To ascertain what our depreciated money in connection with the tariff has cost the people of this country, two elements only are necessary: first, the amount of our importations for a given time and the premium on the gold with which we paid for them; and, second, the duties on those imported goods and the cost of the gold which we had to buy to pay those customs-duties. It has been ascertained that in the last eight years this amount, by reason of our depreciated currency, has cost us the enormous figure of $1,143,000,000. The average price of gold during those years was 15 per cent., and the returns of our commerce furnish the duty by which to verify the calculation.

But this does not express the protective exactions growing out of the tariff alone, irrespective of the gold we have to buy to pay for importations and the duty. That can be only ascertained according to the formula hereinbefore referred to as to exchange, &c.

In 1864 I took the article of pig-iron, the quantity imported in 1861, its cost, exchange, and duty, in both paper money and gold, and showed that on a greenback basis there was a protective duty of 210 per cent. and in gold of 115 per cent., and on all kinds of iron and eight other products for the year 1862, based on the census of 1860, under the tariff then existing, there was an aggregate value in greenbacks paid in the shape of bounty to the home manufacturer, when gold was 60 per cent., of $750,250,252. This immense bounty never saw the Treasury. There is no other way to exhibit the enormous gratuities paid to certain manufacturers, except we give facts as to the exchange, cost of importation, custom-house charges, and a tariff-duty payable in gold.

Afterward, on the 19th day of April, 1870, on eight articles—iron, cotton manufactures, woolen manufactures, ready-made clothing, salt, leather, coal, India-rubber manufactures—we received $41,211,000 of revenue for the Treasury, while the people paid out of their pockets on these articles $852,000,000, which did not go to the Treasury. How much this rate of duty is per capita on forty millions of people, and how much is this rate of tribute to the home manufacturer, is clearly set forth in the tables published with my remarks in Congress on the 28th of March, 1870. I know that they seem too monstrous to be true; but may we not account for our present labor paralysis and stagnation by this immense, inordinate, unconstitutional, and tyrannical exaction from industry?

What makes the tariffs for protection so odious is that they not only discriminate against certain States and interests, but they discriminate against the great body of the people in various States. The protected States, to speak generally, are Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, and Louisiana. The remainder may be considered agricultural and commercial, or unprotected States. Three-fourths of the wealth and population of the Union have interests opposed to this system. The protected industries can be found by reference to the last census, and a comparison can be easily made between them and the unprotected, both as to the persons employed and the amount invested.

The injustice and wrong which these figures imply are apparent to the weakest intellect. Their consequences appear in the reduction of the purchasing power of their wages, as well as in the wages themselves. No wonder the Northwest and the South and a great portion of the East have written free trade upon their banner. No wonder the failing party clutch at such crude and partial bills as this about tobacco, sugar, and spirits, to save them from the deep damnation of their recent defeats. But it will not avail. The bubble is pricked. All schemes and devices to revive industry, to rebuild shipping, to enhance the price of grain, to cheapen transportation, to increase our cotton and other crops, to help all men, black and white, to the comforts and necessities of life, to shelter, food, and clothing, to the implements of industry, whether made of iron or wood, whether patented or unpatented inventions, all are involved in this problem: "free trade or unrestricted interchange." The statesman works and thinks in vain who makes the horoscope of our future and fails to correct or eradicate the immensity of extortion which weighs like a nightmare upon the industry of the nation and upon the wages and welfare of the laboring-man. This fresh attempt to add forty millions more to our taxes, and to increase the tariff 10 per centum, is condemned already. The politician who makes the attempt works against the laws of God, the laws of nature, the organic written laws of this country, the progress of science, the attractive forces which have made our country enterprising and great. In time we will throw off all burdens under liberal, intelligent, moral, and constitutional policies.

In countries where even ignorance prevailed, revolutions on taxing problems have been common and sanguinary. What may we not hope, in the form of a peaceful revolution, from an enlightened opinion in this tariff-ridden land?

Shakespeare must have been a free-trader as well as prophet, when he said:

We must not rend our subjects from our laws,
And stick them in our will. Sixth part of each?
A trembling contribution! Why, we take
From every tree lop, bark, and part o' the timber;
And, though we leave it with a root thus hacked,
The air will drink the sap.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, instead of this constant changeableness in our tax and tariff, may we not aid business by a general reform? May not that reform, like reforms in similar affairs in England—be accomplished by intelligent commissions—who will sit at leisure and report from time to time, and advise us what is wisest? Thus may we escape many of the evils of bad and selfish legislation, while we draw nearer to the true principles of our economic faith.

Mr. NIBLACK obtained the floor, and yielded ten minutes of his time to Mr. BANNING.

Mr. BANNING. I claim a right to be heard upon this question from the fact that I represent a constituency more directly interested in this subject than any other in the United States.

The following tables exhibit the fact that we of Cincinnati are called upon to contribute in the way of tax upon spirits, tobacco, and other articles 15 per cent. of the revenue derived from the excise duty. These tables are official and show the taxes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, in my own district:

Beer-stamps sold to brewers in the first district of Ohio from July 1, 1873, to June 30, 1874.

Bauer, G. M.	$202 00
Bach, George	5, 100 00
Beatter & Betting	910 00
Bruckman, F. & J. C.	5, 500 00
Christman, J.	190 00
Darnsmont, A.	8, 812 50
Foss, Schneider & Brenner	22, 575 00
Gambirinus Stock Company	22, 137 50
Haas, G.	126 00
Hauck & Windisch	42, 200 00
Herancourt, G. M.	17, 890 63
Hirsch, Phil.	1, 007 50
Hoag, Martin	337 50
Hoffmeister, William	27 50
Kauffman & Co.	41, 600 00
Kroger, J. B. & Co.	929 50
Kleiner & Brother	31, 433 00
Klotter's Sons	7, 810 00
Lachman, H.	18, 000 00
Maerlein, C.	59, 688 00
Nichaus, J. & Co.	18, 800 00
Schaller & Gerke	38, 469 50
Schneider & Mueller	12, 140 00
Schmidt & Brother	2, 350 00
Sohn, J. G. & Co.	13, 307 50
Schneider & Stephany	1, 422 50
Walker, J. & Co.	11, 750 00
Wettermann, J.	535 00
Windisch, Muhlhauser & Brother	43, 953 00
Weyand & Jung	20, 460 63
Weber, George	10, 118 00
Winterholer	100 00
Total	465, 891 76

Spirit-stamps sold to distillers in the first district of Ohio from July 1, 1873, to June 30, 1874.

Arleth, Ernst	$112, 624 40
Caldwell, R. W.
Dodsworth, C.	771, 477 10
Fleischmann & Co.	773, 421 60
Gaff, J. W. & Co.	1, 548, 881 00
Holterhoff, G.	99, 630 60
Jasper, H. J.	8, 757 70
Kinsinger, C.	378, 650 30
Kayser, A. & Co.	429, 488 60
Miller, A.	211, 176 80
Rabe, G. H.	173, 941 30
Pfeffer, John	450, 514 30
Teepen, H. & Co.	323, 722 90
Woolscroft, J. N.	99, 630 60
Total	5, 304, 341 80

Tobacco, snuff, and cigar stamps sold in the first district of Ohio from July 1, 1873, to June 30, 1874.

Allen & Ellis	$237, 325 50
Barber & Stout	83, 298 20
Boehmer & Beckeneyer	8, 880 00
Geghan & Murphy	15, 206 40
Kenneweg & Bade	36, 088 25
Lovell & Buffington	77, 255 20
McF. Smith, R.	8, 920 80
Moorman & Son	12, 567 50
Peebles Brothers	18, 317 50
Spence Brother, & Co.	193, 678 50
Shinkle & Linfoot	20, 236 45
Shaw, J. M.	13, 941 00
Tenen & Andrews	88, 031 50
Thirteen small factories consolidated	58, 458 90

Total collections on tobacco	794, 205 70
Six snuff factories	4, 837 44
About 400 cigar factories	419, 404 75

Total 1, 218, 447 89

RECAPITULATION OF TAXES COLLECTED.
Beer	$465, 871 76
Spirits	5, 304, 341 80
Tobacco	794, 205 70
Snuff	4, 837 44
Cigars	419, 404 75
Other sources	220, 206 06

Total 7, 208, 887 51

From these it will be seen that the revenue paid in my own district for the last fiscal year was $7,208,887.51.

Addressing a note to Colonel Weitzel, collector of my district, asking for information as to the probable increase or decrease of taxes this year, I received the following reply:

UNITED STATES INTERNAL REVENUE,
Collector's Office, First District, Ohio, December 5, 1874.

DEAR SIR: In reply to yours of 30th ultimo, I would inform you that the records of this office show an increase of internal-revenue collections in this district during the months of July, August, September, October, and November in 1874, over those of same months of 1873, of $461,901.50; principally derived from distilled spirits.

Very respectfully,

WM. WEITZEL, Collector.

General H. B. BANNING, M. C., Cumminsville.

From this letter it appears that the increase of taxes collected in Cincinnati for the five months of July, August, September, October, and November last was almost half a million dollars more than in the same months the previous year, justifying the conclusion that my own district will for the support of the Government pay this year over $8,000,000, increasing more than a million over last year notwithstanding the hard times. This eight millions is a tax mostly collected from whisky at 70 cents a gallon.

Now, sir, I am opposed to the increase proposed by this bill for several reasons. In the first place, I am opposed to any increase of taxation at this time. A loss of revenue on the part of the Government indicates poverty on the part of the people. When a justly apportioned tax falls off it indicates distress, and the only remedy is in economy of expenditures. We were promised this by the party in power. The promise if made in good faith and carried out in earnestness and honesty would have accomplished a result acceptable to an over-tax-burdened people.

Instead of this we have the same extravagant expenditures which characterized our Government in more prosperous times. In the second place it has been demonstrated through hard-earned experience that as you augment the taxation on any given article you increase the cost of collection, until in the end more is lost than gained. We now collect more with the tax at 70 cents a gallon than we did when the tax was $2 a gallon. As we lower the tax then to a given point we increase the revenue.

This was proven in our hour of prosperity. How much more will it be so now that labor is out of employ, trade paralyzed, and the business of the country threatened with bankruptcy.

Increase this tax, sir, 30 cents on the gallon and you will have all the smugglers, thieves, and illicit distilleries of the country at work again. To increase this revenue we have to adjust the balance between the cost of revenue and the cost of fraud.

In fact, sir, if the object of this bill is to increase the revenue, I am satisfied that object would be better attained by reducing rather than by increasing the present tax. In illustration of this, my district has an efficient, able, and honest collector, and the result is an increase of revenue from this district, as the letter and tables I have read show, while in all others nearly there is a decrease. I venture the assertion that the returns in the Department will prove that while the distillers of Cincinnati have mashed less grain in certain months than some other districts, they have paid to the Government during the same months a larger amount of revenue.

Sir, it is notorious that high-wines sell in New York for 93½ cents, when at their source in the West they could not be produced for less than 93 cents; this at a time when high wines cost 98 to 99 cents delivered in New York market. So, sir, notwithstanding all the vigilance of Mr. Douglass, the best and most efficient Commissioner we have ever had, and his assistants, it is quite evident that a large amount of spirits escape taxation, or that there is "crooked whisky in the market," to the loss of the Treasury and to the detriment of honest manufacturers.

If this is the case with the tax at 70 cents a gallon, may we not safely conclude that an increase of 30 cents a gallon will be an inducement for more and greater frauds.

But I wish in the short time allotted me to call attention to another and even more objectionable feature of this bill, which reads as follows:

Provided, That in addition to the tax of 70 cents per gallon imposed by laws now existing, there shall be levied and collected a tax of 15 cents, being one-half the increase of tax upon this act, on each and every proof gallon, or wine gallon when below proof, of domestic distilled spirits manufactured and placed in bonded warehouse prior to the day when this act shall take effect, and held in bonded warehouse at that time, and on all such spirits then held by distillers, rectifiers, or wholesale dealers, having in their possession or under their control distilled spirits in stamped packages; and any person who shall sell, transfer, or otherwise dispose of any such distilled spirits after this act takes effect until an additional stamp, to be especially provided for this purpose by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, denoting payment of the additional tax of 15 cents per gallon herein imposed, is purchased and attached to the package or packages containing the same, in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall prescribe, shall be subject to and pay a penalty of $1 for each and every gallon so removed; and the spirits so removed shall be forfeited to the United States: And provided further—

The provision adds 15 cents tax per gallon on all spirits in bonded warehouses held by distillers, rectifiers, or wholesale dealers at the time of its passage.

Sir, this provision of the bill is certainly a very unjust one, placing an additional tax upon spirits already taxed, and will not, as I believe, increase the revenues if it is enacted into a law. The owners of spirits already taxed 70 cents will not hold on to the article for the privilege of paying the Government 15 cents additional assessment. Before this bill becomes a law the 200,000 retail dealers will be the owners of this eleven and one half millions of gallons now in the hands of the distillers, rectifiers, and wholesale dealers, to the inconvenience and disadvantage of the present holders, in whose hands, if the spirits remain until the passage of the law, the 15 cent tax must be added to that already paid; while the manufacturers who have contracts ahead to deliver spirits for a stipulated price will lose millions, which will be pocketed by the brokers and speculators.

Mr. Chairman, "there is millions in it," and I refer to this clause of the bill now under consideration. The millions are not for the producers of the corn out of which the whisky sought to be taxed is made. Not for the producers and manufacturers of whisky. Not to increase the fund in the Government Treasury; but for the brokers and speculators.

Mr. Chairman, when making his argument in support of this bill the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] in answer to a question, said he did not doubt that a portion of the whisky in bond would escape the tax by passing to retail dealers before the bill became a law, but the retail dealers could take but a part of the eleven and a half millions of gallons. In reply to an inquiry I sent to Commissioner Douglass, asking the number of retail liquor dealers in the United States, I received the following:

Hon. H. B. BANNING:

The number of retail liquor dealers in the United States is probably not less than 200,000.

J. W. DOUGLASS,
Commissioner.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 12, 1875.

Dividing the 11,500,000 gallons, the amount estimated of spirits to be now on hand by the honorable gentleman, by the 200,000 retail liquor dealers, we find that it will only be necessary for each of them to purchase 57½ gallons to exhaust the amount sought to be retaxed 15 cents. So we find the retail liquor dealers might purchase all the spirits now in the hands of the wholesale dealers and in bonded warehouses, and their stock would not then be large.

If, then, the gentleman succeeds in this proposition, he puts a tax upon a class that is iniquitous through its inequality. And his only escape from this injustice is a failure that leaves a stain upon our statute-book without any thing by which it can be justified.

TOBACCO.

Section 3368 of the Revised Statutes fixes the tax on all chewing and smoking tobacco, fine-cut, cavendish, plug, or twist, cut, or granulated of every description, at 20 cents a pound. The second section of this bill increases that tax to 24 cents a pound.

Against this increase of tax the tobacco manufacturers protest loudly and earnestly. This industry which now pays a very large revenue for the support of the Government is greatly injured and crippled by the frequent and constant changes of the revenue law, particularly in the increase and decrease of the tobacco tax.

It appears to me, Mr. Speaker, there is but one argument necessary to defeat this section of the bill, which is—

The revenue now obtained from tobacco far exceeds in amount that which was contemplated by the Government during the highest days of taxation. When the currency and all business were greatly inflated, and when it is remembered that every reduction of this tax resulted in increased revenue, is it not fair to believe that in view of all these evils and difficulties an advance of the tax now would fail to enrich the Treasury?

Now, sir, one or two suggestions in conclusion.

By this bill the tax on matches is repealed, being a loss to the revenue of upward of $2,500,000 annually of a tax easily collected and not burdensome, and 4 cents per pound additional is placed upon tobacco, which is now taxed 20 cents a pound. It may be true statesmanship, Mr. Speaker, to make the tobacco smokers, tobacco chewers, and spirit consumers pay all the excise duties or revenues if it were practicable. I must however say that to my mind it would be more just and right to divide the burdens of taxation and let those who have the luxury of light pay a portion of them—considerable in the aggregate, but wholly inappreciable to the individual consumer.

Again, Mr. Chairman, the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, says:

He now came to the necessity which led the committee to report this bill to the House. The pledge had been given to the holders of the bonds of the Government at home and abroad, that there should be built up a sinking fund that in thirty years would extinguish the entire national debt. On that pledge the bonds had been taken abroad, and the maintenance of the faith of the Government was of more importance and value in dollars and cents than the amount proposed by this bill.

It is rather remarkable, Mr. Chairman, that this pledge to create a sinking fund should have escaped the consideration of members of this House who have been here for years, and the former Secretaries of the Treasury, and that it is only now found necessary to build up this fund by an increased taxation. When the workshops are empty money is scarce and times are hard. Now, sir, while I favor the payment of these bonds, I hardly think the time auspicious to increase taxation to build up a sinking fund which is to lay idle for years, a constant source of danger from corruption and temptation to extravagance.

Sir, I do not share in the anxiety evinced in behalf of these bonds while the great industries of the country are almost burdened out of existence.

For the first time in the history of our country laborers are begging for work, and in some parts of our country, especially the great commercial centers, are threatened with starvation.

I think we had better cut down our expenses, sir, and so economize as not to require increased taxation.

Sir, there is a persistent design to throw the burdens of taxation upon the West and South. While we take the tax from matches, we increase the tax upon chewing-tobacco and distilled spirits, and, by an additional protection, as they call it, augment the price of hops.

Another and most barefaced illustration of this is the manner in which this tax upon tobacco is managed. Now, while a heavy additional tax is put upon tobacco by this bill, one of the largest and most valuable staples of the Southwest, no additional tax is put upon cigars; and why? Because Connecticut leaf, that enters into the manufacture of this luxury, has to be protected, and to protect it it is exempted.

The investigation of this subject led me into a comparison of the excise duties paid in my own district with those paid at the East. I found the six New England States paid revenue, as follows for the year 1874:

Connecticut.....	$580,379 00
Maine.....	123,089 45
Massachusetts.....	2,761,004 95
New Hampshire.....	245,679 19
Rhode Island.....	233,164 81
Vermont.....	56,316 94

Total.....$4,039,932 21

During the same year my own district paid internal revenue to the Government in the sum of $7,208,887.51, almost twice as much as all the New England States put together. And a further examination shows that while the New England States fell off nearly a million and a half from the year 1873 to 1874, and that all other Eastern States paid less in 1874 than in the previous year, Cincinnati increased her revenue to the Government. A further examination of the tables I have read shows that in the year 1874 one manufacturer of spirits in the Cincinnati district paid more revenue for the support of the Government than any one of the six New England States except Massachusetts; and that one manufacturer of beer in Cincinnati paid more revenue than the entire State of Vermont; and that the manufacturers of beer alone in Cincinnati pay more revenue for the support of the Government than any one of the six New England States, except Massachusetts and Connecticut; while further examination shows that the manufacturers of tobacco in the Cincinnati district pay more revenue for the support of the Government than any New England State except Massachusetts; while a further examination shows that Cincinnati pays more internal revenue than the State of Pennsylvania, or any Eastern State except New York.

Notwithstanding all this amount of tax paid by my own district, which is only an example of what the West is doing by the way of revenues for the support of the Government, it is proposed to put upon us the additional unjust tax provided for in this bill.

Mr. Chairman, this is all wrong, and if persisted in will loosen and eventually destroy the bonds of union that hold us together as a common country. There is no wrong more aggravating, certainly none more cruel or unjust, than unequal taxation. While one class is favored, the other class is not only robbed but made to feel the robbery as if they were serfs, having no control in the Government that was organized for their protection. This inequality becomes doubly an evil when it takes on a sectional form and arrays one part of our country against the other. The late civil war taught us a lesson of this sort that should never be forgotten.

The Cincinnati Gazette, one of the oldest and ablest republican papers in the country, in an editorial upon the increase of the tax upon tobacco and whisky, gives some wholesome advice which I now read. I hope gentlemen upon the opposite side of this Chamber, and particularly those from the South and the West, will give attention to this article. The writer has studied and understands the subject; and knows, as we should know, that this increased taxation is levied upon already overtaxed western products.

TAXING TOBACCO FROM 250 TO 500 PER CENT.

Upon what principle of justice or of practical revenue can the Committee on Ways and Means propose to add 4 cents a pound to the already enormous tax of 20 cents on tobacco? The present tax is at the rate of from 200 to 400 per cent. ad valorem, a rate which has no basis in justice, which is so great as to stimulate all sorts of frauds and evasions, and to make the complete collection almost impossible; yet it is proposed to add 4 cents a pound, and increase the injustice and the difficulty of collection.

Is it because the use of tobacco is a vice, an evil, a curse, and it is intended to make those who use it smart for it? Then what is the nature of the use of tea and coffee? They are nothing but stimulants. They are no more a necessity than tobacco; but they are free. Why this discrimination?

Tobacco is an article of almost universal use by the laboring class. They find solace in it. No one is such a fool as to suppose the addition of 4 cents to the tax will stop the use. It will only add to the burdens of the laboring class, and take so much from their other comforts. Upon what principle does the committee propose this addition to an already outrageous burden? It is sheer robbery. The writer is not tainted with the tobacco "vice," and therefore speaks without bias in demanding by what right the committee singles out this article, which more than any other is an article of comfort of the poor and the laboring classes, for this special and enormous burden.

This is not honest revenue legislation. It is a paltry dodge. The committee thinks to dodge the consequence of raising the taxes by the pretense of laying a penalty on an evil. This is a transparent fraud. Secondly, the restrictive effect of the tax is made to bear on a product and manufacture which are mostly western, and the West is made to carry the financial burden of this enormous levy until it is distributed. This makes the committee very generous in adding to this burden, and reluctant to lay even a just revenue rate on some other articles.

Such a rate as the present can never be completely collected. All sorts of illegitimate evasions will be invented, and Congress will be continually called upon to legalize these. It has but recently escaped one of them. The high tax turned consumption to the raw leaf. Then Congress had to resort to the tyrannical measure of forbidding anybody to sell the raw leaf in small quantities. Thus a farmer may not sell a neighbor a stem of leaves. This in a free country! And now Congress is waylaid with schemes to allow the producers to sell, say, 100 pounds.

There arbitrary measures and foolish attempts to legalize evasions would be unnecessary if the tax were at a judicious revenue rate. It is now twice too high. To add to it is to break down collections and diminish revenue. This and the proposal to raise the whisky tax are schemes which dodge the business of honest revenue legislation, and seek the cover of a false moral and beneficial pretense. Whenever any change shall be made in the tobacco and whisky excises, they should be reduced. They can be made more productive by this course. They will surely be made less productive by raising them.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I repeat that I do not believe there is any necessity for additional taxation; that by proper economy we can reduce the expenses of the Government so that the revenue now collected will be sufficient for all purposes. If, as it is claimed by some, the revenues are going to continue to decrease, that is only an additional evidence of the increasing poverty of the people, and should only stimulate the managers of the Government to more rigid economy.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. NIBLACK. I yield now seven minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CHITTENDEN.]

Mr. CHITTENDEN. Two or three weeks ago, when our last tariff exploit was before this House for consideration, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means dropped some remarks which amounted to a broad and gratuitous reflection on the character of New York merchants. I know, sir, that he meant no harm, but I felt at the time very much, I presume, as he would have felt if his professional duties had brought him in contact with two or three hundred New York merchants in the chamber of commerce, and after he had made his speech the leading merchant present should have risen and said "Massachusetts lawyers make their money by misleading the public and cheating their clients." I do not allude now to his unguarded language, Mr. Chairman, to complain of it, but I ask that it may be my warrant for some freedom of speech on this occasion on which I might not have ventured under other circumstances.

I believe in the sinking fund, and would support it by all proper means; but I am opposed to the bill now before the committee. I regard it as unjust, arbitrary, and as insufficient. It is a thing to be denounced and strangled without any unnecessary labor of statistics or argument. The revenue sought is not in it.

Sir, I listened to the gentleman's advocacy of his bill a few days ago with an eager desire to be instructed by him, but finding that his most material statements of facts were grave errors, his arguments only crystallized my hostility to the measure. It is of course impossible to answer his speech of ninety minutes in the seven minutes kindly given me by my friend from Indiana; but if I have good luck I will strike one or two fair and square blows at his ranting within that time. I pass over the first three sections of the bill. There are gentlemen here who will take care of whisky and tobacco and lucifer matches. I have no time to deal with them. I come to the fourth section, and without meaning to reflect in the slightest degree on the Committee on Ways and Means, I say that there is embodied in that section as presented and as printed a bold and glaring fraud. It has been discovered—thanks to merchants of New York—that the words in that section "not including tank bottoms," &c., mean nothing more and nothing less than a revival of the old and famous leaden-statue business. The committee have been duped, but it is a comfort to know they have agreed that the art feature of the bill shall not be insisted upon or even tolerated. The fourth section is also flagrantly unjust. It taxes a pound of sugar, pure and simple, which costs 2½ cents in Cuba, 2½ cents gold when it arrives in New York, or 90 per cent. on its first cost, and tea and coffee are still permitted to enter our ports free. What have demagogues who clamor vociferously against a tax on tea and coffee to say about a tax of 90 per cent. on sugar?

It is perfectly well known to all who have given any attention to the subject that tea and coffee are the most legitimate and feasible objects for taxation known to our commerce. This was forcibly demonstrated on this floor by Hon. Mr. Kerr, from Indiana, on the 16th of March, 1872. Having no time to read, I ask permission to print, in connection with my remarks, two brief extracts from the speech of Mr. Kerr, which I cordially commend to everybody:

COFFEE.

But the importation of coffee during the calendar year 1871 was 321,636,707 pounds, equal to 8½ pounds for each person in the country. The total importation is estimated at $33,725,017 in gold, and the duty per pound is 3 cents, being less than 31 per cent. ad valorem, and it paid to the Treasury $9,650,601. It therefore cost the consumers per capita a trifle less than 25 cents, and did not compel them to pay a penny to monopoly. It is a revenue tax, pure and simple; costs the people what it pays the Government; builds up no stupendous fortunes at the expense of the people; fosters no corrupt corporations or "rings," and bars the door against no competition. Then why reduce it? Or where can you obtain $9,650,601 in revenue that will cost the people less? Nowhere. Not in the whole list of taxable articles, whether of domestic or foreign production. The people are entitled to have their taxes cost them the least possible sum. True and honest statesmanship will not make them cost one cent more.

TEA.

Let us take another subject of taxation for comparison. In the calendar year 1871 the importation of tea was 59,622,145 pounds, equal to 1½ pounds per capita, and the duty is 15 cents per pound, yielding in revenue $8,943,321, so that the average cost of this duty per capita is just 22½ cents. And every dollar it costs the people it pays the Treasury. It is pure revenue, with not a cent for "protection," monopolies, rings, favorites, or tariffed robbers. There is no possibility of imposing any tariff tax that will pay so much in revenue and cost less to the people. It builds up no ill-gotten fortunes or powerful corporations, and does not expel competition nor violate the law of fair play. It is impossible to impose a protective duty on tea or coffee. There is no domestic producer of them to protect. Hence the protectionists want them free. They want no tariff taxes imposed that will not pay them as much or more than they pay the Treasury.

The fifth section of the bill is a stupendous bid for endless new inventions of revenue frauds at a time when the honest commerce of the country is baffled, blighted, and ground to death. On the whole, Mr. Chairman, after much study of it and without fear, I denounce the bill as a comprehensive blunder. It is a blunder which this Congress may not enact with impunity, a blunder which shall clothe republican supremacy in these Halls with merited contempt—I did not mean to say contempt—I meant discredit. It is a blunder which the people will resent, and which the next Congress will hasten to repeal; a blunder which will make the tariff legislation of this Congress a by-word and a laughing-stock of the whole civilized world. Why, sir, it is only Monday week since the President finished our last tariff bill. May the Congress of the United States rob and afflict the commerce of this great people by monthly tariff acts?

Do you ask me, then, what I would do with the sinking fund? If my good friend from Indiana will give me a minute more by the clock I will answer that question. Let your Postmaster-General square his own accounts; resist the lobby; stop squandering; reduce your appropriations and let your employes work for ten hours a day if they like, and pay them accordingly. Leave the people to help themselves. Tell them not to bring all their old chairs up here to be mended. If these common-sense measures fail to restore your sinking fund, put on moral courage and tax tea and coffee. That is what it is all coming to as sure as the sun shines in the heavens. Put a tax on now; the people like courage. They know what is right and will always support and applaud you when you do what is right.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] plaintively spoke the other day of the tremor that came rushing into the committee-room on all the wires, from all points of the compass. That is the lightning which pervades every section of his bill; pass it and the thunder will swiftly follow, to shake him as the leaf is shaken by the wind.

Sir, I protest against another tariff act this session unless applied to tea and coffee.

Mr. NIBLACK. I yield now twelve minutes to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HARRIS.]

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, in the brief time allotted me I propose to discuss so much of the bill under consideration as refers to the internal tax, and especially that part which proposes to increase the tax on manufactured tobacco, and to prove its injurious effects on the people of Virginia of all classes, the planter, the manufacturer, and the laborer.

I know, sir, it is said in regard to tobacco "the consumer pays the tax." When I refer to the fact that Virginia pays more tax than all New England combined, the same answer is given me. It may be true that the consumer does ultimately pay the tax, but it is equally true that the higher you tax an article the less of it is consumed, and therefore the demand is diminished in the same proportion. To that extent the producer is oppressed by high taxes. We have to reason but a moment to see the bad effect a high tax has on the producer, manufacturer, and all labor employed in growing and manufacturing tobacco. When we reflect that the tax per pound is more than the value of the article when manufactured, and that before the same can be sold this enormous tax must be paid, the injurious effects of the tax on all classes becomes too apparent. For instance, a manufacturer has on hand one million pounds of tobacco. Before he can sell it he must by some means raise in money for the purchase of stamps $200,000. How is he to raise this large sum? Unless he is a man of more wealth than usual, he is compelled to mortgage his tobacco to enable him to raise the money for the purchase of stamps. Then being mortgaged, he must sell whether he gets paying prices or not.

Again, when he cannot find prompt sales for his tobacco, the manufacturer is not only laying out of his capital invested in the article but is losing the interest on the money invested for tax. That being greater than the value of the article, he is compelled to sell on a good or a bad market lest the interest on the money so expended will soon consume the value of the tobacco. Let me illustrate by taking a case precisely parallel which gentlemen from non-tobacco regions will more readily comprehend. The average value of wheat, say, is $1 per bushel, and corn 50 cents. How would you like a law requiring the farmer before he could move his wheat or corn to pay a tax of $1 per bushel on the wheat and 50 cents per bushel on the corn? True, when he sells he will get $2 per bushel for his wheat and $1 for his corn, thus recovering back the tax which he has paid. But he loses the interest on the tax from the time of the purchase of the stamps until the sale of his grain. Therefore it will be seen that the farmer before he can sell his wheat or his corn must raise as much money as it is worth to pay the Government in advance of any sale. The effect would be, unless he was a moneyed man, he would be compelled from each crop to lay aside half his sales to meet the tax of next year.

Suppose another case equally as parallel, that manufacturers of all kinds, in advance of their sales, had to pay to the Government the full value of their goods, every one must see at once the effect this would have on the business of the country. It would require double the capital to carry it on. The manufacturer insures the Government its tax, while, if from accident or failure of a purchaser to pay, the manufacturer not only loses his goods and all they have cost him, but he loses as well their value, which he has paid to the Government. Would the manufacturers of the country submit for one moment to such a tax? No, sir; never. Yet it is just as legal and as practicable to tax other and all manufacturers as it is those of tobacco. But it said the use of tobacco is a vice, and therefore must be made to bear this great burden. If it is a vice it is common to all mankind, saint as well as sinner. If it be such, and Congress has the power, legislate it out of existence. But so long as tobacco is a legitimate article of traffic, Congress has no more right by indirection to legislate against its manufacturers than it has to legislate against any other business.

Pardon the digression. I know it is labor lost in the effort to prove Congress ought not to tax tobacco. But I do hope, and I have a right to expect, if it can be shown that the proposed additional tax of 4 cents per pound on manufactured tobacco will not increase the revenue, but greatly injure a large class of our people, that this House will not pass the bill now under consideration. The experience of the Government proves that the tax of 20 cents per pound will bring in more revenue than it did at 32 cents. The last fiscal year was the first under the new rate. Notwithstanding the universal depression in all classes of business, the revenue derived from tobacco at 20 cents per pound was within a small amount of the sum raised at 32 cents per pound. But as the country is recovering from the shock to trade, the tobacco business is recovering, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue says:

From the month of November, 1873, up to the present time (November 18, 1874) there has been a steady increase of collections from this source over any previous corresponding period. The largest amount ever collected in any one quarter from tobacco was collected during the first quarter of the current fiscal year, which reaches the sum of $10,162,954. Should corresponding relative collections continue to be made for the remaining three quarters, the receipts from this source alone will aggregate for the current year in round numbers $36,000,000.

Here we have the emphatic declaration of the Commissioner that for the last year there is a steady increase over any corresponding period, and that more tax was collected for the last quarter than ever was collected in any one quarter before. Now, if the collections are increasing and producing more revenue at 20 cents than at 32 cents a pound, why make a change? Why again unsettle business, crush many honest men who have bought tobacco at the present rate of tax and must sell it under the increased rate, and turn thousands of poor laborers out of employment? This trade of all others requires uniform and fixed rates of tax. It cannot exist under uncertain and variable rates. The manufacturer does not know what price to pay for the leaf if the tax is to be raised on him before he can manufacture and market his tobacco. Thus the whole business is paralyzed and made to suffer by this ever changing the laws. You see the effect. Millions of pounds of tobacco are doubtless now sold at a given price to be delivered some months hence. Put on this 4 cents per pound, which is more than an average profit, and you utterly ruin the seller who contracted under existing rates of tax.

I stated low taxes increased the demand, and therefore increased the production of tobacco. In proof of this, I again quote from the last report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who says:

The actual production of manufactured tobacco was in excess of any previous year by over two million pounds, and the exportation to foreign countries was in excess of any previous year by nearly three-quarters of a million pounds.

Upon the whole, the results for the year are highly satisfactory and indicate a prosperous condition of this great national branch of industry, and show it to be a reliable source of revenue to the national Treasury even during a season of general business depression.

Here we have the positive proof of the great increase of manufactured tobacco under the lower rates of 20 cents per pound. This high rate of tax bears hardest on our laboring class at the South. It is a plain proposition. If 20 cents a pound brings in as much revenue as 32 cents did, then there must be 80 per cent. more tobacco handled, thus furnishing labor to 80 per cent. more hands. Are you ready to increase the tax, and to that extent diminish the labor and deprive the poor man of his daily bread, without any corresponding benefit to the Government? Surely not.

As the present rate of tax is working so admirably and bringing in more revenue than the higher rate, what right have we to be making experiments at the expense of the people? It is cruel and oppressive to our laboring classes and unjust and bad faith to our planters and manufacturers for Congress to unsettle this "great national branch of industry" by running the scale of tax up, then down, then up again, in search of the exact point at which it will bring in the largest amount of revenue. Tobacco is unlike all other articles of traffic. For instance, a merchant buys a cargo of goods to-day, he knows he can sell them before the tariff is changed, because the articles which he buys are ready for use; but not so with tobacco. The manufacturer of tobacco must buy the leaf one year to be manufactured and sold the next; thus leaving ample time between his purchase and the sale of the goods for Congress to change the tax. Knowing this, he cannot trade with the remotest degree of certainty as to the future. Therefore, for the want of stability in the tax the trade is utterly paralyzed, if not totally destroyed.

This bill operates in another respect greatly to the injury of the tobacco trade. For the reasons just given, all laws changing the tax ought to take effect in future and not on the passage of the bill. Millions of pounds of manufactured tobacco have been contracted to be delivered in the future at a fixed price. These contracts were made with reference to existing tax. Now add 4 cents to each pound, and the seller is utterly ruined and all his hands turned out of employment. I ask the Clerk to read as a part of my argument the following letter, which I have received from one of the most intelligent tobacco men of Richmond, Virginia:

RICHMOND, February 12, 1875.

DEAR SIR: I see the Committee on Ways and Means have reported an additional tax of 4 cents per pound on manufactured tobacco. As your friendly interest in this important part of the business of our State is well known, I address you in its behalf, requesting you to oppose its passage, or at least strive to have the bill so amended as to take effect on the 1st of July next. If this bill take immediate effect, it will paralyze the manufacturing interest for some time to come and throw thousands out of employment.

Yours, truly,

Hon. JOHN T. HARRIS,
Washington, District of Columbia.

S. H. FRAZIER.

This illustrates, Mr. Chairman, what I have said. These manufacturers have engaged to deliver manufactured tobacco in future at a given price. Now, add on 4 cents per pound more before it is manufactured and you render it utterly impossible for him to fill his contract; hence his business is suspended and all his hands are turned adrift. But postpone its effect until he can work up the leaf on hand, and it gives him a fair show for living. This principle is acknowledged in the bill by the sixth section, which exempts from its operation goods on ship on the 10th instant and bound for the United States, or any such goods in warehouses at the date of the passage of this act. Why this exemption? Because it would be manifestly unjust to the purchaser to raise the tariff on his goods between the date of purchase and day of sale or delivery, and thus utterly destroy him. The effect is equally as ruinous to the manufacturer of tobacco who has bought the leaf, but before he can manufacture and sell or deliver 4 cents per pound—equal to 25 per cent.—is added to his tobacco. The sixth section amply guards the trade of New England, but when we come to articles grown and manufactured in the South, there is not only no protection, but on whisky, where the contract of tax is perfected between the Government and manufacturer, the tax reverts back and retaxes goods already taxed according to law. These discriminations are as palpable as they are unequal, unjust, and oppressive. God grant the day may soon come when the Representatives of the people may look to the interest of the country from an impartial stand-point and do exact justice to all. Then we will have universal love, fraternity, and good will toward the Government and prosperity among the people.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. NIBLACK. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. BRIGHT.]

Mr. BRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, as a matter of course it would be impossible in the five minutes of time which I have, through the kindness of my distinguished friend from Indiana, [Mr. NIBLACK,] to discuss the grave questions which arise out of this bill. I rise merely to enter my protest against its passage, and only to make a few suggestions in regard to it.

The first suggestion is that this bill is unnecessary. Sir, when we look at the expenditures of this Government since 1865, amounting up to the grand aggregate of nearly $4,400,000,000, it becomes a matter of importance to the House and the country to inquire into the extravagant expenditures of the administration of the Government.

Why, sir, the country is bleeding to death with taxation, and still we are called upon for additional taxation instead of applying the pruning-knife to extravagances and paring them down. We see the mouths of our tax wounds sluicing the Government with revenues, and yet we are called upon to enlarge the orifices that we may have a still further depletion of the people. For one, I will never give my consent to such a policy. As the Government preaches economy to the people, let the Government set the example.

Another suggestion as to the tax on whisky. The honor of the country is involved in that tax. Much of that whisky is now in bond under contracts with the Government. Yet, like the miller that has received the grain, after once telling it you propose to toll it again to the lasting dishonor of the Government. Whatever may be the moral questions involved either in the manufacture or in the use of ardent spirits, it is a matter of commercial traffic; and so far as the traffic is concerned it is recognized by the Government, and those who engage in the traffic are entitled to the fair dealing of the Government. I never will put in peril nor temporize with the honor of the Government in relation to it.

Another suggestion in relation to the tobacco tax. My voice has been heard heretofore in relation to this matter. I have denounced it as unconstitutional. Tobacco and cotton are the first crude productions of the soil which have ever been taxed by any Congress since the existence of the Government. This tax can find no sanctuary either under the apportionment or uniformity rule of taxation. It is not pretended that it falls under the apportionment rule. It cannot fall under the uniformity rule, for we can as easily enact the uniformity of the climates and soils as the uniformity of the tobacco tax. The seven tobacco States pay 1,400 per cent. more of this tax than all the other sections of the United States. It is unnecessary for us to discuss the use of tobacco. It is one of the great agricultural productions, and it meets with all the other productions at the money point. It is converted into the bread and meat and clothing of six hundred thousand laborers who are this day engaged in its production.

We should remember that a tax on tobacco operates as a tax on the land, the labor, and expenses employed in the production. Increase the pressure of taxation, and it may not be long before there is an exodus of laborers from the tobacco-fields.

In behalf of the Constitution of the United States; in behalf of six hundred thousand laborers; in behalf of the labor and resources of the tax-burdened States; in behalf of the harmony of all our industries, I protest against the passage of this bill.

I protest against the Government installing itself landlord of all the tobacco-fields, to exact a rent-charge from the toiling laborer.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. NIBLACK. Mr. Chairman, I regret that I have been unable to agree with the Committee on Ways and Means in reporting the bill which we now have under discussion. One year ago, when it was recommended that we should increase the revenues of the Government by additional taxation, the Committee on Ways and Means, after full discussion, determined that there was no such exigency upon the Government in that respect as the Secretary of the Treasury seemed to imply in his communication to the House of Representatives, which went to that committee for its consideration. We agreed to postpone the question of increased taxation for another year. The results of that year in the collection of our revenues and in meeting the demands on the Government have demonstrated the wisdom of that action on the part of the Committee on Ways and Means.

It is true that very recently there has been some falling off in the amount of revenues collected. But I have reason to believe, and other gentlemen who are better informed upon this question than I am corroborate this view, that this falling off is from the very necessity of the case temporary, and not likely in all human probability to continue during the next twelve months. If it were necessary for the honor of the Government and for the preservation of the public faith, I would agree to impose taxes upon something or other, unpleasant as that may be in times like these, and would cheerfully co-operate in any reasonable plan by which the revenues of the Government might be either temporarily or permanently increased. But I am not convinced that there is any absolute necessity for any increased tax upon anything at this time, and I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] made that pretty clear the other day in his very able speech on this bill.

That we can get fairly and honorably through another year without more taxes if we will I have no doubt.

That there ought to be a revision of the tariff laws of the country I have contended for years—ever since the close of the war—and still contend. But that question is not involved in the proposed increase of taxes at this time. I am informed by a member of the Committee on Appropriations that the appropriations this year will fall $10,000,000 below those of last year. If so, then I think it perfectly safe to say that no increased taxation at this time is necessary for the preservation of the public faith.

Yet we are met at the very threshold with this view of the bill under consideration. This bill is reported in pursuance of a request from the Treasury Department for more revenue. If the response of the Committee on Ways and Means has been a faithful response to that request, this must be a revenue bill, pure and simple. But when I look into its provisions applicable to the duties upon imports, I find it to be essentially a protective tariff bill; a bill for the protection of certain great interests of this country. That is one of its leading and most notable features, and one of its strongest characteristics.

Three years ago the Congress of the United States, acting upon a report from and under the lead of the Committee on Ways and Means of this House, at that time reduced the duties upon certain articles 10 per cent. They did that, as I understand it, then because those duties were unreasonably and unnecessarily high, and because these duties were generally conceded to be too highly protective. I believe even the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] who was then a member of that committee as he still is, agreed to that reduction, believing that the manufacturing interests which he had so much at heart could live under the reduction, and that it was better for the consumers and all other classes of the people that some such reduction as that should be made.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to say that the gentleman is mistaken on that point. I resisted that reduction as vigorously as I could.

Mr. NIBLACK. Then I beg the gentleman's pardon. At all events he does not seem to be very earnest in his efforts to restore that 10 per cent., believing, probably, that other portions of the bill overbalanced the good which in his opinion might arise from the repeal of that 10 per cent. reduction.

Mr. KELLEY. If the gentleman will allow me a moment I will say as briefly as I can that I believe the repeal of that reduction to be the only valuable part of the bill; but the other portions overburden it so much that I must vote against the bill, good as I believe that feature to be.

Mr. NIBLACK. Then I am more than ever confirmed in the belief that this repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction is a protective measure, pure and simple, and has very little to do with the question of revenue so far as the Treasury is interested; hence the proposed increase in this respect is sufficient to compel me to vote against the bill as an entirety, if there were no other objection to it.

But, sir, that is not all. It is proposed to increase the tax upon sugar 25 per cent. That strikes me as a most extraordinary proposition. I have been perfectly amazed (and I have no objection to announcing it here outside of the committee-room) at the action of the committee in refusing to tax tea and coffee, while at the same time proposing to levy this additional duty on sugar. There can be no reason for it except a desire to make the bill more protective in its features, to make it mainly a measure of protection as to sugar. It is said that by this provision, if it should become a law, we shall get $8,000,000 of additional revenue. But with what result? To obtain this additional revenue we increase the price of imported sugar, thereby increasing the price of domestic sugars in the same proportion.

Mr. SYPHER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. NIBLACK. I will before I get through, if I have time. I cannot yield at this moment. Thus there will be imposed upon the consumers of both the foreign and the domestic article an increased burden of somewhere between $20,000,000 and $25,000,000, as estimated by those who are regarded as experts upon this subject. The result then is that in order to obtain $8,000,000 of revenue from sugar, you impose an aggregate burden of from $25,000,000 to $30,000,000 upon the American people.

I voted some years ago to take off the duty from tea and coffee; and in the present condition of things I would not vote to restore it. But, sir, in my judgment, this proposed tax upon sugar ought to be infinitely more odious than the tax upon tea and coffee could possibly be. It is a very much worse tax, a less economical tax so far as revenue is concerned. The increased price on tea and coffee, when they are taxed, all goes into the Treasury, but not so with sugar, as I have shown.

In regard to tea and coffee I will avail myself of this opportunity to say that I voted to strike them from the list of articles subject to taxation just as I have voted to strike off everything in the last six or eight years, with the hope that by striking down these taxes from time to time those controlling both Houses of Congress might be compelled to have a revision of the tariff laws in the interest of revenue rather than in the interest of protection, as nearly all of our tariff laws have been for the past fifteen years.

I would vote to-day to restore the tax on tea and coffee, if we could have some compensation corresponding to what I think would be the burdens imposed by such a tax, and what would be the obnoxious features of the tax to a portion of the American people. But that question is not involved in this bill; and I will not vote to reinstate the tax on tea and coffee as a mere addendum to other provisions of the tariff law now in force.

But what I wish to repeat is that I regard it as most extraordinary that the committee, while failing to report in favor of some tax on tea and coffee, should seek to impose this very large additional duty upon sugar alone, which is as much a necessity to the American people, if not more so, than tea and coffee can possibly be. Tea and coffee are regarded by some as luxuries; but with a large portion of the American people they have come to be considered as matters of necessity. Sugar is equally so, and I believe more so, because it enters much more largely than tea and coffee into the various articles we consume in the way of food, and is already taxed at rates ranging from 1½ to 4 cents per pound.

Upon the subject of whisky, I will say very frankly that I have been from the first willing to make the tax $1 a gallon, if any increase is to be made. That is a round sum; and it would not be likely in my opinion to be ever increased. If I should vote for any increase at all—and I would regard $1 as the utmost limit—I should do so more as an experiment than anything else, to see what would come out of it as a revenue measure and to determine by a practical test whether that article would bear this increase of taxation.

I, in common with other members of the Committee on Ways and Means, have heard both sides of this question argued before the bill was reported, and I am not satisfied that whisky will bear any increased tax, viewed from a revenue stand-point alone—the only point of view in which we are justified in looking at the provision as a part of this bill. In regard to every article there is a point beyond which we cannot go and collect taxes. When taxes go beyond a certain point in taxing any given article, the compensation for an evasion of the revenue laws is so great that persons are found to engage in smuggling or clandestine manufacture, as the case may be. Take the case of diamonds. Under existing tariff laws diamonds pay a duty of only 10 per cent. Why is not a higher duty imposed? Simply because if you impose any great duty smuggling is so easy that you will not be able to collect any duty at all; diamonds being so easily concealed, smuggled diamonds will take the place almost entirely of articles regularly imported. As it is, a large proportion of our diamonds are smuggled into this country in violation of law.

Now that rule applies to everything else, to whisky as much as to every other article. We have seen that under the law of some years ago imposing a tax of $2 there was, as stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] the other day, a failure to collect the full amount of tax, which was accounted for upon the ground that the class of officers then engaged in the collection of our internal revenue were not reliable. Now, I imagine, with due deference to those engaged in the collection of the revenue, that if you should again place the whisky tax at $2 a gallon, you would find the same difficulty in getting officers—subordinate officers especially—who would faithfully collect the tax in spite of the terrible temptations to which they would be subjected. Men are substantially the same under similar circumstances everywhere. To be sure, a man's political theories may have something to do in restraining him. A man believing in strict construction of the powers of the Government, honestly so, is not as likely to enter upon doubtful powers and doubtful expedients as a man of more latitudinarian views. But, sir, upon a more personal view of the case, we dare not trust one class of reasonably honest men more than another where great temptations are involved.

So then I regard it as a conceded position that there is a point beyond which we cannot go. Therefore I am unwilling to risk the price of $1 a gallon, or indeed any substantial increase, for the reason I doubt whether we will make any more money by it and because I am not impressed with the necessity for it at this time.

But the great objection I have to this section is that it proposes to tax the stock of whisky in the hands of wholesalers, whisky which has already paid its tax and received from the Government a quitclaim, a clean discharge; which every stamp on a cask of whisky implies. If it were a time of war or of some other great exigency we might be justified in breaking over and doing such thing as a measure of public safety. But I am informed by those who know more of the subject than I do, by men from my own district in whom I have every confidence, if this tax of whisky on hand be imposed and rigidly enforced it will result in bankrupting a great many dealers in this article, men of good repute and who have striven to do their duty honestly in all their dealings with the Government. I will not be a party in the present case to any additional tax upon whisky which has already paid a tax and gone out upon the market as tax-paid whisky.

I regard the tax on whisky in bond as a measure of great severity—not so strong, not so harsh, however, as taxing whisky on hand, which has already paid a tax, but as a kindred measure. Men have placed whisky in bond under an implied contract with the Government that they shall be allowed to withdraw it on payment of a certain amount of tax within a given time. If this becomes a law it will abrogate that agreement which the Government has made with a large class of its citizens, and I think there is no exigency upon the Government to justify so harsh a measure as this.

It is claimed if we do not tax whisky on hand and in bond the dealers will realize a large advance and make a good deal of profit out of the enhancement of value because of the increased tax. This is a matter upon which the dealers in this article have to take their chances. They have to take the risk at all times of favorable or adverse legislation, and it is one of those incidents to which every dealer in the article of whisky or any other article liable to taxation is necessarily subjected. If he can be benefited by increase of tax upon this article, it is only what is done in almost every case in which additional or new taxes are imposed by the Government. I know no reason why we should be more harsh in reference to men engaged in this trade than any other. When we are prescribing rules for the collection of our revenues, to which they so largely contribute, whether they have chosen the best business or not is not the point involved; it is a question of good faith on the part of the Government in its dealings with its citizens.

Another result of this increase of $1 a gallon on whisky is a supposed consequent necessity of increasing the tariff on foreign brandies so as to protect whisky while competing with them. That will have the effect of diminishing the importation of brandies, and will hence diminish the revenues from them.

As to tobacco, I do not propose to detain the House long, as my time is nearly exhausted. It is a measure, however, to which I have devoted some attention, because a portion of those I have the honor to represent here are deeply interested in the tobacco question also. Under existing laws the manufacture of tobacco is taxed from 200 to 400 per cent. The addition of 4 cents per pound will increase the rates up to from 250 to 500 per cent. Such rate of taxation, it strikes me, is beyond all proportion to the value of the article upon which the taxes are levied. It was well said by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BRIGHT] that it would diminish the consumption of the article, and of course correspondingly decrease the production. Because this happens to be an article which will bear taxation pretty well, because it is an article which gentlemen may dispense with the use of, that is no reason why we should impose upon it an unreasonable, extraordinary, and indefensible rate of taxation.

The same is the case here as in reference to the increase of taxation on whisky. It seems to be acknowledged that we collected on the average more revenue from 20 cents than we did at 32 cents a pound. The higher you increase the rates of taxation the chances are you will correspondingly diminish the chances of collecting all you do charge is, so far as I am capable of judging, as true as to tobacco as anything else. There are a great many ways in which tobacco can clandestinely be used. If you impose great burdens on the manufactured article there will be resort to the old-time fashion of using unmanufactured tobacco, which can be done to a great extent, especially in smoking-tobacco.

I think the proposed increase unwise, to say nothing of the harshness and injustice of it.

Mr. Chairman, rather than enter upon such doubtful legislation as this, if the worst should come to the worst, I would rather resort to a temporary loan to bridge over the emergency and leave it to some future Congress to endeavor to adjust our tariff and internal taxes on a more equitable and reasonable basis than is proposed in this bill.

Mr. O'NEILL. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. NIBLACK. I will hear the gentleman's question, but my time has almost expired.

Mr. O'NEILL. I desire to ask the gentleman whether the Committee on Ways and Means considered the subject of putting a duty upon the articles now upon the free list, or upon any of them? I find that the valuation of the goods imported free of duty was $180,000,000 in the last fiscal year. As a matter of calculation a duty of 5 per cent. on those importations, it will readily be seen, would yield in the aggregate $9,000,000. Did the committee consider whether it would have been detrimental or not to the manufacturing or other interests of the country and people to have recommended a temporary imposition of duties on the very extended list of articles now duty free? The gentleman recollects that several years ago Congress saw fit to make a general reduction of 10 per cent. of the duties on all dutiable articles and materials, and it was done, as I understood it, for reasons which at that time it was supposed by those who voted for the reduction sanctioned that legislation. It certainly was not then or since considered as a question of permanent high or low tariff policy.

The bill now before the committee has in it a section proposing the repeal of the law which made that 10 per cent. reduction, and I sincerely hope it will be repealed. I look upon such a favorable result as being of immense interest to American industry. I am sure the restoration would have a tendency to promote business and to set the people to work again. My object in interrupting my friend from Indiana—and I thank him for yielding to me—was for information. Of course the necessities of life should neither be taxed nor made dutiable while there are luxuries which could well bear the burden of both tax and duty. But whether the Committee on Ways and Means considered it their duty to scan well the free list I think it would be proper for the Committee of the Whole to know.

Mr. NIBLACK. The committee considered that question and agreed not to disturb the free list at the present session of Congress. I mean by this that a majority of the committee so agreed.

Mr. BECK. Mr. Chairman, I will endeavor in the short time allowed me to give the reasons why I oppose the bill as reported by the committee. Of course I can only do it very imperfectly, and must ask leave of the committee to allow me to hand to the reporters some extracts on which I rely to verify what I will say, because I am unable in the crippled condition of my right arm to turn over the books from which I desire to read, as I would otherwise do.

There are two questions presented for the consideration of the House by the Committee on Ways and Means. The first is, Are additional revenues required for the support of the Government? The second, How shall these revenues be raised, if necessary?

As the first proposition, if decided against the necessity, disposes of the other, I shall discuss that before noticing the provisions of the bill. All agree that if the sinking fund has either been sufficiently provided for or the public debt so reduced as to comply with the terms of the law, additional taxation is not required for any other purpose.

It is obvious, and has been admitted by all who have discussed the question, that any addition to the burden of taxation in the present depressed condition of the industries of the country ought to be avoided if it can be done consistently with national faith and honor. I admit that, however onerous increased taxation may be, it must be imposed if our obligations as a people cannot otherwise be faithfully maintained. Believing, however, that we have already complied with all the requirements of law relative to the reduction of our national debt, in accordance with the true spirit and intent of the laws providing therefor, and hoping to be able to show that we can, by reduction of expenditures and by a less onerous form of taxation than that now proposed, provide for whatever deficiency those who differ from me on the first proposition may consider necessary to comply technically as well as equitably with the letter of the law creating a sinking fund, I am opposed to almost every provision of the bill presented by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Gentlemen cannot fail to have observed two remarkable facts in connection with the present demand for money to supply the wants of the sinking fund: The first is the importance attached to the annual provision for that purpose, and the second the magnitude of the amount which the Treasury now claims to be necessary to maintain it. It will be recollected that although the law was originally passed in 1862 providing that 1 per cent. of the entire indebtedness of the country should be set apart as a sinking fund, neither the President, Congress, nor any Secretary of the Treasury from that time until 1869 either made any separate provision for this fund or suggested that any law was violated by the failure to do so, although Chief Justice Chase, Senator Fessenden, and Mr. McCulloch, all men of distinguished ability, thoroughly conversant with the true intent and meaning of all legislation, certainly all specially careful of the interest of the bondholders, were during those years Secretaries of the Treasury. Indeed, for three or four years after the passage of that law it would have been the merest folly to have pretended to comply with the provisions of it.

The public debt of the United States, as shown on page 8, table F, of the last finance report, was, in round numbers, $1,119,000,000, while in 1866 it reached the sum of $2,773,000,000. A sinking fund of 1 per cent. reserved in the face of such a rapidly accumulating debt, would, as I said, have been the sheerest nonsense. Since 1866 we have been steadily and rapidly diminishing the national debt, until at the close of the last fiscal year it amounted, as the finance report shows, to $2,161,000,000; being a reduction, in round numbers, of over $612,000,000, instead of $521,000,000, as stated by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means in his speech the other day. His error consisted in failing to notice the following note appended by the Secretary to the report from which he quoted:

In the amount here stated as the outstanding principal of the public debt are included the certificates of deposit outstanding on the 30th of June, issued under act of June 8, 1872, amounting to $31,730,000 in 1873 and $58,760,000 in 1874, for which a like amount in United States notes was on special deposit in the Treasury for their redemption and added to the cash balance in the Treasury. These certificates as a matter of accounts are treated as a part of the public debt; but, being offset by notes held on deposit for their redemption, should properly be deducted from the principal of the public debt in making comparison with former years.

It will be remembered that when the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] announced that—

All we have done toward the reduction of the public debt, if it could with propriety be applied to the discharge of our obligations to the sinking fund and could with equity be considered sufficiently distributed over all the years, would yet fall short of the requirements of the sinking fund by some $36,000,000.

I denied the correctness of the statement, and requested the publication of the facts upon which he based it, as shown by the following extracts from the RECORD:

Mr. BECK. Is the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. DAWES] officially informed of that fact, so that he can publish it in the RECORD?

Mr. DAWES. I will publish in the RECORD just exactly what the sinking fund required each year, together with just exactly what has been paid into the sinking fund and to the bonds we have purchased outside of the sinking fund. I believe that answers fully the question.

Mr. BECK. Has that information been furnished by the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. DAWES. I have the figures from the Treasury Department. The following table shows the requirements of the sinking fund each year since its enactment:

1863.....	$11,869,584 67
1864.....	20,002,219 92
1865.....	30,441,914 20
1866.....	33,359,455 96
1867.....	34,472,950 62
1868.....	35,961,184 80
1869.....	38,002,018 41
1870.....	39,276,481 04
1871.....	40,423,377 61
1872.....	41,934,725 40
1873.....	44,402,832 76
1874.....	47,409,252 17

Total..... 417,556,000 56

Total amount of bonds purchased on sinking fund account..... $141,612,050 00

Amount purchased in excess of that required for sinking fund account..... 189,241,750 00

Since purchases for that account commenced in 1869..... 323,253,800 00

To this sum may be added other bonds redeemed to the amount I have stated.

Mr. BECK. I want to say to the House just now that there are $400,000,000 and over of 7.30 bonds and 3 per cent. certificates also taken up and canceled that the Secretary of the Treasury has held back, in addition to the other bonds, if he has made the statement the gentleman suggests.

Mr. DAWES. Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] mean to say that the Secretary of the Treasury has not made a true statement of the total amount of the decrease of the public debt?

Mr. BECK. I do mean to say that if the Secretary of the Treasury has said that the only indebtedness we have paid since that law took effect is the 6 per cent. bonds, then he has not made a true statement; and this is why I asked whether the Secretary of the Treasury furnished the statement. We have paid off 7.30 bonds and 3 per cent. certificates to the amount of over $400,000,000, which should be added to the amount of the 6 per cent. bonds in order to give a true statement.

It would be easy to show by reference to the various finance reports that I did not overstate the amount of public debt which had been retired from the close of the war up to the present time. The following will illustrate what I mean:

In the annual Finance Report of 1874, at page 291, the United States Treasurer gives a tabular statement of the currency outstanding at the close of each fiscal year for the last eleven years. By currency outstanding in these statements are intended the issues of the United States Treasury. The items embraced are, old demand notes, legal-tenders, compound-interest notes, one and two year notes, and fractional currency. For the total currency in actual circulation, or otherwise serving indirectly to the same effect in the money market, we take the statements of the United States Treasurer at the dates which we select, and add thereto the amount of 7.30 notes, 3 per cent. certificates, and State-bank notes outstanding, thus:

Treasury currency, 30th June, 1865, according to Treasurer's report.....	$698,918,800
Add 7.30 notes, 31st July, 1865.....	830,000,000
National-bank notes, 3d July, 1865.....	131,452,158
State-bank notes, July, 1865, say.....	240,000,000

Total circulation in July, 1865..... 1,900,370,958

This, however, was the state of the circulation immediately upon the close of the war. Let us now look at the currency account after it was fairly reduced to a peace footing:

Treasury currency, according to Treasurer Spinner, June 30, 1868.....	$444,196,262
Add 7.30 notes, (January 1, 1868).....	240,591,300
Three per cent. certificates, June 30, 1868.....	50,000,000
National-bank notes, July 6, 1868.....	294,908,264
State-bank notes, July 6, 1868, say.....	4,000,000

Total circulation in July, 1868..... 1,033,395,826

Treasury currency, according to Treasurer Spinner, June 30, 1873.....	$401,527,267
Seven-thirty notes.....	274,100
Three per cent. certificates, June 30, 1873.....	30,000
National-bank notes, June 30, 1873.....	344,858,627
State-bank notes, June 30, 1873.....	nil.

Total circulation in July, 1873..... 746,689,994

Treasury currency, 30th September, 1873.....	$402,923,039
Seven-thirty notes, 30th September, 1873.....	260,500
National-bank notes.....	348,007,958

Total currency, 30th September, 1873..... 751,191,497

All these legal-tender notes, 7.30 notes, and 3 per cent. certificates were debts due by the United States, as much so as any other of our bonds; some were doubtless funded, and others paid off and canceled.

But it is unnecessary to go further than the official statement of the reduction of the public debt in the finance report, which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROBERTS] both agree shows that it has been nearly $600,000,000 since 1866—a sum far in excess of what even the Treasury Department now claims that the sinking fund requires in the exaggerated statement laid before the House by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means. Until it became necessary to endeavor to alarm the House in order to induce the passage of this bill, no Secretary, no representative of the Government ever pretended to assert that $417,000,000, or any sum approaching thereto, was or ever had been necessary to supply the wants of the sinking fund. It has always been asserted, and never disputed, that during the administration of Secretary BOUTWELL, a sum sufficient to meet the demands of the sinking fund and all interest thereon was set apart in accordance with the requirements of the act of July, 1870. Indeed there was no sort of excuse for his doing otherwise, as the revenues of the country enabled him to purchase annually many millions of dollars of bonds in excess of what anybody pretended was necessary to comply with the law relative to the sinking fund. The present Secretary furnishes us in his last report with the true state of the account of the Treasury with that fund, which differs so widely from that laid before the House by the chairman of the committee the other day, that I give it entire, so that the true state of facts may appear in contrast with that now paraded for the purpose of frightening Congress into the passage of this bill under the pretense that the good faith and honor of the country are at stake:

TABLE K.—Statement showing the condition of the sinking fund from its institution in May, 1869, to and including June 30, 1874.

Dr.		THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY IN ACCOUNT WITH SINKING FUND.		Cr.
July 1, 1868	To 1 of 1 per cent. on the principal of the public debt, being for the three months from April 1 to June 30, 1868.....	$6,529,219 63	June 30, 1869	By amount of principal purchased, $8,691,000, including $1,000 donation, estimated in gold.....	$7,261,437 30
June 30, 1869	To interest on $8,691,000, being amount of principal of public debt purchased during fiscal year 1869 on this account.....	196,590 00		By accrued interest on the amount of purchases in 1869.....	136,392 56
	Balance to new account.....	672,020 23
		7,397,829 86			7,397,829 86
July 1, 1869	To 1 per cent. on the principal of the public debt on June 30, 1867, $2,588,452,213.94.....	$25,894,522 14	July 1, 1869	By balance from last year.....	$672,030 23
June 30, 1870	To interest on $8,691,000, amount of redemption in 1869.....	521,460 00	June 30, 1870	By amount of principal purchased, $28,151,900 estimated in gold.....	25,893,143 57
	To interest on $28,151,900, amount of principal of public debt purchased during fiscal year 1870 on this account.....	1,254,897 00		By accrued interest on account of purchases in 1870.....	351,003 54
		27,660,879 14		By balance to new account.....	744,711 80
July 1, 1870	To balance from last year.....	$744,711 80			27,660,879 14
June 30, 1871	To 1 per cent. on the principal of the public debt on June 30, 1870, $2,480,627.81.....	24,806,724 28	June 30, 1871	By amount of principal purchased, $29,936,250, estimated in gold.....	$28,694,017 73
	To interest on redemption of 1869, $8,691,000.....	521,460 00		By accrued interest on account of purchases in 1871.....	367,782 53
	To interest on redemption of 1870, $28,151,900.....	1,689,114 00		By balance to new account.....	257,474 32
	To interest on $29,936,250, amount of principal of public debt purchased during fiscal year 1871 on this account.....	1,557,264 50
		29,319,274 58			29,319,274 58
July 1, 1871	To balance from last year.....	$257,474 32	June 30, 1872	By amount of principal purchased, $32,618,450, estimated in gold.....	$32,248,645 22
June 30, 1872	To 1 per cent. on the principal of the public debt on June 30, 1871, $2,353,211,332.32.....	23,532,113 32		By accrued interest on account of purchases in 1872.....	430,908 38
	To interest on redemption of 1869, $8,691,000.....	521,460 00
	To interest on redemption of 1870, $28,151,900.....	1,689,114 00
	To interest on redemption of 1871, $29,936,250.....	1,796,175 00
	To interest on redemption of $32,618,450, amount of principal of public debt purchased during fiscal year 1872 on this account.....	2,059,325 50
	To balance to new account.....	2,823,891 46
		32,679,553 60			32,679,553 60

About $31,000,000 is the amount deemed sufficient for sinking-fund purposes annually by the Treasury account, as shown by their books, and not $47,000,000, as now set forth in the speech of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.]

Mr. DAWES. I do not wish to take up the gentleman's time, but I would like to tell him the reason for the difference between the $31,000,000 and the $47,000,000.

Mr. BECK. I know all about that, but they had to go back to the year 1862 and take all the debt that existed then and add the interest on that and on each subsequent year from that time, giving a construction to the law that neither Secretary Chase, Secretary Fessenden, Secretary McCulloch, Secretary Boutwell, or Secretary Richardson ever thought of, and which the present Secretary of the Treasury in his own report never thought of until either he or the Committee on Ways and Means thought it important that he should make up a statement sufficient to alarm Congress.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. BECK. Let me go on.

Mr. DAWES. I want to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] what is his authority for saying that Secretary Chase and Secretary McCulloch never put that construction upon it?

Mr. BECK. Because during all these years there was no demand and no pretense made that it had to be applied as now insisted on, or that we could not reduce the debt as we were doing by paying off the 7.30 bonds and the 3 per cent. certificates, and reducing our circulation, which was as much a part of our debt as any other part of it. That is my reason for saying so.

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman certainly is not ignorant of a letter in the room of the Committee on Ways and Means from Mr. McCulloch on that subject.

Mr. BECK. I think it likely that Mr. McCulloch, about 1863, when he was working in the interest of the bondholders—I want to speak respectfully of him—may have written such a letter, but if so I never saw it.

But, however that may be, it is obvious that I was right in asserting that it was untrue that the requirements of the sinking fund had either exceeded the reduction of the national debt or approached it by several hundred millions of dollars. And that the statement furnished by the Treasury Department to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means was not only grossly exaggerated, but if true, instead of being thirty-six millions in excess of the reduction of the national debt, was in fact nearly $200,000,000 less.

The tax-payers of the country cannot be charged because the Treasury officials have failed to apply the means furnished them by taxation to the legitimate purposes to which those means should be applied.

The following table of receipts in gold collected from 1861 to 1874 as customs dues, together with the amount of interest payable in those years, will be useful as showing the large amount which the republican managers of the Administration had in their hands to apply to the sinking fund if they had seen fit or deemed it necessary so to do:

Year.	Interest obligations.	Customs receipts.
1861.....	$4,000,174	$39,582,126
1862.....	13,190,324	49,056,398
1863.....	24,729,847	69,050,642
1864.....	53,685,421	102,316,153
1865.....	77,397,712	84,928,260
1866.....	133,067,742	179,046,630
1867.....	143,781,592	176,417,811
1868.....	140,424,046	164,464,599
1869.....	130,694,243	180,048,427
1870.....	129,235,498	194,538,374
1871.....	125,576,565	206,270,408
1872.....	117,357,839	216,370,286
1873.....	104,750,688	188,089,522
1874.....	107,119,815	163,103,833
Total.....	1,305,011,506	2,013,292,469

From the above figures it will be seen that the total customs receipts for the fourteen years embraced in the table were $708,280,963 in excess of the entire interest obligations of the General Government for the same period, all of which large excess, according to the construction now sought to be given to the law of 1862, was next applicable to the payment of the sinking fund as ample revenues were furnished from other sources of taxation to supply all the ordinary wants of the Government. In this connection the following table taken from the Finance Report of 1873, page 12, may be useful to prove more fully the truth of my statement on this subject:

Year.	Expended by Administration.	Collected by taxation.
1867.....	$357,542,675 16	$490,634,010 27
1868.....	377,340,284 86	405,638,083 32
1869.....	322,865,277 80	370,188,256 09
1870.....	309,653,560 75	411,253,477 63
1871.....	292,177,188 25	383,323,944 89
1872.....	277,517,962 67	374,106,867 56
1873.....	290,345,245 33	333,738,204 67
Total.....	2,227,442,194 82	2,768,882,844 43
Collections over expenditures.....		2,227,442,194 82
		541,440,549 61

It will thus be seen that, notwithstanding the enormous expenditures of the Government for the last seven years, the amount coerced from the people which reached the Treasury was yet $541,440,000 greater. More than half of the immense sum collected was in gold.

There can be no pretense, in view of all of these facts, that there was any lack of means to reduce the national debt even far beyond what has been done.

Why, then, I repeat, is this great anxiety shown for increased taxation? Why should the world be told that those who oppose it are either in favor of repudiation or careless of the honor and good faith of the country? Is it not more certainly true that the exaggerated statements which have been made and the clamor which has been raised are for the purpose of obtaining money to use for purposes not legitimate rather than to comply with any honest obligations? When our creditors at home and abroad see that we have in fact not only reduced our debt $600,000,000 since 1866 but have paid off hundreds of millions of floating indebtedness which never appeared on the books of the Treasury—being in the forms of claims against the War, Navy, and other Departments of the Government and settled by sales of our enormous war material—they will readily understand that we are in good faith determined to comply with all of our obligations, no matter under what circumstances contracted, and they will not be alarmed even though our revenues, by reason of panics, commercial revolutions, or occasional blunders of our own, sometimes temporarily fall short, and we are unable each year, without damaging all our business interests, to reduce our debt as fast as we would otherwise do.

The creditors of no other country ever had such assurances of good faith under such circumstances or such rapidly increasing security as ours. In ordinary times the wealth of the country, as shown by reliable statistics, doubles in ten years; which alone doubles the security of the creditor, by doubling the capacity of the debtor to pay.

It is needless for the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means to seek to alarm Congress by telling us, as he did, that it is an open secret that the great bankers of Europe are now refusing to accept our new loan or to convert their old bonds, because they fear our bad faith by failing to provide this year, by additional taxation, for the sinking fund. It does not lie in the mouths of bondholders to complain of our treatment of them, and I have heard of no such complaints; they are the last people in the world who have ground for complaint. All our legislation for the last eight years has been in their interest. Now the 6 per cent. bonds of the United States are from 3 to 4 per cent. above par in gold; and gold itself is purposely kept at a high premium still further to increase their advantages over the other creditors of Government and the mass of the people. We persistently continue to refuse to receive our own legal-tender notes for any part of our customs dues for the sole purpose of keeping up the premium on gold for the benefit of the bondholders and those protected by our tariff.

It would be interesting and perhaps instructive, if time allowed, to show the course of legislation by which this state of things was brought about. It has, however, been repeatedly exposed by myself and others on this floor, and I will not repeat it now. I have, however, read with great interest a remarkable speech made by a distinguished gentleman, formerly a member of this House, the Hon. Daniel W. Voorhees, during the late canvass in Indiana, in which the facts bearing upon this subject were so strikingly set forth that I cannot refrain from using a few extracts from it—only remarking that I have not had an opportunity to verify the exact facts stated therein, but have been assured by him lately that they were true and were prepared with great care. The extract I refer to is as follows:

In 1862 the Government sold 6 per cent. 5.20 bonds to the amount of $60,982,450, and received for them greenbacks at their face, dollar for dollar. The demand now is that these bonds shall be paid in gold at their face, and yet, owing to the depreciation of greenbacks at the time of their purchase, only $44,030,649 in gold was paid for them. This makes a clear speculation of $16,951,801 in favor of the bondholder in this first transaction. On this clear speculation the bondholders have received interest for eleven years, amounting to $11,187,188, which, added to its principal, makes the sum of $25,138,989 already received in that single transaction, for which not one dollar was ever paid.

In 1863 the Government sold of the same kind of bonds $160,987,550, for which it received an equal amount in greenbacks. A standard authority placed the average price of gold during that year at $1.58 in currency. It will thus be seen that these bonds cost their purchasers but $101,890,854 in gold, leaving a profit of $59,096,696, without including the interest. For ten years, however, the Government has paid interest on this naked profit, this principal, without any consideration. The interest thus paid amounts to $35,458,017, which, added to this fictitious principal, makes $94,555,713, now in the pockets of the bondholders on that year's operation, for which they never paid anything.

In 1864 the Government sold these bonds, amounting on their face to $381,292,250. Again the Government received only depreciated paper for these bond obligations, and at that time our currency was enormously depreciated, if tried by the gold standard. The price of gold during that year was at an average of 201 in currency. The sale of these bonds, therefore, which are now assumed to be gold bonds, only realized to the Government $189,697,636 in gold, less than one-half of their face value. There was left to the capitalists who speculated in them as purchasers the immense profit of $191,594,614. This was the amount of the broker's shave, and on it he has drawn interest from the people for ten years, amounting at this time to $114,956,768. Add this to its principal, which stands as pure speculation, and we find that the bondholders have made as clear gain, as something for nothing, the sum of $306,551,382 on the one year's transaction of 1864.

In 1865 the Government sold bonds to the amount of $279,746,150, on which it suffered a discount of $71,532,060 at the hands of the capitalists. The interest already paid by the people on this discount reaches $38,627,307, making this year's operation realize for the bondholders $110,159,367, for which not one cent was ever paid.

In 1866 the Government sold $124,914,400 of its bonds, for which it received depreciated paper currency amounting to $88,591,773 in gold, according to the then price of gold. The difference between the face of these bonds and the amount they realized to the Government was $36,322,627. Eight years' interest received on this shave amounts to $17,434,556. Adding this interest and its principal together, and we find that the bondholders have received $53,757,183 out of this year's sale of bonds, for which not one dollar ever left their coffers or reached the United States Treasury.

In 1867 the Government sold of its bonds the immense sum of $421,469,550. The purchasers paid for them $303,215,503, leaving a clear profit to them on the operation of $118,254,047. Taking the interest on this profit for seven years, amounting to $49,661,694, already paid, and the speculators have in their pockets, if these bonds are to be paid in gold, the sum of $167,915,741 on this year's brokerage, and for which they never gave a farthing in consideration.

In 1868 the Government sold its bonds to the still further amount of $425,443,800. Their purchasers paid $312,836,323 for them, clearing by that annual speculation the sum of $112,617,477. Add six years' interest on this bonus, amounting to $40,542,288, to the bonus itself, and we find that these traffickers in a nation's perils have received in this operation $153,159,765 of the people's money, for which not the slightest equivalent was ever paid into the United States Treasury.

In addition to the foregoing 6 per cent. bonds, the Government at different times during the years mentioned issued and sold $195,139,550 of bonds bearing 5 per cent. They realized to the Government $122,957,410, thus leaving to the purchasers a net profit of $72,182,140. Interest already paid on this profit amounts to $36,115,734, which, added to the profit itself, makes the sum of $108,297,864 as the amount now in the pockets of the bondholders growing out of their operations in the 5 per cent. bonds, and for which there is not the slightest consideration.

An account of the bondholders' clear profits arising from no investments at all may therefore be stated in the following tabular form:

1862.....	$25,138,989
1863.....	94,555,713
1864.....	306,551,382
1865.....	110,159,367
1866.....	53,757,183
1867.....	167,915,741
1868.....	253,159,765
On account of 5 per cent. bonds.....	98,297,864

Total..... 1,012,536,004

If these facts are substantially true, and I have no doubt they are, they demonstrate how utterly groundless any complaints on the part of the bondholders would be, if such are in fact made. When in addition to all that we recall the frequent contractions of the currency made in the face of increasing business and our growing wants for their benefit, and recall the first act of General Grant's administration falsely entitled "An act to strengthen the public credit," but really an act to appreciate the bonds and fill the pockets of their holders at the expense of the tax-payers of the country; and still further couple with all these things the enormous advantages given to them as national bankers, it is impossible to believe that any complaint can come from that class of our creditors unless it be on the hypothesis that the more they get the more they want, and that having received so much to which they were not entitled they imagine that tax-payers have no rights which they are bound to respect.

If the letter or spirit of the act of 1862 which requires that the gold paid into the Treasury from duties on imported goods shall be set apart as a special fund, first to pay in coin the interest on the bonds and notes of the United States, and second, to the purchase or payment of 1 per cent. of the entire debt of the United States has been in any way disregarded, it has been in the interest of the bondholders by using it to pay the principal as well as the interest of the bonds held by them. When that illegal procedure was going on, if the faith and honor of the country was so dear to them, they might have shown their patriotism by insisting that after their interest was paid, the gold in the Treasury could not be used for the purpose of paying their principal, but could only be applied to the sinking fund, so long as any portion of it was needed for that purpose. No such suggestions were then heard, and no complaints from them should be heeded now. If the account in the Treasury with the sinking fund has not been correctly kept Congress can order it to be adjusted now, ample funds having been furnished to satisfy any reasonable mind that we are extinguishing our debt faster than we are compelled to do by any law or any obligation. Secretary

Richardson was right when he said, on page 85 of his book concerning the public debt, that—

The great revenues of the country in excess of the expenditures have enabled the Secretary to purchase bonds much more extensively than the sinking-fund law absolutely requires. And the debt has been more rapidly reduced than by the operation of that fund alone. But the sinking fund itself will extinguish the entire national debt in about thirty years, or soon after the close of the nineteenth century; the exact time depending upon the price at which the purchases may be made in the future.

But assume that the republican majority have determined, even in the present distressed condition of the country when our revenues have fallen off, not because as some gentlemen allege of the prudence and economy of our people, but rather, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] truly said the other day, because in their poverty and destitution arising from the prostrate condition of all industries they are unable to purchase what they need, to impose additional burdens for the purpose of still further enhancing the value of our already inflated bonds; the subjects of taxation ought to be so selected as to bear with as little weight as possible upon the poorer classes, and to injure as little as may be the industries of the people.

It will be observed that the bill reported by the committee, with one exception relative to matches, either imposes additional burdens upon southern and western industries, or seeks by additional protection to still further increase the prices of necessary commodities. And it is extremely problematical whether this bill, if passed, will not in most instances reduce rather than increase our revenues. It will certainly greatly derange many important industries from which we are now deriving large amounts. The proposed increase of tax from 70 cents to $1 per gallon on distilled spirits is, in the face of the past experience of the country, certainly an unwise proposition; while the proposition to tax stock in bond, or in the hands of rectifiers and wholesale dealers as well as distillers, is not only a violation of good faith, but would, if the United States occupied the relation toward its citizens that one individual occupies to another, be annulled by the courts as a violation of solemn contract. No government can afford to occupy such a position toward its people except in cases of the direst necessity, and I assume that these provisions of the bill will be stricken out. Hundreds of distillers all over the country have contracted for the delivery of their product free of tax up to the close of the distilling season, upon the basis of the 70-cent tax. Utter ruin, without fault on their part, will be entailed upon them by the proposed change in the rates of taxation, and while they may protect themselves to some extent by ceasing to produce hereafter, the imposition of the increased tax upon the stock already produced would be such an arbitrary and oppressive exercise of power that the statement of such results ought to cause Congress to refuse to sanction the proposition.

It will be remembered that neither the President in his message nor the Secretary of the Treasury in his report suggested an increase of tax exceeding 10 cents per gallon; the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, himself a subordinate of the Treasury, not assuming to make any suggestions to Congress, only saying that he believed he could collect the increased tax if imposed.

The Committee on Ways and Means has therefore acted on its own want of knowledge rather than upon reliable information in proposing to increase the tax to $1 per gallon; and it ought to be known, because it was communicated to the committee by the Secretary for the purpose of having it known by Congress, that after his report was written he had consulted with many of the best-informed men in the country as to the effect of the proposed increase of taxation upon the revenue, the result of which was that he seriously apprehended that any increase of taxation would prove injurious. It is therefore safe to say that the committee is not sustained by the head of the Treasury Department in the confident belief expressed that anything like the same proportion can be collected at the rate of $1 per gallon that is now collected at 70 cents. I have conversed with other well-informed gentlemen upon the subject, among others Mr. Orton, formerly Commissioner of Internal Revenue, whose intelligence and ample means of information is known to many members. He, in common with the others, believes that we are obtaining more revenue now at present rates than we would if the tax was increased to $1.

The country has tried the experiment of exorbitant taxation of distilled spirits. When the tax was $2 per gallon we received only about $13,000,000 per annum, although the product was almost if not quite as great as it is now. Certainly one hundred millions a year was stolen, nearly all of it, with the connivance of the Government officials, and so it will always be when we attempt to collect a tax wholly disproportionate to the value of the product taxed. Distilled spirits sell on an average at not exceeding 95 cents per gallon, or 25 cents without the tax. Seventy cents is over 275 per cent. of the value of the article. One dollar would be 400 per cent. The temptation to steal becomes almost irresistible under such a pressure.

Human nature is no better now than it was six years ago, at which time General Schenck, then chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, declared upon this floor that at least 90 per cent. of the enormous frauds then committed were perpetrated by direct collusion between our own officials and the distillers and rectifiers. The Commissioner thinks that there is great virtue in his system of stamps.

Doubtless there is when honest men handle them; but they are utterly valueless when officials, either through dishonesty or because of temptation they cannot resist collude with the producers to cheat the Government for private gain. Even at present rates there is a much larger percentage of fraudulent distillation than the Commissioner knows of or is willing to admit. Nearly all last year whisky was manufactured in New Orleans from grain carried from the Northwest, shipped back up the Mississippi River, and sold in Saint Louis and other western cities at lower rates than it could be produced where the corn was grown; and the same thing is going on now, as high wines are sold in New York at the cost of production in Cincinnati.

It is no argument to say that whisky is a luxury and its use a vice. Congress is looking to revenue and not to morals. Besides, from the best information that can be obtained, at least one-half of the distilled spirits produced is used by manufacturers, mechanics, apothecaries, and others, and is to them as much a raw material as raw silk and cotton are to the manufacturers of fabrics composed of these articles.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KASSON. I will yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman.

Mr. BECK. I am obliged to the gentleman for his courtesy.

The proposed increase in the tobacco tax will prove to be equally fallacious as a means of raising revenue. Two years ago the tax on tobacco was 16 and 32 cents, three-fourths of it being at the higher rate. When a uniform tax was proposed the Department insisted that we would lose $9,000,000 annually if a uniform rate of 20 cents a pound was adopted. We determined to make the experiment in spite of their protests. The result is we are receiving more revenue to-day from that source than we did at 32 cents; and in my judgment we would receive more by reducing it to a uniform rate of 16 cents a pound than we do now; certainly more than we will if we increase it to 24. I have no doubt that the proposed restoration of the 10 per cent. to the tariff will prove a signal failure as a revenue measure, and that is the opinion of many well-informed men.

I read a letter to the Committee on Ways and Means the other day from the largest merchant in New York, perhaps in the world, expressing his decided conviction that in the present condition of our import trade revenues would be diminished rather than increased by the imposition of the additional 10 per cent. duties proposed by the bill. If there is one article of more universal necessity to the laboring people of the country than any other among all that may be classed as luxuries, it is the article of sugar. We already impose taxes upon it which produce over $33,000,000 of revenue, and the proposed addition of 25 per cent. is that much burden added to every poor man's meal. Tea and coffee, which are strictly revenue-producing articles, are not included in the bill, while the equally if not more necessary article of sugar is to be still further taxed, so that producers in this country may still further enhance the prices of all produced here from which no revenue is derived. I am glad attention has been called to the article of melada which it was proposed should be exempt from the increase, enabling the sugar refiners to import at low rates in that form the material from which they manufacture their high-priced sugars. I presume the bill will be amended so as to guard against fraud in that quarter.

Knowing that it was useless to insist either in the committee or on this floor that the amount demanded in the form of taxation could be saved by proper reduction of expenditures, I endeavored to suggest other subjects of taxation instead of those proposed in the bill now before us, hoping that the committee might agree with me, but I failed. One of the subjects which I thought ought to be embraced if revenue had to be raised, was an additional tax of at least 1 per cent., and I think 2, on the circulation of the national banks. Having discussed that question at the last session of this Congress, I cannot state my views upon the subject better now than by reading an extract from the speech I then made, showing that the national bankers can afford to pay the tax I sought to have imposed.

I then said:

I presume three-fourths of all the bonds now held by national bankers were bought with legal-tenders at par; but as I cannot prove that, and want to present the question fairly, I am willing to concede that the bonds cost them on the average 10 per cent. premium. Upon that assumption, which is certainly all the bankers can claim, and assuming 7 per cent., which is the legal rate of interest in the State of New York, as the average value of money, let us apply the test. It requires $110 to buy a hundred-dollar bond of the United States; the interest on the money invested is $7.70 per annum; the bond bears 6 per cent. interest in gold. Put the premium on that down to 10 per cent.; the interest on the bond (payable semi-annually) is $6.60. In addition to that, the Government loans to the bondholder, as a national banker, $90 on every hundred-dollar bond he deposits as security, requiring him to hold in reserve (which I will assume he does, though we all know that to be a fiction) 15 per cent. of the $90 so loaned, leaving him for his own use $76.50, the interest on which, at 7 per cent., is $5.35. How does the account stand?

United States, Dr.

To $110 invested, worth 7 per cent. $7 70

United States, Cr.

By $100 United States bond, interest. $6 60

By $76.50 loaned by United States, 7 per cent. 5 35

11 95

Deduct 3 per cent. tax on $90 circulation to United States. 2 70

Leaves. 9 25

Or a clear profit of 155 per cent. to the banker after paying the tax I propose on the whole currency loaned by the Government, while the increase of the tax from 1 to 3 per cent. would add annually $7,000,000 to the revenues of the country.

I would like to know from what source that amount of revenue can be so justly and equitably raised as from the national banks, if we are to be cursed by their continuance. I would like some gentleman to explain why a bondholder should be entitled to borrow money from the Government at a lower rate of interest than any other citizen; or why the national banker should have the money of the people put into his hands at the rate of 1 per cent. per annum to be loaned to the men from whom it was taken by taxation at the rate of (say) 7 per cent. per annum, to enable the bondholding banker to pocket the other 6 per cent.

* If a bondholder with $1,000 or $100,000 of bonds which he was willing to deposit as security wanted to borrow $900 or $90,000 from any banker, corporation, or individual, he would have to pay 7 per cent. interest for it, just as I would have to do if I held and offered to deposit State bonds, railroad bonds, or other undoubted securities. Why should the Government, the people's banker, furnish him $900 or $90,000 on his securities at 1 per cent. interest per annum, when the money it furnishes is worth 7 per cent., and when it would not let me have a dollar though I might pile up other securities mountain high to secure the repayment of the loan?

I made another proposition, which the House at the last session adopted, which was to impose a tax of $\frac{1}{10}$ of 1 per cent. upon all sales of stocks, bonds, gold, and other securities, from which the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. STARKWEATHER] assured the House last session not only that \$12,000,000 a year could be collected, but that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue could without additional machinery execute the law.

He said on the 1st day of June, 1874:

Mr. STARKWEATHER. This bill of mine, which is No. 3139, levies a tax of 1-20 of 1 per cent. on these sales. In regard to the collection of this tax the execution of a law of this kind has never for any length of time been attempted. Just at the close of Mr. Johnson's administration, when the tax on whisky, which in 1864 had been collected on 85,000,000 gallons, had run down to a collection on 6,700,000, we collected from this tax on bonds, stocks, &c., at that time a larger proportion of tax than we did on whisky; and recently the whisky tax has been collected on 77,000,000 gallons as the result of proper organization and good administration, showing that success in the collection of a tax depends on efficiency in the administration of the law.

All that is needed now is to use the machinery we have. By conversation with gentlemen best posted on this subject—I did not go to clerks of the Departments—with gentlemen who have studied this subject for years, I find that the Department can execute this law without any additional machinery; that is, by adopting the bill in the form in which I have put it—that the law can be executed and the tax collected as well as the whisky or any other tax, if they will only take hold of the subject in good earnest. It was as well executed as the whisky tax and realized a larger proportion. Neither were well executed, because the Internal Revenue Bureau was thrown into confusion by changes and removals at the very time the law should have been well executed. Without additional officers you can realize this tax without the least trouble at all.

It will besides have a wholesome influence upon the country in checking the abnormal condition of things in New York and other cities where gold and bond sales are going on. The repeal of this law was brought about by pressure of the lobby.

I wish simply to say to the House if this amendment should be adopted it will bring into the Treasury twelve or thirteen million dollars without additional expense to the Treasury, and we shall need it to pay our honest debts and to apply to the sinking fund. I now give notice that I shall endeavor to move that amendment at the proper time.

Again, on the 22d day of June, 1874, while the little tariff bill of which this proposition was a part was pending before a committee of conference, the same gentleman said:

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, after three months' consultation with leading financial men, drew a bill on this subject, and said to the Finance Committee of the Senate—I heard him say so—that he could execute this bill and bring in $12,000,000 to the Treasury annually. He says that he can execute it cheaply without any considerable additional force; that he can execute it as cheaply as he can collect the tobacco and whisky tax.

If the Commissioner is to be taken as authority this is a proposition which surely ought to have met with favor, as it reaches the stock and gold gamblers who can better afford to bear the burdens of taxation than the already overloaded industries of the country. I sought further by providing to tax incomes exceeding $3,000 a year to reach other sources of accumulated wealth in our search for revenue; but I soon found that it would meet with but little favor, and had to abandon the idea. It is but too apparent that neither by economy in expenditures nor by imposing taxation upon wealth can the industry and labor of the country be released in this Congress. I see nothing left except to vote down the bill, there being no necessity requiring that any of its provisions should be adopted.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DAWES. I wish to suggest to my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] that instead of obtaining $10,000,000, the most we ever got from stocks when the tax was highest was $2,500,000.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, to provide a scheme of taxation which shall yield most revenue with least oppression to the people is one of the high est duties devolved upon a legislative body; and it is a duty in the discharge of which I apprehend legislative bodies have generally least succeeded. It is not my purpose, even if I possessed the ability, to criticize in any unfriendly spirit the report of the Committee on Ways and Means on this subject. I feel, however, that, representing as I do a constituency largely interested in this proposed system of taxation from the fact that they will pay a large amount of it, I should neglect the duty resting upon me if I did not protest against some of the provisions of this bill.

The location of taxation in this country—a subject that appears not to have been studied much by this committee—is one of interest to me; and I desire to call the attention of the House to it. I find that, as has usually been the case, the increase of taxation proposed in this bill provides for an added burden to that portion of the country in which I live. I do not know that I could have devised a better plan for increasing the revenues of the Government if they need increase—upon which point there seems to be some doubt—and I shall not blame gentlemen very much if they take the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means at his word in his speech of a year ago, and fail to see the necessity which he now proclaims for increased taxation. For my own part I have not studied the subject sufficiently to be able to determine that question; but I am satisfied the bill is injustice almost from beginning to end. It is such a compromise upon the subject of taxation as seems to me almost unworthy of consideration in this deliberative body.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in the kindest spirit in regard to this subject, I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that this increased revenue, which it is asserted must be had, is to be obtained by levying taxation upon productive industries chiefly in the West and South while the capital of the country, that which has been accumulated and invested, which requires no attention, no effort, no credit, except simply to collect its increase, is entirely ignored.

I call the attention of gentlemen to the history of taxation on this subject as shown by the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for several years past. I find that in the year 1866 the State of Massachusetts paid $34,989,205.33 of internal-revenue tax, while in 1874 the same State paid only $2,792,302.71. In 1866 the State of Illinois, which I have the honor in part to represent, paid $15,397,463.81, while in 1874 the same State paid $15,419,720.81. This is a decrease in that period of tax, a lifting off of burdens from our excellent friends in one State of New England of $32,196,905.63, while it is an increase of the burden upon the people of my own State of $22,257. In Connecticut and some other of the New England States the change has been almost as marked. They at one time paid nearly ten millions of internal-revenue taxes, while to-day they pay but a pitiable amount indeed. Connecticut paid $580,379.11; Maine, $128,039.25; Massachusetts, $2,792,302.71; New Hampshire, $248,679.19; Rhode Island, $233,164.81; and Vermont, $56,316.94; making in all $4,038,932.01. So that, taking all of the New England States, which once paid a fair revenue to the Government, they pay to-day only $4,038,932.01; while on the contrary the first district of the State of Illinois, from which I come, pays $6,606,125.82, being an increase of $2,567,193.81, or more in one collection district in the West than is paid in all of the New England States.

Now, my friends from New England must not think I am feeling particularly bad about this, for I do not. I am well aware that it is not this special industry which pays this vast revenue. I care as little about it or deem it of as little consequence as any man from New England, because I know the tax on whisky, like all other taxes, is a burden ultimately on the consumer, and that the tax on this great product of the West, into which the corn of the farmer so largely enters, is finally paid by the consumer, and not by us. It is so in reference to all subjects of taxation. It has been said cleverly by some of our New England friends that they drink our whisky and pay the tax in the end. I tell them that we buy their shoes, and everything in the way of tax you put on them has finally to be paid by us. That argument therefore goes for nothing. The taxes are finally paid by the consumers, while we who are poor and are struggling to make our fortunes, who have not accumulated capital, paying high rates of interest, who make loans from you of New England and pay 2 per cent. a month for it on good security, have to put all this into the Treasury; and when you look around to find new sources or subjects upon which to levy additional tax, you again put the burden upon us instead of imposing some of it upon yourselves.

But, Mr. Chairman, I do not specially object to that; I am willing this commodity should pay whatever taxes may be deemed to be reasonably fair; but I do feel, as has been ably advocated by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] who preceded me in this debate, that increased taxation upon this article of whisky will not in the end increase the revenues of the Government. I can tell you that during the time we had a high tax upon whisky, all down through the States where this kind of enterprise does not rise to the dignity of an employment, illicit distillation was carried on in garrets and cellars by men living down there, paying no tax at all upon the whisky which they manufactured, while our industry was carried on upon a pretty fair basis all the time. The increase on the part of our friends from the East of this tax, from a feeling which enables them to see only one industry on which they can impose taxation, will tempt the cupidity of these same men in the East to again engage in illicit distillation of whisky in garrets and cellars in the very districts from which the gentlemen now come who advocate here the levying of increased taxation, and then the legitimate manufacture of high-wines in this country, which is carried on principally in the West, will have to come into competition with that illicit distillation in other sections. Is it fair? Is it just?

But there is another consideration which I desire to call to the attention of the House.

Mr. KASSON. I cannot yield to the gentleman any further.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I have not had my ten minutes.

Mr. KASSON. I am under engagement to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I have not had my ten minutes. I wish only to give expression to another thought.

Mr. KASSON. I yield to the gentleman for two minutes to finish his point.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. There is one other thought which I wish to express. This bill, while it seeks to raise the revenue, at the same time strikes down a fruitful source of revenue, yielding nearly $3,000,000, and that, too, without any very great cost to the Government, by repealing the tax on matches.

I will not characterize the proposition as perhaps I feel in regard to it. The easiest tax paid in the whole country, the one most equally distributed throughout the land, is that match tax, which nobody feels or cares for. The tax is taken from that and put on these other commodities in the way I have described.

Now, one word more and then I will be done. Over one-half of the whole product of that commodity (alcohol) perhaps is used in the production of high wines and enters into all the manufacturing pursuits and all the arts, and you tax them at the same time that you levy this tax. It is unjust and unfair, and I hope the proposition will not prevail in the shape in which it is presented.

Mr. KASSON. I now yield to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. WHITEHEAD.]

Mr. WHITEHEAD. I may be pardoned, Mr. Chairman, for feeling great anxiety on the subject of this bill, inasmuch as it extracts from the people of my State $7,000,000. They will pay more tax on manufactured tobacco than the rest of the country put together. The people I represent will by this bill pay $7,000,000 of the internal-revenue taxes on the article of tobacco alone. And it is a State certainly not rich; a State that has passed through at least as many pecuniary troubles and is about as much burdened with public debt, and suffers as much from the disasters of the late war, as any other State in the Union. And yet we are expected not only to sit quietly by and see this additional taxation paid, but we are expected in regard to those $7,000,000 coming out of the pockets of our people to satisfy ourselves with the doctrine of the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROBERTS] that the consumer pays this tax and that we are not injured in our poor State by having $7,000,000 extracted from the pockets of the people.

I may be excused perhaps, sir, for some bitterness, if I should display it in my language on this subject, when gentlemen recollect precisely what passed in regard to the little tariff bill in the last session of this Congress and at this session. The little tariff bill could not be passed in this House except upon certain concessions to the growers of tobacco in regard to the sale of leaf-tobacco, and certain concessions to manufacturers of tobacco in regard to a drawback on licorice. That bill, recognized as the voice of the people on these subjects, and which it was known could not be passed at the last session without these concessions, came back here this session, and by gag-law was passed in this House after every single concession made to these industries had been struck out. That is the history of the legislation in regard to it. The manufacturers of tobacco from all over the country, when that bill was before the House at its last session, sent petition after petition asking that when they paid 9 cents in gold as duty on licorice they might have a drawback on the licorice used in the manufacture of tobacco; when they exported that tobacco that they should not be compelled to pay 20 cents a pound on raw leaf and 9 cents a pound on licorice on the top of that, and might have a drawback on the duties they paid in gold on the licorice used in the manufacture. This House passed that bill. It went to the Senate, and at the instance of two manufacturers of licorice, against the interest of all the tobacco manufacturers in the country, that clause was struck out. The bill came back to this House without it, and the House went back on its own action, on its own word, and passed the bill in that form against the protest of the representatives of every tobacco manufacturer in the United States.

Now I say the legislation in connection with that bill and the legislation put into this bill have been in disregard of the voice of the people as expressed in the public press, and in disregard of the voice of the whole of the manufacturers of tobacco throughout the country, and in disregard of the resolutions of boards of trade and the resolutions of the Legislatures of every State engaged in raising tobacco. I have thought over the action of the Committee on Ways and Means, and what is presumed to be the action of this House, in order to ascertain the philosophy on which this action is based. I thought, sir, of what I had heard when a little boy of the dog in the manger, and thought the Committee on Ways and Means had got their philosophy from that fable. And then I thought of what I had seen in the Bible about the man who took from his poor neighbor his one little ewe lamb, and gave it to his friend to dine on. And I thought that perhaps they had taken their philosophy from that. But I believe it is worse than either of those cases; worse than the dog in the manger, worse than the man who took the little ewe lamb. And then I thought of a man who had a philosophy that fits this case exactly. I had heard of a man who called himself a practical philosopher. Possibly the gentlemen of the Committee on Ways and Means who have fixed up this bill consider themselves practical philosophers in finance and taxation. This man said that he acted upon his philosophy always; and that he had three cardinal principles, and one general rule of action. His cardinal principles were, that he never loaned a man a dollar unless he had a Mexican dollar in his hand as collateral security; that he never asked a man to take a drink because he might lead his neighbor into temptation, and spend his own money; and that he never refused to take a drink when asked, if the whisky was good, because it did not cost him anything. His general rule of action was, that he did not care a curse what happened so it did not happen to him. Now, if there is any other philosophy under heaven about the matter, I cannot find it. Let us see how the matter stands. I would give you statistics, if I had time, to prove every word I state upon this subject. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WARD] said that this bill seemed to come from New England. The only part of the tobacco question that could affect New England and the Middle States is left out of this bill of increased taxation. This law is framed to accommodate that section of the country. Now take the State of Maine, of which the chairman of this committee is one of the Representatives. There is no increase proposed in this bill in the tax on cigars, although that is much more a manufacture than the preparation of chewing or smoking tobacco. I asked the gentleman from New York why not put a tax on the rich man's cigars if you put an increase on the poor man's pipe. The gentleman from New York said that he would be willing to do so if he knew how to collect it, and a gentleman from Pennsylvania jumped up and said that he would vote against any increase of the tax on cigars. Now it occurs to me that the cigar tax is more easily collected than any other tobacco tax.

But the practical philosopher's theory comes in right here. Maine pays $18,964 on manufactured cigars and $8 on manufactured tobacco. The State of Vermont pays $15,179 on manufactured cigars and $139 on manufactured tobacco, and $70 on leaf-tobacco license. The State of Virginia pays $41,600 tax on manufactured cigars and $5,546,620 on manufactured tobacco and $14,463 on leaf-tobacco license. The States of Virginia, Kentucky, Ohio, and Illinois pay the largest amount of this tax and will be compelled to pay greatly more under this bill.

I will print a careful table of statistics made by me from the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, by which it appears that the New England States pay for tax on cigars $634,531, and for tax on chewing and smoking tobacco $14,719; while the seven tobacco States pay $1,772,444 tax on cigars, and $13,256,200 on chewing and smoking tobacco.

Tobacco tax paid by different States, showing what States are benefited by low tax on cigars.

States.	Tax on cigars, \$5 per 1,000.	Manufactured tobacco, 20c. per pound.	Leaf sales, license \$25 and $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.
Maine.....	$18,964 00	$8 00	$165 00
New Hampshire.....	20,300 00	314 00	71 00
Vermont.....	15,179 00	139 00	78 00
Rhode Island.....	45,788 00	103 00	135 00
Connecticut.....	123,800 00	255 00	4,537 00
Massachusetts.....	410,500 00	13,900 00	3,294 00
Michigan.....	261,200 00	912,526 00	833 00
New York.....	2,700,000 00	4,400,000 00	12,141 00
New Jersey.....	285,000 00	246,400 00	558 00
Pennsylvania.....	1,808,900 00	358,600 00	6,276 00
Maryland.....	308,600 00	329,100 00	3,600 00
Virginia.....	41,600 00	5,604,000 00	14,463 00
North Carolina.....	2,940 00	1,173,800 00	1,991 00
Tennessee.....	9,700 00	71,400 00	4,327 00
Missouri.....	227,900 00	1,436,000 00	5,408 00
Kentucky.....	149,400 00	1,358,000 00	27,900 00
Ohio.....	891,000 00	1,991,000 00	11,100 00
Illinois.....	449,900 00	1,622,000 00	2,300 00
Total.....	7,770,071 00	18,817,545 00	98,577 00

Now, it will be perceived that the main tobacco manufacture of the North is of cigars, and the most salable tobacco raised by them, and especially the States of Connecticut and Massachusetts, is Connecticut seed-leaf for cigar wrappers. Look at the further fact that there is a duty of 35 cents per pound on leaf-tobacco imported, and the further fact that there is a high duty on imported cigars, and the still more remarkable fact that the only leaf-tobacco in the world that could or would be imported to the United States is West India cigar tobacco, and you have a clew to the "practical philosophy" of this tax bill. Recollect that no tariff, however high, could benefit the manufacturers of Virginia chewing or smoking tobacco. The world cannot produce the equal of Virginia wrappers and fillers; and John W. Carroll and L. L. Armistead, of Lynchburgh, Virginia, received gold medals at the Vienna exposition for smoking-tobacco; and recollect that the President and other rich men smoke Havana cigars, and you will see the New England milk in this cocoa-nut bill.

By a report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue it appears that 1,885,397,498 cigars and cheroots were sold in 1874. Manufacturers and tobacco men believe many are smuggled in and sold that pay no tax. There was collected from stamps on cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes, $\frac{1}{2}$ cent each, \$9,333,592.24. One cent on each cigar would have been a light tax on the rich man, and certainly as the consumer is alleged to pay the tax the cigar manufacturers of the North ought not through their representatives to object and we should have from cigars \$18,667,184.48, an increase of revenue of \$9,333,592.24. Why did not this occur to the chairman, Mr. DAWES, or Mr. ROBERTS of

New York? This would have superseded the 4 cents per pound on chewing and smoking tobacco, and yielded a surplus revenue of $3,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, it is asserted that an increase of tax increases the revenue, and it is asserted that the present able Commissioner of Internal Revenue can collect all the increase. Well, we doubt if he can make one planter raise tobacco when the burden becomes oppressive to the planter, as it had become previous to the late short crop, and in fact it had much to do with the short crop. The present high price and large receipts arise from the fact that hardly one-third of a crop was made last year. The Commissioner's report shows that when the tax was 40 cents per pound the revenue never reached $20,000,000; when it was 32 cents and 16 cents it never reached $25,000,000, and that at 20 cents it was never less than $31,320,000, and is now over $33,000,000. So much for facts in regard to a high tax producing most revenue.

The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means said in opening the discussion on this bill:

Mr. Chairman, this tax upon whisky will yield $16,840,000; the tax upon tobacco of 4 cents on the pound will yield $4,200,000; that on sugar will yield $8,213,000; the 10 per cent restoration will yield $8,000,000. The whole increase therefore by this bill will yield, Mr. Chairman, $37,753,000. You have to deduct from that the repeal of the duty on matches, amounting to $2,500,000, which will leave $35,253,014. This will be subject of course to any losses which may be occasioned by the evasion suggested by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BANNING.] This bill will therefore increase the revenue of the country $35,000,000. It has been fully and fairly considered, and that is the amount which, so far as can be ascertained, it will produce to the Treasury. It will just about meet the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury and the allowance for that falling off in the customs duties to which I have called attention.

It remains therefore for the House to say first whether you will meet that deficit in the Treasury; second, will you meet it by seeking out new sources of revenue as the committee have, or will you turn your attention to some other method of doing it.

I have but a word to say before I sit down. The honor of the Government is involved in this question and in its ability to meet the current expenses of the Government as well as to keep its faith; these questions are involved in the consideration of this bill. It may not be that the Committee on Ways and Means have selected the right, proper, or best articles from which to obtain this increased revenue. That of course is a question for the House to pass upon. If they make up their minds that they will add to the revenues of the country by means of increased taxation an amount substantially what the committee say the necessities of the Government require, it only remains for them to pass judgment upon the wisdom of the selection made by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Now, sir, I take issue with the chairman of this committee and assert that they have not "selected the right, proper, or best articles from which to obtain increased revenue."

And, sir, I assert more, that they have thrown the burden of taxation upon the labor and industries of the country; that they have pursued a system of taxation admitted to have been begotten and permitted only as a war measure of at least doubtful constitutionality, opposed by the people and denounced by the press; and that in making this selection of the mode of raising revenue they have passed by and overlooked productions and industries common to all the States or to all the people, and have selected sectional agricultural productions and sectional manufactures under the plea that industries—the bread and meat, the supplies of a large agricultural and manufacturing people, laboring men—were either immoral or unnecessary; that other manufactures were aided, benefited, protected by one clause of the bill, and these were to be burdened and oppressed by another.

They have passed by the beer and ale of the East to fasten on the whisky of the West; they have passed by the cigars of the North to lay hold of the tobacco of the South. Ay, sir, and more; at the instance of a few manufacturers of matches in the North, uncalled for by the people who consume them, they have given up $2,500,000 of revenue without a reason or a justification. They have increased the tariff on sugar and tickled poor Louisiana with her deserted cane-fields that refineries from Baltimore to Boston might profit by their manufacture, while revenue was derived from the raw or crude article.

Sir, I ask the House to aid the committee in finding a fairer and more just subject of taxation. What is more just than that the burdens of the Government should be borne by the wealth of the country? What is fairer than that each man should contribute his proportion of what he has made? What is more righteous than an income tax? Will it produce revenue? In 1867 it produced $57,000,000, nearly twice as much as is now asked for. This proves that it can be collected. It is said men will swear falsely as to their incomes. I would blush, Mr. Chairman, if I thought that I represented a constituency that made it necessary to put in this plea.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WARD] suggested a better; the South and West are poor, New England and the North are rich.

One more subject, Mr. Chairman, and I am done. One hundred thousand dollars invested in the manufacture of tobacco would furnish labor, food, and clothing for hundreds of men and women, black and white. One hundred thousand dollars invested in banking, in the purchase and sale of gold and bonds, will not employ two clerks; yet the industry that builds up the country, feeds her people, is taxed, while that which makes gamblers is protected.

This House last session by a two-thirds vote, heeding the voice of the people, fixed a tax on these sales. Now, heeding the voice of the charmer, and taking their orders in finance from a soldier of fortune and their lessons on currency from a silver-mounted backwoods Senator, they strike the bankers and bullionists from the little tariff bill and obsequiously leave them out of this.

Mr. Chairman, in virtue of the Constitution of our common country, in the name of the laborers, black and white, of my State; in the name of her tobacco manufacturers, who were in the days of her prosperity her merchant princes; in the name of her plain and honest agriculturists; in the name of justice to an old State and fair dealing to a people unable to redress their wrongs, I appeal to this House to defeat this bill.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Chairman, if any member of this House has been resting under the delusion that the duties of the Committee on Ways and Means are pleasant, that delusion must by this time have been dispersed. Every other committee has an opportunity at times to gratify not only the wishes of the public, but certainly to meet the wishes of a fraction, at least, of the members of the House. The Committee on Ways and Means has no such opportunity. The Constitution has imposed upon the House of Representatives the duty of originating all measures of revenue, and unless they are inaugurated in this House they can have no origin anywhere, and the duty of their inception is put by the House upon this committee. There is in the experience of the Committee on Ways and Means but one single condition within my knowledge in which it was ever able to report a bill for raising revenue that of itself was likely to gratify any portion of the people or any considerable number of the members of the House. That condition involves additions to the tariff duties upon imports which by many are believed to improve the industries of the country and to meet the special wants of the manufacturing interests. In that respect they occasionally meet the wishes of a majority of the House of Representatives and a large section of the people. But does any gentleman suppose that the proposition to impose a tax upon any property or interest of this country must await the approval of that interest? Is it ever expected that a petition from parties interested shall come in for the imposition of taxes upon themselves? Of course not.

But there remains notwithstanding a duty—a duty which neither the committee nor this House can shirk—a duty I venture to say which ought not to rest alone on one political side of this House. Yet in this case the indications are that it is the intention of gentlemen on the other side to leave the performance of the duty with those who happen to be politically friendly to the administration of the Government. Mr. Chairman, in that other country, with as popular a parliamentary government as ours has—that country which gave origin to the controlling element of the American people, there is this to be said for their system; that when the House of Commons chooses to defeat a measure of the government the administration itself is changed and without a new popular election. But neither party in England ventures to array itself against any proposed measure that is necessary to sustain the honor or credit of the government, by which ever party administered. If it was bold enough to do it, the hard common sense of the people of England, a people which does not tolerate much nonsense, would turn that party out of power by an overwhelming majority. Both parties in that country stand by the honor of their government and the interests of the nation. Would to God that on the floor of this House there were some things—questions of personal liberty on the one hand and of financial credit and of the honor of the Government upon the other—on which this House could be united without political divisions!

Sir, I had hoped when the President of the United States, in conformity with his constitutional duty, called our attention to the deficiency in the Treasury, when the Secretary of the Treasury in accordance with his duty called the attention of Congress to the fact that our revenues were not meeting our expenditures, and that if those expenditures were to be met, not a dollar would be left to go into the sinking fund—I had hoped, when those facts were made to appear, the voice of party would be silenced in this House and that the voice of the country and its honor would be heard.

Mr. NIBLACK. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] expect us to vote for a bill which is against our theories of taxation, and especially when we do not really believe conscientiously that there is any necessity for increased taxation?

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Chairman, I shall come to that point and see whether gentlemen can maintain that there is no necessity for taxation, and on certain provisions of the bill whether they can maintain that they are opposed to that theory of taxation, if I have time. But for the present I go on to say that if the facts are as represented by the government to this House, no man has a moral right to refuse to maintain the honor of the Government and provide for meeting its liabilities.

Sir, is it the Administration that makes your expenditures? Can your Administration pay out $1 of money without the direction or consent of Congress? When you complain of expenditures, of whom are you complaining? Are you complaining of the various heads of Departments, who pay out exactly what you appropriate, who may in some instances pay out less, but never any more? Sir, the rebuke of extravagant expenditures, if addressed anywhere, is addressed to this body, and its correlative body in this Capitol—not, as attempted, to be addressed to the executive branch of the Government, except in small details.

Now, where will you reduce your expenditures? Will you still further express your hostility to your gallant little Army? You have struck it so many blows within the last four years that there is no man of honor North or South, East or West, who can fail to feel that you have strained the confidence of your Army in the legislative branch of the Government to its extreme limit. For myself, I say that not for one single blow more against that Army can my vote be obtained. The other day a certain portion of this House objected even to giving them a little trained music, by which the military man is in part formed and the military esprit de corps cultivated. I never have felt more mortified at any manifestation of petty economy than in that case. So with another bill now in a conference committee, in which bill an effort has been made to have some of our wounded officers—some of them riddled through and through with the bullets of the enemy—reduced on their retired pay. God forbid that we should any further destroy the confidence of our Army in our legislative appreciation of their gallant achievements, their worth, and of their past sacrifices in the country's service.

Take up the Navy; and where will you strike, without impairing its efficiency and strength? Is there any man here who thinks that we have one ship too many? Is there any man here who can justly maintain that we should reduce the force of men or officers in the Navy? Sir, that flag which was once carried so proudly by them, which traversed the various seas and was seen in all the ports of the world, is to-day in many places rarely seen, and the honor represented by that flag—the honor of the country—is in some places scarcely maintained by the force which you allow to the Navy. No more blows struck at the Navy. I declare as one member of this House I had rather be taxed on everything which I use and wear, everything that I own, than to strike at those two great branches of the public service upon which we proudly rely in times of peril to maintain the honor and the safety of the United States.

Then again, Mr. Chairman, if you maintain that your civil list is too large, I have only to say point out the place and let us reduce it; but do not say in general language that the expenditures are too large unless at the same time you point to the place where a reduction can be made. And I venture the assertion that as soon as the reduced expenditures proposed by the Committee on Appropriations are made, it will be difficult to get a reduction of even $1,000,000 on the civil list.

Let us see if we can reduce in another direction. Here you have your expenditures for fortifications reduced so low that I do not now remember one man in this House when the bill was up who proposed to reduce it further. Then come to your appropriations for rivers and harbors, will you strike there? I believe you can strike them to some extent, but not to the extent of $5,000,000 or half that amount, because the entire bill is only five or six millions. Our rivers must be improved if we have the means to do it, and I am one of those who believe the West would suffer some new tax rather than have the improvement of the Mississippi River stopped. Consider the mouth of that river. We are to have a bill up very soon which will necessarily appropriate some money to open the mouth of that great stream to the commerce depending on it and its tributaries; to open it up to our outgoing as well as to the incoming commerce of the various nations of the world. Shall we abandon this appropriation, and so prevent an addition to our expenditures? If so, say it; say something that will show there is no necessity for getting more money in the Treasury. Then, Mr. Chairman, unless you can point the way to a certain number of millions which can and will be saved, you must admit that there is necessity for further revenue.

In the last fiscal year your sinking fund was not met. The entire reduction of the debt for that year was only, as you well remember, about six or seven million dollars. Your sinking fund is not going to be met in this current year by about $20,000,000 on the estimates made at the beginning of the year; and those estimates were more favorable to the Government than the results approve. You have not, in point of fact, had the money to meet the liabilities of your sinking fund last year. You have not had the money, in point of fact, to meet the liability of the sinking fund this year. These are unquestioned facts.

But, say gentlemen, you should have applied the revenue first to reduce the sinking fund, and then it would have been kept good. That is true. But, granting that, what is the other result? Your deficiency is increased by that same amount in the other liabilities of the Government—in the other branches of the service; liabilities which you have created, and not the executive government. And what difference does it make to the honor of the Government if it fails to meet any of its liabilities anywhere, except that the sinking fund is the most serious because it is a special, solemn obligation in connection with contracts created and before they were created.

"But," says the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WOOD,] my distinguished colleague on the Ways and Means Committee, "that is easily accomplished." How? He says, "You have canceled some $140,000,000 of the general bonded debt of the country. It is now dead. Revive that debt, credit it to the sinking fund, and you will then have complied with your obligations." I thought at once, when I heard my distinguished friend state that, where he got that new system of book-keeping. In this Pacific Mail investigation we found a similar system of book-keeping, and so far as I know the committee were opposed to it. The officers of that company took from an account where it belonged, and was troublesome, a certain sum of $600,000 and passed it over to another account. It got troublesome there, and they took it and passed it over to another, and it has never yet found a settled resting-place. But the idea of taking a dead and canceled debt, reviving it, and passing it over to the sinking fund is something I think no government in the world, no financier in the world, would consider a system of book-keeping which would go very far in preserving the credit of the United States.

Then, Mr. Chairman, we have this distinct fact, with which I make my reply to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. NIBLACK,] that the last two monthly returns show an increase of debt of about $5,000,000, with no provision for the sinking fund. I find also in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury that bonds to the extent of about thirteen millions in the last fiscal year were purchased for the benefit of the sinking fund, leaving a margin of nearly twenty millions unprovided for.

I find that upon his estimate of revenue for the present year there will be only a surplus revenue of about $9,000,000 to apply to the sinking fund, and that estimate is made, as I understand it, upon the amount then already received and the anticipated receipts of the Government for the remainder of this year. There is a deficiency. There it is; right or wrong, you cannot evade it. There is an unquestionable deficiency in the Treasury of the United States either for the sinking fund or for the other liabilities of the Government. Now the question is, will you meet that liability? Will you provide for it? Or will you let one of two things go to protest, the sinking fund or the other obligations of the Government, wherever they may be owing? One or the other is going to protest, and your public improvements must be abandoned unless you provide additional revenue. I have no time, sir, to spend further upon the general subject of the necessity of additional taxation.

Now, then, as to the mode which the committee proposes. They propose to levy certain specific taxes in addition to those now collected and certain imposts, in order to meet this liability. Can you provide better or more satisfactory means for it? If it be supposed by gentlemen of this House that every member of the committee upon the Administration side likes to do each of these things, he is very much mistaken. It may not be improper for me to say that it is with enormous reluctance that I propose to restore the 10 per cent. duties reduced in 1872. I consent to it rather than put taxes on some other subjects of taxation, and also because there is a very large interest in the House and in the country which believes this to be necessary for the good of the country and for the employment of labor now idle. Whether I agree with them or not, I must agree to some bill. If this were struck out, you must insert in its place tea and coffee.

And now, Mr. Chairman, while I am speaking on this subject, let me say that I know of no revenue reformer in the United States who does not maintain that this is one of the most just and equal burdens that can be imposed by the Government for revenue purposes. I wish to shirk no responsibility on this subject. I only contend that the same interest which demands the increase of the 10 per cent. is the interest that is opposed to the duties on tea and coffee; because, obtaining a revenue from the latter source, it would be that much the less necessary to obtain it from the former.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. KASSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. Is there the slightest evidence before the Committee on Ways and Means that that increased 10 per cent. will produce the money which you seek?

Mr. KASSON. There is evidence that it will produce some money; how much is problematical and depends of course upon the demand for the articles imported.

Mr. DAWES. Tell the gentleman how that is ascertained.

Mr. KASSON. I would like to finish what I was saying on the subject of tea and coffee. I have in my hand a statement, received yesterday, which, together with some other evidence, leads me to differ from my friend the chairman of the committee as to the amount of stock on hand in this country. I will print it with my remarks that the House may see it. It goes to show that there are less stocks on hand now than there were at the corresponding periods of previous years, indicating that there has been no increase of importation in consequence of this proposed imposition of the tax.

This is the statement:

Shipments of teas from China and Japan.

	Pounds.
Between December 23, 1874, and February 8, 1875.....	5,000,000
Between December 23, 1873, and February 8, 1874.....	12,500,000
Between December 23, 1872, and February 8, 1873.....	11,400,000

The fear of incurring duty having prevented shipments from China this season. This view of the case is fortified by the following comparison of stock:

	Pounds.
Stock in native hands, China and Japan, February 8, 1875.....	11,500,000
Stock in native hands, China and Japan, February 8, 1874.....	3,000,000
Stock in native hands, China and Japan, February 8, 1873.....	4,100,000
In regard to his second assertion the returns of the New York Board of Trade show stock of teas, first hands, February 1, 1875.....	10,486,000
First hands, January 1, 1875.....	11,787,000
First hands, December 1, 1874.....	13,962,000
First hands, November 1, 1874.....	12,275,000
First hands, February 1, 1874.....	8,533,000
First hands, February 1, 1873.....	13,289,000
First and second hands, February 1, 1872.....	23,616,000
First and second hands, February 1, 1871.....	15,830,000

It is well known, though not susceptible of proof, that the stock of teas in second hands and in the interior is less this year than ever before; the unsatisfactory course of the tea trade for the last two years having prevented dealers in the interior from laying in their usual stock.

The President in his message to Congress ventured the assertion that the imposition of the duty would not permanently increase the cost of tea to the consumer. His assertion seemed to be rash, but events have proved it singularly correct. Between December 15 and February 8 the cost of teas in China has decreased equal to 10 per cent. on the cost in the United States, and a further fall of prices there seems unavoidable if a duty is really imposed here.

New York, February 15, 1875.

Mr. GUNCKEL. From whom does it come?

Mr. KASSON. It is from a very responsible house in New York—none more so.

Mr. GUNCKEL. Dealers in tea?

Mr. KASSON. And furnished to that house by another party in New York familiar with the whole subject.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. Does he consider it practicable to levy the proposed tax on stocks in hand? Does he think it would produce sufficient revenue to justify doing so?

Mr. KASSON. There is no question of levying the tax on stocks in hand of tea. I will come to that in a moment. Gentlemen will excuse me till I finish the subject on which I am speaking.

We do not want to impose taxes on tea and coffee. No man wants to do it. There are demagogues from the Atlantic to the Pacific who come before the people of the country and say, "Look at what they have done in Congress, taxing your morning cup of coffee and your evening cup of tea." But the demagogues do not go before the same people and say, "Look, here is this 10 per cent. increase, and they are taxing everything you wear." But the people are intelligent enough to know that the aggregate tax is higher on many of those things about which these appeals of demagogues are not made and the burdens are greater upon them than they would be by a tax of 10 cents a pound on tea and 2 cents a pound on coffee. And I understand that what we took off in 1872 was put on in Brazil, and if reimposed in America it would probably be taken off or reduced in Brazil. I am bound to say this much in candor, while at the same time I do not wish to put a tax on tea and coffee if the honor and credit of the Government can be maintained without it and also without putting some more onerous burdens on the people on some other branches of industry and property.

Mr. MYERS. I would ask my friend how much the restoration of the 10 per cent. will add to the revenues?

Mr. KASSON. Do not take up my time.

Mr. MYERS. Let me say that we lost at least $3,000,000 by this reduction.

Mr. KASSON. I cannot gainsay that statement nor can I quite admit that statement, because the diminished industries and consumption of the country must be taken into consideration, which had quite as much to do with that loss as anything else, and I cannot therefore admit the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

But, sir, let me pass from the 10 per cent. increase to the question of whisky. You may be assured that there were good reasons why the Committee on Ways and Means recommended an increased tax on this product. To show that it would not operate unjustly on the interests of the country, so far as the evidence goes, I will read a dispatch sent to the chairman of the committee from one of the great centers of the whisky interest, and I ask to the reading of it the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WARD] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] and other representatives of the whisky interest. The dispatch reads as follows:

PEORIA, ILLINOIS, February 17, 1875.

Hon. H. L. DAWES, M. C.,

Chairman Committee Ways and Means:

We are not particularly opposed to an increase of tax on spirits if the necessities of the Government require it. Have bill take effect on and after 1st March next. We do not think it advisable to tax stocks on hand in bond, as it would only compel parties holding it to raise large sums to pay the tax, which would be a great inconvenience to them and no gain to the Government. We pay an average of $400,000 per month taxes from this source alone. See Commissioner Douglass. We have no lobbyists in Washington.

DISTILLERS OF PEORIA.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. Does the gentleman know how much whisky these dealers have on hand?

Mr. KASSON. Undoubtedly, like all the rest of the dealers, these distillers have whisky on hand to an amount not known to us, nor is it important.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. Would not they make a great deal by the increased price of whisky consequent upon the increased tax?

Mr. KASSON. Every interest touched by taxation is always opposed to any increase of taxation upon itself. The questions we have to deal with are whether it is just to increase this tax both in the future and now, and whether we can collect the tax so increased. Mr. Chairman, I do not know any large distilled-spirit-producing country where the tax is so low as it is here. In England the tax, when I last examined the subject, was $2.44 per gallon. This is one of the things which are not in themselves such articles of necessity as to make the tax onerous on the consumer. The tax does really fall on the consumer; and when the gentleman from Illinois rises here and says that we compel his constituents to pay so much tax on whisky, and so also the gentleman from Kentucky, they should remember that this tax is diffused all over the United States among the men who take drinks or use whisky. And the collection of the duties under Mr. Johnson's administration, before the present system of stamps and checks was brought into existence, is not by any means a fair standard of what may be done now. You must either collect this tax or impose burdens upon other articles, which are articles of necessity.

Mr. Chairman, there is one other subject to which I wish to refer, and that is the tax on tobacco.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. KASSON. I hope the gentleman will not interrupt me at this point. Upon the subject of tobacco let me say that there is no just objection to imposing a part of our increased tax upon tobacco. The tax comes lightly and unconsciously upon the consumers, and the dealers get it back in infinitely small proportions from the country at large. It is as in the case of whisky, diffused over the whole country, comes ultimately from the consumers, and is upon an article of optional consumption. Upon the two articles of whisky and tobacco the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is of opinion that he can collect the tax as well as he does the present tax, and with the same machinery. I regret that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] made the statement that the Secretary of the Treasury has expressed an opinion against it. I did not so understand him. I only understood him to say, as many of us said in the beginning, that he had apprehensions it might lead to further evasions. I did not hear him say that he was opposed to the further increase of this tax, and I observe that the recollection of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means accords with mine. The real question before us is: Will you derive a portion of the additional revenue which you must have by taxing two articles, the tax on which is first paid, to be sure, by the dealers, but ultimately by a vast host of consumers, scattered everywhere, and in such small proportions that they do not feel it and scarcely know it.

I have a word to say upon the additional impost upon sugar. We shall have an amendment to offer at the proper time which will include melada proper in the new rates and transfer concentrated melada to the classification of sugars. There is an increasing disposition in the island of Cuba and elsewhere to send sugar, in some cases granulated sugar, into this country in the form of melada, in consequence of the lower rate of duty on melada, so as to evade the payment of the legitimate duty on that article. We have in this the co-operation of importers and refiners of sugar and the importers and refiners of this melada, and the form in which this section will be proposed is the form to which they have all given their assent with the approval of a Government expert.

As to the justice of this provision, gentlemen will recollect that this is an increase of only 25 per cent. of the existing duties. If that is added to the price per pound to the consumer, it will be seen that the people will scarcely feel the burden, as it does not even approximate the difference in price at which it is sold by the retailers to the consumers. It is less than half a cent per pound on the lower grades, and a little more on the higher grades, as proposed by this bill.

I should be glad to go still further into the details of this bill, but want of time forbids. I will only add that the section in regard to whisky can be amended either by striking out altogether the additional tax on existing stocks, or by a proviso that this increased tax shall not be levied on the vendor so far as regards whisky which he contracted to sell before the introduction of this bill. But those amendments will come in under the five-minute rule, and can be debated and considered then.

I will conclude by appealing once more to the House. If the gentlemen on my left who are opposed to the Administration still insist on denying that there is or ought to be any deficiency in the revenues, still insist on leaving the sinking fund unprovided for, then I turn to this side of the House and appeal to republicans to remember one occasion when there was a glow of patriotism which spread among the people of this country, and which should serve as an example to us now. In 1863, when it was proposed by our opponents to repudiate the payment of the public debt in gold and silver as it had been solemnly pledged, you declared in your convention in Chicago that the public faith should be maintained, and that both "the letter and the spirit of the law" should be met by the people of this country and by their Congress. In that sign we conquered, gained an overwhelming moral and political victory, with the aid of an honorable people. It will yet be written into history as a more notable triumph to the honor of the American Republic than many great victories won by feats of physical courage. So now I appeal to this side of the House to meet this time the demands of the financial honor of the nation, confident that the people are still devoted to the honor, the good faith, and the credit of the Government.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all general debate upon this bill is closed, and it is now before the Committee of the Whole for consideration and amendment, under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read the first section of the bill, as follows:

That from and after the date of the passage of this act there shall be levied and collected on all distilled spirits on which the tax prescribed by law shall not then have been paid, and whether the said spirits shall then be in distillery bonded warehouse or not, a tax of $1 on each proof gallon, or wine gallon when below proof, to be paid by the distiller, owner, or person having possession thereof, before removal from the distillery bonded warehouse; and so much of section 3251 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as is inconsistent herewith is hereby repealed: Provided, That in addition to the tax of 70 cents per gallon imposed by laws now existing there shall be levied and collected a tax of 15 cents, being one-half the increase of tax under this act, on each and every proof gallon, or wine gallon when below proof, of domestic distilled spirits manufactured and placed in bonded warehouse prior to the day when this act shall take effect, and held in bonded warehouse at that time, and on all such spirits then held by distillers, rectifiers, or wholesale dealers, having in their possession or under their control distilled spirits in stamped packages; and any person who shall sell, transfer, or otherwise dispose of any such distilled spirits after this act takes effect until an additional stamp, to be especially provided for this purpose by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, denoting payment of the additional tax of 15 cents per gallon herein imposed, is purchased and attached to the package or packages containing the same, in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall prescribe, shall be subject to and pay a penalty of $1 for each and every gallon so removed; and the spirits so removed shall be forfeited to the United States: And provided further, That on all brandy, gin, rum, and on all compounds and preparations of which distilled spirits is a component part of chief value, embracing all forms of distilled spirits imported from foreign countries, on which the duty, as fixed in the Revised Statutes, is $2 per gallon, the duty hereafter to be levied, collected, and paid shall be $2.50 per proof gallon.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I move to amend this bill by striking out all after the enacting clause except the third section.

Mr. DAWES. I raise the point of order that a motion cannot be made to strike out a portion of the bill which has not yet been read for amendment. A motion to strike out the enacting clause of the bill would be in order.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Then I will move now only to strike out the first section. I do not propose to discuss this question further than to say that I think it unnecessary to increase the taxes upon all the articles named in this bill. I yield the remainder of my time to my colleague, [Mr. SAYLER.]

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. I hope the proposition to amend this bill made by my colleague [Mr. SOUTHARD] will be sustained by the House. I suppose the Committee on Ways and Means would, as a matter of theory, recognize very readily the principle that taxation should be assessed equally upon all, yet when they come to assess a tax they understand, as well as does every other member, that each section of the country seeks to avoid its own share of the just and ordinary burdens of the Government.

Now, as a representative from the first congressional district of Ohio, and as a representative in part of the first collection district of that State, I protest against the provisions of this section of the bill. I protest against it especially because it is an unfair and unjust discrimination against that section of the country in which I live, and in favor of other sections of the country that do not bear their equal share of the burdens of taxation.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WARD] has shown very clearly in the brief time allotted to him that during the last ten or eleven years the burdens of taxation for the support of the Government have been gradually shifted from the Eastern States upon the shoulders of the people who live in the central, western, and southern portions of the country. My own district is a very fair example of what has been done in this respect. The city of Cincinnati contributes annually from her whisky and tobacco the enormous sum of between $7,000,000 and $8,000,000 of revenue—about twice as much as is paid by all New England. Yet New England is a wealthier section than ours; Massachusetts has more personal wealth. The rim of States upon our northeastern border have been settled longer, their people have more money than we have; but notwithstanding this, the great burden of the support of the Government has been shifted upon us. Why, Mr. Chairman, the first collection district of Ohio alone pays one-fifteenth part of the entire revenues collected by excise tax in the United States; and the four States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Kentucky, lying in the center of our country, pay unitedly three-fifths of all the excise tax.

I know it is said "No matter if you do pay this tax, you collect it back." But I tell you it does matter. In the first place, it requires a very much larger capital than we possess to carry on business successfully under burdens of this kind. This will be understood when you consider that we pay about $3,000,000 of revenue now and to which this bill proposes to add nearly 50 per cent. This proposed legislation not only requires increased capital and disturbs the interests of our producers and manufacturers, but disturbs also banking interests by the enormous drain that is thereby made upon our currency. And you must recollect also that the entire amount of this excise tax must be advanced for a period of about four months on the average by our manufacturers and producers, and does not return to us at once as other outlays, but goes into the Treasury of the United States, and is thus withdrawn from immediate circulation.

But I do not object to the tax simply on this ground. I affirm that this tax is another of those burdens imposed upon producing interests whereby they are crowded down, and whereby gentlemen of large capital, not connected with labor, are freed comparatively from taxation. Why, sir, every pound of tobacco that is raised in our western and southern country is already taxed from 200 to 400 per cent. on its value—an enormous and outrageous tax. Every bushel of grain that the farmer grows in our rich western country is taxed in the enormous sum of about $2.80 per bushel if it happens to be made into whisky. Sixty thousand bushels of grain are now converted every day into alcoholic liquors. Remove this enormous tax and you will have twice sixty thousand bushels converted into that kind of products. Not that this will increase drinking; gentlemen need not let their temperance sympathies become aroused here. But it will vastly increase the manufacture of these articles for a thousand mechanical and domestic uses from which they are now excluded by reason of their high price.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PARKER, of New Hampshire. I move to amend the amendment by striking out all of the first section except the last word. While I do not indorse the argument of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SAYLER,] I very cheerfully yield to him that he may complete it.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. I am obliged to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. PARKER] for his courtesy, and am sorry that he does not indorse my statements.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I undertake to say, in the first place, as a matter of fact, that the additional revenue called for in this tax bill is not necessary; and, in the second place, I undertake to say that if this amount is necessary the Ways and Means Committee ought to have devised some other method by which to raise it, and ought not to have proposed to overburden interests already bearing more than their share. I am sorry that this Ways and Means Committee, with the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts at their head, a gentleman for whom I have great respect, have not been able to find out some method by which the enormous wealth of other portions of the United States should be made to bear some small portion of this burden of taxation. I am sorry that the chairman of that committee should stand here to-day and plead for the imposition of about $4,000,000 additional tax upon the people of my district alone, when his entire State, rich in every respect, vastly richer than the State of Ohio, pays only the pitiful sum of a little over $2,000,000. I am sorry that the vast incomes of Massachusetts might not have been reached as they were a few years ago. I am sorry that the vast stock speculations of New York might not have been touched. I am sorry that in a hundred other forms, easily suggested, some taxation might not have been laid upon wealth and capital and some of the burdens removed from those who happen to live in the West and the South and who force from mother earth her wealth by the labor of their hands, and whose productions are the substance and foundation of all the real prosperity of the country.

But, Mr. Chairman, my time is very short and I cannot discuss this as I would like. It seems to me that some other propositions might have been considered by the Committee on Ways and Means to meet the exigency which they claim exists. They might have sought to reduce the expenditures of the country. If we are spending, as would appear from the declared necessity for this bill, from $20,000,000 to $30,000,000 more annually in expenses of the Government than we were two or three years ago, it might have been a just inquiry with that committee whether this expense could not be reduced. I know, sir, this would be unpopular in certain quarters, but with the great masses of our people, who pay the taxes and who have no selfish interests to subserve, I think the party that will step forward and effect an honest reduction of expenditures will build for itself a much surer popularity, and will gain a much stronger hold upon their affections, than by pandering to selfish interests. The Committee on Ways and Means might also have considered the question of a more efficient collection of the revenue of the country at the present rates of taxation.

It is all folly for the Commissioner to tell us that this large tax can easily be collected. It is all folly for him to tell those who know anything about it that the 70 cents tax now imposed is fairly and honestly collected. Why, Mr. Chairman, as a matter of fact high wines are sold to-day in the city of New York for 93½ cents per gallon. Those high wines cannot be manufactured in Cincinnati or anywhere else for less than 93 cents if the tax is paid. It costs 5 cents to transport each gallon from the city of Cincinnati to the city of New York, and yet it is a notorious fact that high wines are shipped by way of the Mississippi River and the Gulf, with all the expense of transportation, with all the natural volatile waste, with all the delay in effecting the shipment and sale, and sold in the city of New York at an advance of about ½ cent over the cost of their production in the very district in which the corn grows and the distillery runs.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Chairman, I wish only a moment in reply to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SAYLER.]

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman rise to oppose the amendment?

Mr. DAWES. I do.

Mr. COX. I should like to have the question stated. Can I move to perfect the section before it is stricken out?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. PARKER, of New Hampshire. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. DAWES. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAYLER] has followed up the argument of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WARD.] He asked why the Committee on Ways and Means did not put this on the East as well as upon the West. He says that his district, as well as the district of the gentleman from Illinois, pays a great deal more than Massachusetts. There was a time when Massachusetts paid $23,000,000 and the whole State of Illinois did not pay one-half that sum. He wondered why we were not willing to go back to that same condition of things. The gentleman goes upon the idea that because the tax is collected from his district his district pays it. There is collected in the State of Massachusetts $20,000,000 besides this, but we never had the idea that we paid the whole of that tax. The gentleman from Ohio should understand that all they do in his district is to advance that money, and it is not only collected and paid back, but a very large interest is collected on it, a wonderfully large interest, when we see those men who advance it rolling up their wealth just as the men in Boston who pay $20,000,000 of the tax upon imported goods and one hundred and forty millions in New York. They roll up immense fortunes by advancing this money, just as the gentleman's constituents and my friend's constituents out in Chicago. If my district up in the mountains of Massachusetts could only have that privilege, they would consider themselves blessed of men.

I wish to say in behalf of myself that my district is the only one district in Massachusetts affected by this bill, as it is the only one which manufactures whisky. It pays more taxes in consequence, if the rule is correct, than all the other districts in Massachusetts. My district does that; so I have not any particular interest in behalf of my district. It is different from that of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SAYLER.] This is not paid where he intimates to this House it is paid. It is only advanced; it is loaned on 25 and 40 and 100 per cent. interest in the profits that these gentlemen have in their broad and rich acres that roll up these piles of corn that can be turned into whisky and come back in their dividends and receipts. It is not very gracious for us to talk in this way; it is not right. There is no one section of the country that is, in point of fact, affected very much differently from another, because it is paid by those who use the whisky as much in my section as in his; it is paid by those who use the tobacco more in my section than in the section of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. WHITEHEAD,] because his section unfortunately is poorer than mine and cannot consume the tobacco it raises; but it comes back to them; we pay it back to them; it is distributed all over the country. It is a common interest, Mr. Chairman. We are affected alike, one and all, in this matter, and it is not exactly logical to say that because the custom-house is in Boston or the collector of internal revenue is in Cincinnati or in Chicago and gathers the tax there, it is his district which has to pay it. It is not quite so.

Mr. GARFIELD. I offer an amendment to perfect the section before it is stricken out. I move to amend the section by substituting in lieu thereof, after the enacting clause, what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 1 and insert these words:

That from and after the passage of this act there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all spirits that may be distilled and sold or removed for consumption or sale of first proof or wine gallon below proof, on and after the date of the passage of this act, a tax of 85 cents per gallon, to be paid by the distiller, owner, or person having possession thereof, before removal from the distillery bonded warehouse; and so much of section 3251 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as is inconsistent herewith is hereby repealed.

Mr. GARFIELD. I intended to say a few words in the general debate on this bill, but I was unwilling to consume the time. I will only say now on the general question that, after the best study I have been able to give to the subject, I am satisfied we are bound in honor to do one of two things; either to increase the amount of revenues by additional taxation sufficient to raise some $20,000,000 additional revenue, or refuse to pass the river and harbor bill altogether and stop work on all our public buildings. If those two things were done it would probably cut down the appropriations about $12,000,000 for the coming year. Even if that were done, I still am in doubt whether we should have enough left to make good the sinking fund. I want to call attention to still another phase of our situation. One year ago no man could have foreseen that we should go on so long without a revival of business and a consequent increase of the revenues. The great effect resulting from this want of revival of business has been that our imports have been steadily and heavily falling off—some months as much as $3,000,000, in most months as much as $5,000,000. With all our reduction of expenses we are still required to provide additional revenues to supply the deficit caused by the falling off in importations. The practical question is, how shall we do this most effectually, and with the least disturbance to the business interests of the country?

And first, we are asked to consider the method proposed by this bill. The first section proposes to increase the tax on spirits from 70 cents to $1 on a gallon, and to make a portion of the increase apply to the stock on hand.

So far as whisky is concerned, I will say that I am in favor of getting just as much revenue out of it as we can get. How much can we get? This is a question that must be settled mainly by experience, and by our American experience. We have never, I believe, succeeded in collecting a tax upon any commodity by taxing the stocks on hand at the date of increasing the rate. It has always been regarded as against public policy, and in a certain sense a violation of public faith. It has always been regarded as both impracticable and impolitic. If we are ever to do so on anything we ought to do it on spirits. But as the result of our experience, I do not believe we shall succeed if we attempt to tax the stock on hand. In the next place, the matter of the amount we can collect upon whisky is wholly a question of how much pressure will any given article stand so as to yield the maximum amount of revenue? When we put the tax on whisky down from $2 to 50 cents, we received about $5,000,000 more at that rate than we received when the rate stood at $2. I am satisfied there is a point, not very far above the present rate at which we now tax spirits, beyond which we shall cease to get additional revenue, and will probably get less. It is like the point of full saturation of air. When we have forced a certain amount of moisture into a given quantity of air we cannot force a drop more into it by any amount of pressure that may be brought to bear upon it.

Mr. KASSON. What is that point?

Mr. GARFIELD. I doubt if we can collect a dollar. I believe we can collect 85 cents; and I doubt if a higher rate will yield any addition of revenue.

Mr. DAWES. I would like to know the data on which the gentleman fixes 85 cents as the dew-point.

Mr. SYPHER. That is the whisky point.

Mr. GARFIELD. Our past experience has shown that a high rate breaks down the machinery of collection. In the great debate had in this House when the tax was fixed at its present rate the subject was very fully considered, and 70 cents was considered the safe maximum. Our machinery is now more perfect, and I think a small increase is safe; but when .4 of the value of a gallon of spirits is the tax upon it, the temptation to evade the law is very great.

I have offered the amendment just read by the Clerk because it is in the line of safe precedent. If we can collect $1 per gallon, I shall be very glad to support that rate. But I offer this to evoke the judgment of the House upon it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DAWES. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "85 cents" and inserting "$1," and then the question will be before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment is now pending to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] proposes to perfect the section by striking out so many words and inserting others, making the amount of the tax 85 cents on whisky on hand. I move to strike out "85 cents" and insert "$1;" then the question will be before the House.

Mr. COX. I understand that the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] is a substitute for the first section of the bill, and I propose to amend the original text of the first section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hold that the first amendment pending is that offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] to strike out the first section and substitute what he proposes therefor; that an amendment to that is pending, and that no further amendment is in order until the committee shall have passed on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. DAWES. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that if the first section be stricken out and what the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations proposes to insert be substituted, it cannot be amended any further by striking out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hold that the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio cannot be further amended, being an amendment to an amendment, and the committee had better first vote upon it.

Mr. DAWES. Is it not in order to move to amend his amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. BURCHARD. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] offered it as a substitute for the first section of the bill; and therefore it would be in order to amend it.

Mr. HOSKINS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The proposition, as I understand it, is that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] has offered a substitute for the bill. Now, my parliamentary inquiry goes to this: Is not an amendment to the substitute in order and also an amendment to the original text? Clearly under the rules both are in order, both an amendment to the original text and an amendment to the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. Was the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio offered as a substitute?

Mr. GARFIELD. I offered it as a substitute for the original text.

The CHAIRMAN. Then it is amendable by another motion.

Mr. DAWES. I now offer my amendment.

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] to have yielded to the gentleman from Massachusetts who has moved to amend the substitute offered by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] and that amendment will be considered as pending.

Mr. COX. I now offer the following amendment:

At the end of the section add these words:

And provided further, That on all champagne wine imported the duty be, and is hereby, increased from $6 per dozen quarts to $9 per dozen, and on pints from $3 per dozen to $4.50 per dozen.

I propose that amendment in the interest of revenue. The consumption of champagne in 1873 was 234,000 dozen. The increased duty would bring additional $372,000 revenue. The duty on champagne is the lightest on record—it is only 56 per cent. ad valorem; while that on spirits is 400 per cent. and on still wines 120 per cent. The tax on whisky at 70 cents is 200 per cent. If gentlemen want to raise revenue by taxes on luxuries here is a beautiful opportunity.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. How much would the tax produce?

Mr. COX. Sixty-seven thousand six hundred dollars.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Is it in order now to amend the first section?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I desire to say a word in regard to that amendment, and in doing it I respond first to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, and I thank him for having made the discovery—and he has a genius for making discoveries—has told us that the West is wealthy and that it is the poor East that should escape taxation. Under this proposed arrangement the consumers would have to pay the tax on incomes by increased interest on the money loaned to him. That, however, is the only tax which will reach the constituency of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] and the only form of taxation really which can be made to reach the portion of the country from which he comes. They do not do anything there except to count over their incomes, their receipts from rents, and their interest upon the money loaned to us, and it is fair to tax that industry. It is true you are engaged in manufactures, but they yield nothing to the Government in the way of revenue. Why not add something by way of taxation on your manufactures? We will pay it and not complain of it. Why not impose a tax on your incomes? We will pay that by paying increased interest on the loans which you make us.

The argument made here by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] in reference to the burden of taxation is strictly and literally true. The principle underlying all taxes on the commodity under consideration in this section is the same on which all taxation is based. It is true the consumer must ultimately pay it, but primarily it is a burden and a hardship on industry. Upon a question of this kind it is not worthy to say that the tax on a product is all collected back again, and therefore is not a burden upon the producer. It is a burden on us who are developing our resources and borrowing money and capital for that purpose, because we are too poor to furnish it ourselves.

As I said a few moments ago when I had the floor, I will not insist that there should be no taxation or increase of taxation on this commodity. I do not know but it should be taxed. But there are principles underlying it all which require that it should be administered in a spirit of fairness and justice, with some reference to locality and capital and wealth, instead of laying it all upon those who are trying to build up fortunes, and have not already amassed them.

Mr. DAWES. If the gentleman will move an amendment imposing a tax on incomes he will get my vote for it.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. There is such a proposition to be moved, and I hope to see if there is not some way by which the real wealth of the country can be reached and made to pay its share of the burdens.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DAWES. I wish to state my proposition distinctly to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate is exhausted upon the pending amendment.

Mr. DAWES. Then I will withdraw it for the purpose of renewing it.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I object to that.

Mr. DAWES. I do not want to consume the time unnecessarily, but I desire to state my proposition to the House so that it may be understood.

Mr. PENDLETON. If the gentleman will withdraw his amendment I will renew it and yield the floor to him.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to say—

Mr. HEREFORD. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. HEREFORD. My point of order is that under the rules no gentleman can speak more than once upon a proposition until all others who desire to do so have been heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BURCHARD. I desire to ask what is the original proposition?

The CHAIRMAN. The original proposition is the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SOUTHARD] to strike out the first section of the bill. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. GARFIELD] moves a substitute for the section, and the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. DAWES] offers an amendment to that substitute.

Mr. PENDLETON. I understood the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] to withdraw his amendment to the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. That was objected to and it could not be done.

Mr. BURCHARD. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURCHARD. No motion has been made to amend the original text of the section, except by way of a substitute for the whole section. I desire to move an amendment to the original text, which under the rules of the House I think is in order.

Mr. COX. That is what I proposed to do, and I was ruled out of order.

Mr. BURCHARD. I understand that under the rules an amendment of the original proposition is in order, and an amendment to that amendment; it is also in order to move to strike out the entire original text, and a motion to insert a substitute is also in order, and to amend the substitute. That I believe is the extent to which amendments are permitted by the rules of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. No amendment has been offered to the original section for the purpose of perfecting it. The only amendment to the original section which has been offered is the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

Mr. KASSON. I have a proviso to offer on behalf of the committee, to perfect the first section. If it is in order I will offer it now, and other gentlemen can speak upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] first rose to move an amendment to the original section to perfect it.

Mr. COX. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognized the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. COX. I offered the amendment in regard to champagne, to come in at the end of the section. That was before any substitute was offered.

Mr. BURCHARD. I rise to oppose the amendment, and to say a word or two in regard to the proposition to reduce the tax on distilled spirits from $1 to 85 cents. In my judgment, if we touch this tax at all, we had better fix it at some rate that will probably remain permanent. As I said a few moments ago, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue favors the tax of $1. It seems desirable that we should fix it at a round sum. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] admits that there are no figures to show that 85 cents is just the point at which the tax should stand. He refers to the small amount collected under the $2 tax; but the Committee of the Whole will remember that we had then an entirely different system; we had not the stamp system and the system of Government supervision, as we have now. At present the Government takes charge of the distilleries; in fact, as has been said, it runs them. About all that the distiller does is to furnish the capital and pay the tax. Under this system we can, in the opinion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, collect a tax of $1 per gallon. If you now adopt a tax of 85 or 90 cents, the trade will constantly be disturbed with the idea that at some time the tax is to be advanced to $1. It is these constant changes that cause embarrassment in business and create frauds in the revenue.

If you now attempt to impose this tax upon stocks on hand no doubt those who have already paid the tax of 70 cents upon their whisky will think they do right to get it out of sight. We had better fix the tax at some rate that will be permanent; and I think that if we put it at $1 it will stay there. I hope that either the tax will not be raised or that it will be fixed at this round sum.

Before concluding I wish to make one statement in regard to the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] to tax simply the distilled spirits hereafter manufactured at 85 cents. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] is to make the rate $1. If the latter amendment, together with that of the gentleman from Ohio, be adopted, it will tax distilled spirits hereafter manufactured at the rate of $1 per gallon.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HEREFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of opposing this whole bill, and will try in the few minutes allowed me to show that it is the duty of the Forty-third Congress, before it goes out of power, instead of imposing an additional tax upon the people, to take some action in favor of retrenchment and reform and the cutting down of expenses. For this purpose I desire to draw the attention of the House to a few facts and figures.

From the foundation of this Government, March 4, 1789, to June 30, 1874, there was received into the Treasury of the United States $6,049,034,567.15. During the eight years commencing July 1, 1866, and ending July 1, 1874, there was received into the Treasury $3,473,622,887.55, making about $400,000,000 more received into the Treasury within these eight years than was received from the foundation of the Government down to July 1, 1874. In view of these figures, I ask this Congress whether it is not high time that we should engage in the work of retrenchment and reform and cutting down our expenses.

Furthermore, the same report of the Secretary of the Treasury shows that on the 1st of July, 1866 the debt of the United States was $2,773,236,173.69. Thus we received into the Treasury of the United States during those eight years the enormous sum of $700,000,000 more than the whole debt of the United States. Yet gentlemen tell us that we must still impose additional taxes upon the people of the United States.

It is further shown by the last report of the Bureau of Statistics that our exports for last year were more than they have been in any year since the foundation of the Government. Yet we are told that we need more money; that our Treasury is not in as prosperous a condition as it should be.

On page 13 of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury submitted to this Congress we find the net ordinary receipts from March 4, 1789, to June 30, 1874, were $6,049,034,567.15; and the net ordinary receipts for—

1866.....	$519,949,564 38
1867.....	462,846,679 92
1868.....	376,434,453 82
1869.....	357,188,256 09
1870.....	395,959,833 87
1871.....	374,431,104 94
1872.....	364,694,222 91
1873.....	322,177,673 78
1874.....	299,941,090 84

3,473,622,887 55

In the same report we find the indebtedness of the United States on June 30, 1866, was $2,773,236,173.69, and the amount received between June 30, 1866, and June 30, 1874, was $3,473,622,887.20, showing that the receipts in those eight years were $700,386,713.51 more than the whole debt of the United States was on June 30, 1876. We also find from the last report of the Bureau of Statistics that our exports from September 30 to June 30 in merchandise (domestic) were $569,433,421, and foreign exports during same period were $16,849,619, making an aggregate for that period of $586,283,040, which is more than our exports ever were before for a like period. And we are also told in the same report that our imports in merchandise during the same period were $567,403,342, leaving a balance of trade in our favor of $18,876,698. I wish my time allowed me to amplify and draw the legitimate conclusions from these figures. During the year 1860 (President Buchanan's administration) our entire expenditures, including war, Navy pensions, and Indians, were only $60,056,754.71; while during the eight years from June 30, 1866, to June 30, 1874, our expenditures, excluding the interest on the public debt and pensions, averaged per year about $250,000,000. I regret I have not the time to make the proper application, but it seems to me comment is unnecessary. We must economize.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GARFIELD. In order to harmonize conflicting views upon this subject, I modify my amendment so as to make the tax $1 instead of 85 cents.

Mr. KELLEY. Is that debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. The change can only be made by unanimous consent.

Mr. KELLEY. Then I object.

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] has the right to modify his own amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will so modify my amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. Is not that open to debate? It is a new proposition. It has never been debated.

Mr. GARFIELD. It has been debated five minutes on each side. I merely accepted the amendment as a modification of my own.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order until after the committee has voted on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. COX. I ask that my amendment be read.

The amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the substitute of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GARFIELD. To which the gentleman from Massachusetts has moved an amendment.

Mr. DAWES. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Is it in order to move an amendment to the substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Then I move to amend by adding to the proviso what I send to the Chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section 3339 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be and is so amended as to strike out the words "one dollar" where they occur in said section, and insert in lieu thereof "two dollars."

Mr. DAWES. I reserve the point of order until I hear what the gentleman has to say.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Chairman, the law now levies a tax of $1 a barrel upon ale and beer, and I propose to make it $2 a barrel. I will state in a few words my reason for doing so. The tax on whisky is now 300 per cent. and the tax on tobacco from 300 to 400 per cent., while the tax on ale and beer is only 10 per cent.

Mr. DAWES. I rise to a question of order, that the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio is not germane to the pending substitute, although it may be German enough.

Mr. LAWRENCE. It is germane enough. As I have said, the tax on ale and beer is now only about 10 per cent. There is no one article upon which a tax is levied which is so lightly taxed as ale and beer. I do believe this amendment ought to be agreed to. It will bring into the Treasury $8,000,000 of revenue.

Mr. SPEER. "There are millions in it."

Mr. LAWRENCE. Certainly there are—there are eight millions of revenue in it. I know no reason why ale and beer should not be taxed.

Mr. DAWES. I do not withdraw my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts withhold it until the gentleman has finished his remarks?

Mr. DAWES. I insist on my point of order at the proper time, but withhold it until the gentleman from Ohio has completed his statement.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I know no reason why the tax on ale and beer should not be increased as well as the tax on whisky and tobacco. If it is practicable to collect a higher rate of duty on whisky and tobacco, a higher rate of tax could much more effectually be collected on ale and beer, and much more effectually than on any other article under existing laws. I doubt myself whether higher rates of duty on whisky and tobacco can be collected. The result will be, I think, if you increase the tax on whisky, that illicit distilleries will spring up in the mountains of Virginia and North Carolina and other States just as they did when we imposed a tax of $2 a gallon on whisky. Illicit distilleries will spring up in the garrets and cellars of New York and Philadelphia, and a large amount of whisky will be manufactured upon which no tax will be collected.

I am willing to impose on whisky any tax which can be faithfully and fully collected, but it is idle, it is worse than useless, to impose a tax which we cannot collect at all. I submit that mine is a judicious amendment.

Mr. DAWES. I now insist on my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts rises to a point of order on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, and he will state it.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Chairman, it does not seem to me that the gentleman's amendment is germane to the pending proposition which refers to another subject of taxation entirely.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts whether the first section in any way affects fermented liquors?

Mr. DAWES. It does not affect fermented liquors in the least.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, on that statement of facts, sustains the point of order, and rules the amendment out.

Mr. HOSKINS. Allow me to say a word in reference to the point of order before the Chair decides it. If the point of order is made that the amendment to the substitute is not germane to the substitute, I have no doubt that the ruling of the Chair is correct. I desire to know distinctly of the Chair if he expects to rule out all propositions to increase or decrease taxation on any commodity not mentioned in this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair certainly has given no such intimation, and has no such intention; but the Chair, having first consulted with the journal clerk, will rule that upon any proposition involving a tax upon articles not covered by a particular section the committee must reach it in another way, by the motion to add another section, and that amendments will only be received which are germane to the subject-matter of the section, while that section is pending.

Mr. PARSONS. The Chair is clearly right, because in this case this is an amendment to the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not in order.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to offer an amendment to the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

It shall be lawful for the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to permit and authorize any distiller or rectifier of spirits, or other persons specially licensed in that behalf, to mix, under the conditions and regulations hereinafter mentioned, spirit of wine of not less degree of strength than 50 per cent. over proof, and in a quantity of not less than four hundred and fifty gallons at one time, with not less than one-ninth of its bulk-measure of wood naphtha or methyllic alcohol, or to mix spirit of wine of such other degree of strength and in such other quantity or proportion with wood naphtha or methyllic alcohol, or with such other article or substance as the said Commissioner shall from time to time approve, order, and direct, and as to the satisfaction of the said Commissioner shall render such spirit unfit for use as a beverage, and incapable of being converted to that purpose; and thereupon such mixture shall be allowed tax free for use in such branches of the arts and manufactures of the United States as the said Commissioner shall sanction or approve in that behalf; or if such mixture shall be made by a rectifier with duty-paid spirit of wine, he shall be allowed a drawback of the tax on such spirit of wine.

And the said mixture of spirit of wine with the wood naphtha or methyllic alcohol shall be denominated methylated spirit, and the mixture of spirit of wine with any other substance appointed or approved by the said Commissioner for the purpose aforesaid shall be designated by such term as they shall from time to time direct; and wherever in this act the term methylated spirit is used, the same shall be deemed to include any and every such other mixture as last mentioned; and the several provisions of this act shall be deemed to apply to any and every such last-mentioned mixture as if the term by which the said Commissioner shall direct the same to be designated had been substituted in this act for and in lieu of the term methylated spirit.

Mr. KELLEY. The amendment I have proposed is in the language of the British act of Parliament, which has been tested by the experience of twenty years. It is the act of June 26, 1855, the preamble to which reads as follows:

Whereas it is expedient, with a view to promote the advancement of the arts and manufactures of the United Kingdom, to allow spirit of wine to be used duty free in the various processes thereof: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if any legislation that shall be proposed in connection with this bill is pertinent, this is so. We are about to grant a gratuity of $12,000,000 to the distillers and dealers in spirituous liquors of this country. The stock on hand is 40,000,000 gallons, and the addition of 30 cents amounts to $12,000,000. This enters largely into your manufactures. According to the best estimate I have been able to obtain, about one-half of the distilled liquors made goes into our manufactures. And by giving this gratuity to the dealers in spirits, you are going to close the chemical and other kindred establishments of the country. You are going to impose additional taxes upon an infinite number of your industries, and all for the purpose of lavishing $12,000,000 upon the favorites of this Congress.

I appeal to gentlemen, for the honor of Congress, either to impose no tax or to tax stock on hand. It is true that the Commissioner says stock on hand cannot be taxed and the tax collected. Then forego giving this great benefaction to favored distillers and dealers in spirits. In God's name permit your honest industries to go on and prosper as they can, and not break them down for the benefit of a favored class.

A good many of us remember the scandal raised by the gratuity made when we increased this tax in other days, and I tell gentlemen that it will be no less foul a scandal when they shall have perpetrated this wrong, for a wrong it is. Let there be a clearly proven demand of the Treasury for revenues and then let the revenues be adjusted.

At any rate my amendment proposes to give to the manufacturers of this country what England has found it necessary, after twenty years' experience, to give to her manufactures—free spirit of wine on condition that it be methylated or reduced to a condition in which it cannot be consumed as a beverage, but may be used in the arts.

Mr. KASSON. The subject to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania alludes to, was considered by the Committee on Ways and Means, and not only has it been considered now, but it was considered during my former service on the committee years ago, when the first tax was imposed upon whisky. This process of methylation, I beg leave to say to the committee, is one by which the attempt is made to interject a material into the whisky so as to destroy its quality for drinking, but not to destroy its utility in the arts. There has been the greatest difficulty in accomplishing this result. I am informed by my colleague on the committee from Illinois, [Mr. BURCHARD,] who has recently examined this subject, that the English government have been compelled to repeal the law to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania refers, in consequence of the frequent evasions of it.

Mr. KELLEY. Let me state that the law is now in effect in England.

Mr. BURCHARD. No, sir. All the reports state that the act was repealed two years ago, because of the frequent evasions of it.

Mr. KASSON. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania is in error, at least so far as this particular law is concerned. The difficulty is that it was found that the article mixed with the spirit could be separated from it, and the spirit thrown upon the market. I think it clear that this committee will agree with the Committee on Ways and Means that we cannot, without the report of experts, adopt such a complete change in the laws as this proposes. I doubt if the committee are prepared to adopt this law even if the English government have perfected a system that they cannot maintain. I do not know that I ought to take up the time of the committee by further discussing this question. If we adopt this proposition at all, it should only be done after an examination by a committee of experts.

Mr. BURLEIGH. I desire to amend the amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is in the second degree, and is not amendable.

The question was taken on Mr. KELLEY's amendment; and on a division there were ayes 28, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I move to amend the substitute offered by my colleague [Mr. GARFIELD] by adding thereto the following proviso:

Provided, That in addition to the tax of 70 cents per gallon imposed by laws now existing, there shall be levied and collected a tax of 15 cents, being one-half the increase of tax under this act, on each and every proof gallon, or wine gallon, when below proof, of domestic distilled spirits manufactured and placed in bonded warehouse prior to the day when this act shall take effect and held in bonded warehouse at that time, and on all such spirits then held by distillers, rectifiers, or wholesale dealers, having in their possession or under their control distilled spirits in stamped packages; and any person who shall sell, transfer, or otherwise dispose of any such distilled spirits after this act takes effect until an additional stamp, to be especially provided for this purpose by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, denoting the payment of the additional tax, the 15 cents per gallon herein imposed as proposed, and attached to the package or packages containing the same, in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall prescribe, shall be subject to and pay a penalty of $1 for each and every gallon so removed.

That is included in the original bill, and merely proposes to tax the stock on hand.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I ask that the amendment be read as it will stand if amended.

The Clerk read the amendment as it would read if amended.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I rise to a point of order. Does the substitute of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] include a tax on whisky on hand, or is it not altogether on whisky manufactured after the passage of this act? If I am right in this, then the amendment now offered by the gentleman from Ohio on my right [Mr. GUNCKEL] is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] is in relation to the whole section, and is a substitute for it. The Chair will rule that it may be amended by adding anything to it which is contained in the original text for which it is offered as a substitute.

Mr. GUNCKEL. My proposition is that the tax of 85 cents or $1 shall apply to the stock on hand. My friend from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] estimates the stock on hand at 40,000,000 gallons, and that would yield a revenue of $12,000,000; or, as he estimates it, from eight to ten millions of dollars. Now, it is a question whether the House is going to vote eight, ten, or twelve millions of dollars into the hands of speculators.

There are upon the floor to-day a number of gentlemen lobbying. For what? A tax on whisky, but not a tax on the stock on hand. The original bill taxed stock on hand. We who represent where there are distilleries said to our constituents that we presumed the Committee on Ways and Means were acting in good faith, and they acted accordingly. They did not run their distilleries night and day and Sundays and all the time; but certain gentlemen in other localities ran their distilleries night and day and Sundays, and these men have millions of gallons on hand to-day, and they have sent their lobby here, and these gentlemen are lobbying here to get the House to do what? To have millions of dollars put into their hands and not into the Treasury of the United States. I say for one that I will vote no money into the hands of speculators and lobbyists; but I will vote to do whatever may be necessary for the Treasury and for the Treasury only.

Mr. LAWRENCE. That is right.

Mr. MAYNARD. Has not the gentleman reason to believe that since the project of raising the tax on whisky has been voted upon there have been very large speculations in whisky, laying up large stocks in the expectation of legislation for the benefit of speculators?

Mr. GUNCKEL. Certainly. And I will say further that when the tax was raised on whisky before, all the papers of the country said that members of Congress were interested in whisky, in having the rates raised so as to benefit by the increase of the value of the stocks on hand in which they had an interest. I want to have any imputation of this sort done away with now by a provision which will tax the stock on hand, so that the whisky shall pay the increased tax.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] which proposes to levy a tax on the stock of spirits on hand. For that matter, I may say that I am opposed to every feature and section of this bill. I would inquire here why upon the very threshold of this discussion a threat or an intimidation is attempted by leading gentlemen upon the other side of the House, and cast as a reflection upon those on the democratic side? Why is it that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] or my friend from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] are of the opinion that the democratic side of the House is not as willing to sustain the dignity and honor and faith of the country as any gentleman upon the republican side of the House?

The charge that is made here is one that has been flaunted off and again during the last few years. Yet there is nothing in any act of the democratic party, whether here or elsewhere, that will sustain such a charge. I will state to gentlemen upon the other side that if the faith and honor of the country are at stake at this time, if the pretended emergency sought to be met by this bill is one which really exists, then it is a peril of their own making and their own choosing. Why is it that the now languishing industries of the country are not sufficient through the imposts and the taxes already levied upon them to pay the current obligations of the country? Is it not because of the maladministration and of the corruption and extravagance in office? Every charge that has been made by this side against the republican party, I will remark here, has been signally sustained, every one of them, by the judgment of the people at the late elections. Therefore it does not come with good grace from the other side of the House to say when we oppose this bill that we are acting in bad faith.

We oppose this bill because we believe there is no necessity for it. We oppose it further because of the fact that we believe many of its features will be inoperative and impracticable, and instead of increasing the revenues will take from those which we already have.

Did I believe that there was any necessity for additional taxation to meet the current demands of the country, or to keep faith with any of our creditors, foreign or domestic, while I would yield to the demand for more revenue, I would hesitate long before raising it in the manner and from the industries and articles included in this measure. Your cry for more revenue may be delusive or the phantom of your fears. Why not attain the same end by rigorous economy in your appropriations? Your demand is a confession of the necessity of economy, which as yet you do not know how to practice. Expenses are on the increase, as the reports from the Treasury clearly show. We all remember the elaborate speeches during the last session of the gentleman from Massachusetts, chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, and of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.] How rose-colored were their statements of abundant resources and the cutting down of expenses; and now within a year we are told that the Treasury is bankrupt and unless new revenues are obtained by further oppression of the people the honor and faith of the country are in peril and may be sacrificed. Is not this the fear of the coming wrath of an indignant people when the wanton profligate extravagance of the Government is unveiled, as it surely will be by the next Congress?

Now, Mr. Chairman, the want of any necessity for this bill has been clearly shown by the member of the Ways and Means Committee from New York, [Mr. WOOD.] He has demonstrated that the present revenues are ample if legally applied; that the hundreds of millions of bonds heretofore purchased in order to decrease the public debt, if applied under the statute to the sinking fund, will be sufficient for years to come to comply with the law requiring 1 per cent. of the debt to be annually applied to that fund. Then, if there be no deficit, why more taxes? The advocates of this bill are anxious to sustain the value of the bonds, but callous to the sufferings of the people. Every industry and department of trade is looking to the Congress for relief from the paralysis brought about by the financial blunders of the Government, and it is now proposed to answer their wail of distress by imposing additional taxes.

The republican party is incapable of appreciating the necessities of the hour. All intent on further oppressing the South and by revolutionary methods attempting to retain power, it no longer legislates for the people or seeks to renew that prosperity which has been wasted by improvident and corrupt government. The first section of this bill levies an additional tax of 30 cents on spirits hereafter manufactured and 15 cents on stocks on hand. The spirit trade, Mr. Chairman, is one of the largest and most important industries of the country. Leaving out of view the moral question involved in the manufacture and sale of spirits, it is a production which should not be unduly taxed, as it now yields one-fourth of all the revenues of the Government. The cost of production of spirits is about one-fourth of its market value, the other three-fourths being taxes paid the Government. It is but fair to say that no industry pays more cheerfully or promptly this tax of 70 cents as now levied. It is well known that when the tax was $2 per gallon the revenue was less than is now collected. The explanation is plain; illicit distillation and corrupt officials let a flood of untaxed spirits on the market. A further increase of tax at this time may accomplish a like result.

The proposition to tax the stock of spirits on hand is, I think, liable to a fatal objection. It will be practically inoperative, and will be beyond doubt be productive of decreased revenues. It is estimated that the full amount that under the most favorable circumstances can be obtained from this tax will be about one and three-quarters millions. Now let us look to the result. The spirits on hand are to be found in the wholesale houses and distilleries in all parts of the country. The tax of 70 cents has been paid. They are considered by the trade as free goods, so declared by the Government; and is it not fair that this faith should be kept? But it is said that the holders of this stock will derive large profits and should pay a tax on that account. Why, Mr. Chairman, any change in tax or tariff will profit somebody, and in this case, as the change is the act of the Government, the spirit trade needs no vindication.

The imposition of this tax will require large additional capital from many dealers and prove ruinous to some who could not in these times raise the required capital. This money could not be raised even by a sacrifice of their stocks on hand, as until the tax is paid no sales could take place. A paralysis of trade would ensue, the demand would be decreased, and less production would follow, distilleries would be compelled to stop, and as a consequence the revenues would be greatly diminished. The practical effect of this tax would necessarily interfere with all buying and selling until each dealer's stock was ascertained by official inspection. This is apparent. Take a large dealer who has many barrels of every grade and degree of proof of spirits, some in barrels and more in rectifying-tanks. How long would it take a skilled officer to accurately measure and verify such a stock, and what is to be the manner of daily business in the mean time. It would take weeks of time and cause a cessation of business.

Now, sir, this is but one case, and there are many thousands such in all the States and Territories. Besides, sir, it is not possible to comply with this law in the course of two or three months without the aid of thousands of new officials. Is this contemplated? Is it seriously proposed to create a new army of officials to prey upon the substance of the people? The collection of this revenue would in the nature of things, through the incompetency of the newly-fledged Government agents, be productive of great oppression, unlimited frauds, and endless litigation. I therefore assert, Mr. Chairman, that from the paralysis of trade, decrease in production, and the immense costs of such collection incident to the employment of thousands of inefficient officers, the revenues would be diminished more than they could be advanced by this 15 cents tax on stocks in hand.

I understand that this bill is brought forward to supply temporary deficiencies, to bridge over a supposed difficulty of making both ends meet in the Treasury. I doubt its efficacy, and I protest against its accumulation of wrongs. I need not discuss the other sections which refer to tobacco and sugar. The whole bill is opposed to the interests of the people and in the interests of the bondholders and the already highly-protected industries of the country. Why not impose a tax on national banks, make the money-power of New England contribute its share? O, no; this is carefully avoided. They are privileged. The people, the trading interests, the commerce of the country must bear all the burdens. This is the standard of republican representation of the people; and by this standard they have been judged and found wanting.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was upon the amendment of Mr. GUNCKEL to the substitute of Mr. GARFIELD, and was taken by a via voce vote.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair the "ayes" have it.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Does this amendment now pending exhaust the power of amendment? If another amendment is in order, I wish to move one by way of correction. The question cannot fairly be taken on the amendment, because it contains something inconsistent with the substitute offered by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

The CHAIRMAN. No amendment is now in order to the substitute moved by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.] The amendment pending is an amendment in the second degree, and must be voted upon.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to offer an amendment to perfect the original section. I move to amend the original section by inserting at the end of the first proviso, in line 34 of the printed bill, that which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That whenever it shall be shown by testimony under oath, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury, that any person liable to pay the increased tax upon domestic distilled spirits by this act imposed had, prior to the 10th day of February, 1875, made a contract for the future delivery of such spirits at a fixed price, which contract was in writing prior to that date, such spirits may be delivered to the contracting party entitled thereto under special permit from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue provided therefor, without previous payment of such additional tax; but the said additional tax shall be a lien thereon, and shall be paid by and collected from the purchaser under such contract before the sale or removal thereof by him, and when demanded by the collector of internal revenue for the district to which the same shall be removed for delivery to the purchaser; and any sale or removal by such purchaser, prior to the payment of such tax, shall subject him and the spirits so sold or removed to all the penalties and processes of law provided in the case of distillers so selling or removing spirits to avoid the payment of tax.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I ask how, pending a division of the committee upon my amendment, it is possible for the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] to get in another amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and rules the amendment out of order.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. GUNCKEL, there were—ayes 91, noes 46; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GUNCKEL and Mr. BANNING were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 118, noes 38. So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STORM. I move to amend by striking out the words "$1" where they first occur in the section, and inserting "85 cents." I yield my time to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SAYLER.]

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rise to debate the amendment and to oppose this section in its present form. I wish particularly to respond to the statements of my colleague, [Mr. GUNCKEL,] who has presented the amendment to tax stock on hand, and who has declared that proposition to be in the interest of the country and hostile only to the interests of speculators. I undertake to say that if this bill should become a law in the form in which it has just been amended on motion of my colleague, it will produce a financial panic in the whole whisky-producing country, and 50 per cent. of the establishments engaged in that business will be broken up. It is not an amendment against the interests of speculators. It is against the interests of every dealer—of every man engaged in this business who has a contract for the delivery of future supplies of whisky.

I hold in my hand a dispatch from one dealer in Cincinnati, and I refer to it as an example, who says that he has now unfilled orders to the amount of 3,000 barrels. The high wines have been purchased at the rate of about $1.05, which anticipates about 12 cents of the proposed tax, and illustrates the change of values already effected by the introduction of this most injurious bill. These 3,000 barrels contain an average of 43 gallons each, and a fifteen-cent assessment would cause a loss of $20,000.

Mr. DAWES. I will state to the gentleman that I have prepared an amendment which meets that very case, which will permit that man to put the additional tax upon the purchaser.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. I am very glad to hear that something of that kind is to be proposed, and that possibly something humane may enter into this bill after awhile.

If you pass the amendment in its present form, you will produce financial distress throughout the entire whisky-producing section of the country—not only financial panic, but such a prostration in business as will lead to a great diminution of the amount of revenue instead of a great increase, as is anticipated. I undertake to say that for the next year the amount of revenue derived will be 50 per cent. less than it has been in the past, on account of this panic and distress. I undertake to say further that if you put the bill through in its present form, you only give an increased incentive to frauds that are already going on in the country. Prostration of business means a lack of revenue; and this high tax upon whisky in bond, upon whisky in store, and upon whisky to be manufactured means additional frauds upon the revenue of the Government.

I said awhile ago that if there were an honest effort to collect this excise tax, 25 per cent. additional revenue would be obtained from the present tax of 70 cents a gallon. I also gave some instances of fraud. I agree with the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that there cannot be fraud under the present system without collusion of Government officers; but I undertake to say that it is a fact patent to every man who examines the subject, that in many districts of the country the Government officers are in collusion with the illicit and dishonest distillers; and I undertake to say that if honest officials were substituted for dishonest officials in certain districts, a much greater revenue would be obtained and the provisions of this bill be rendered unnecessary.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GUNCKEL. My friend and colleague [Mr. SAYLER] says that if my amendment, which the House has chosen to adopt, be enacted unto law it will create a panic. A panic with whom? Why, sir, my colleague does not look beyond Cincinnati, where there are some ten or twelve speculators who have on hand a large stock of whisky, amounting to millions of gallons. No doubt the adoption of such a provision would create a panic with them, and it ought to; because they have been trying to speculate at the expense of the business interests of the country; but the result will be that the ten or twelve million dollars which the speculators want to go into their hands will go into the Treasury of the United States. Sir, the amendment is a good one; the House did a good thing in adopting it, so as to give the benefit of this tax to the Treasury of the country and not to a few speculators.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. The large dealers are the very men who will not suffer; the small dealers are the very men who will.

A MEMBER. And the manufacturers.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. Yes, and the manufacturers. My colleague [Mr. GUNCKEL] is entirely mistaken in his statement.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. STORM, it was not agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. Now, if we can have a vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] I will then move that the committee rise.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I wish to inquire whether by the adoption of the amendment of my colleague [Mr. GARFIELD] we do not thereby lose the amendment of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. DAWES. No, sir; that is an amendment to the original bill.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. But it is not an amendment to the substitute.

Mr. DAWES. Then vote down this amendment.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. So I say.

Mr. DAWES. There is no occasion to adopt the amendment in its present shape. It does not change the result.

Mr. CESSNA. If the substitute be adopted as it now stands I understand it differs in nothing from the original bill; that to adopt the amendment will strike out the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Cox.]

The CHAIRMAN. That undoubtedly will be the effect.

Mr. CESSNA. Then it has no other effect than to strike out the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] and will leave the bill to stand as it is. Therefore I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. GARFIELD's amendment, as amended, was rejected.

Mr. DAWES. I now move the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and, the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HALE, of Maine, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration a bill (H. R. No. 4680) to further protect the sinking fund, and provide for the exigencies of the Government, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their Clerks, informed the House that that body had passed a bill (H. R. No. 4669) to provide for the selection of grand and petit jurors in the District of Columbia, with an amendment; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

It further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution (H. R. No. 135) appointing managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 2102) to incorporate the Capital, North O Street and South Washington Railway Company;

An act (H. R. No. 3080) to authorize the Seneca Nation of New York Indians to lease lands within the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations and to confirm existing leases;

An act (H. R. No. 3623) regulating fees and costs, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 3825) to amend section 5240 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in relation to the compensation of national-bank examiners;

An act (H. R. No. 3915) to authorize the Secretary of War to give permission to extend the Hygeia Hotel at Fortress Monroe, Virginia;

An act (H. R. No. 4126) authorizing the Citizens' National Bank of Sanbornton, New Hampshire, to change its name; and

An act (H. R. No. 4676) for the relief of actual settlers on lands claimed to be swamp and overflowed lands in the State of Missouri.

GRAND AND PETIT JURIES IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Speaker, the bill (H. R. No. 4669) to provide for the selection of grand and petit juries in the District of Columbia has been returned from the Senate with a verbal amendment which if not now concurred in will cause the loss of the bill. I therefore move by unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill and amendment, and that the amendment be concurred in.

Mr. STRAIT, and Mr. BUTLER of Massachusetts, objected.

Mr. DAWES. I do not wonder that the gentleman from Minnesota should object, but I hope my colleague will not object.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. O, pardon me, but I will.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STORM. I move that the House take a recess until half past seven this evening when the session has been set apart for reports from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. COBURN. I rise to a privileged question.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. COBURN. I wish to submit a privileged report from the select committee to investigate outrages in Alabama.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. The motion for a recess must be first put.

Mr. MERRIAM. What is to come up in the night session?

The SPEAKER. Reports from the Judiciary Committee.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 92, noes 40.

Mr. SPEER. Before the Chair announces the result I wish he would state exactly for what purpose the session this evening has been assigned.

The SPEAKER. On Monday last under a suspension of the rules the Judiciary Committee was given the privilege to report this evening, but with the limitation that no political bills or bills involving an appropriation of money should be reported.

Mr. SPEER. That is what I wished to have stated.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. And I hope everybody will be here.

So the motion was agreed to.

And then (at four o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until seven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at half past seven o'clock.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The House, pursuant to order, meets to-night to consider reports from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I desire to offer some amendments to the tax and tariff bill, and ask unanimous consent to have them printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know whether, an order having been specifically made that the House should meet to-night to consider business of the Judiciary Committee, requests for unanimous consent for any other business can be entertained.

Mr. SPEER. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it safer to limit business to reports of the Judiciary Committee absolutely.

GEORGIA NORTHERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT.

Mr. POLAND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 4662) to change the location of the office of United States marshal in the northern district of Georgia.

The bill was read. It provides that the office of United States marshal in the northern district of Georgia shall be kept in the city of Atlanta, in that district; and all charges for mileage in the execution of the duties of the marshal's office in the said northern district of Georgia shall be computed from Atlanta.

The second section repeals all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the act.

Mr. SENER. I should like to have some explanation of the provisions of this bill.

Mr. POLAND. In the first place, I will move to amend the bill by striking out the second section as being unnecessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I can explain in a word or two what this bill is. In the State of Georgia there are two judicial districts, but only one judge and one marshal. The court in the northern district formerly sat at Marietta, and the law then provided that for all service of process in the northern district travel should be computed from Marietta. Afterward, by act of Congress, the place of holding the court was changed from Marietta to Atlanta; and this is to cause the marshal's charges for mileage to be computed from that place.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POLAND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FEES OF JURORS, ETC., IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. POLAND also, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 4536) prescribing the fees of jurors and witnesses in the courts of the District of Columbia.

The bill was read. It provides that jurors and witnesses in the courts of the District of Columbia shall receive the same fees as are paid to jurors and witnesses in the courts of the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not the law now provide for that?

Mr. POLAND. It is a question of doubt whether it does or not.

Mr. SPEER. Does this bill give witnesses residing in the District any mileage?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It does not.

Mr. POLAND. Twenty years ago, perhaps, a bill was passed just like this, providing that witnesses and jurors in the courts of this District should have the same fees as in the courts of the United States. Since that time a law has been passed raising the fees of jurors and witnesses in the courts of the United States, and they have understood here that that applied to the courts of this District; but there is a doubt in reference to it. We propose simply to re-enact the same statute.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POLAND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 649 OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. POLAND also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4743) to amend section 649 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It provides that the provisions of section 649 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall be applicable to the district courts of the United States.

Mr. POLAND. The section here referred to provides that questions of fact, by the consent of parties, may be tried by the court in circuit courts, and with the same effect as if the facts were tried and found by a jury. But it does not apply to district courts. This is to make the same provision apply to the district courts, so that questions of fact, if the parties consent, may be tried in the court with the same effect as if they were tried by a jury.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POLAND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN UTAH TERRITORY.

Mr. POLAND also, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 3996) conferring jurisdiction upon the United States courts in the Territory of Utah in certain cases.

The bill was read. It provides that the power and authority vested in the probate courts of the Territory of Utah, under and by virtue of the provisions of the act of the Territorial Legislature, entitled "An act providing for the incorporation of railroad companies, and the management of the affairs thereof," approved February 19, 1869, be, and hereby is, vested in the district courts of the United States in said Territory; and such district courts shall have the same power and authority in all respects as by said act are conferred upon said probate courts.

Mr. CROUNSE. May I inquire of the gentleman from Vermont what is the occasion or reason for passing this bill?

Mr. POLAND. They have in Utah a provision for ascertaining land damages where lands are taken by railroads, a similar law to that existing in most of the States; but the territorial law gave the jurisdiction to probate courts. In the bill that was passed at the last session of Congress it was provided that the jurisdiction of the probate courts in Utah should be confined strictly to probate business; so that there is no court that has jurisdiction to settle these questions of land damages. We have provided that the district courts shall have that jurisdiction.

The provision of the law is that the matter should be referred to commissioners in the vicinity and jurisdiction is taken away from the probate courts.

Mr. SPEER. Is this an exceptional provision as to the Territory of Utah or does the bill apply to all these Territories.

Mr. POLAND. This bill merely applies to the Territory of Utah. It was impossible to ascertain what the law was in the other Territories, but in this case we thought it advisable to confine it to the Territory in which the mischief exists.

Mr. SPEER. If I understand the effect of the bill it is this: the jurisdiction of cases like this is now confined to the probate courts where the parties are residents of the Territory; but this bill proposes to give the district court of the United States jurisdiction over them.

Mr. POLAND. It is confined to all cases where a railroad company takes lands for its railroad purposes from the citizen, and if the question of damages is brought before the court, it is for the court to ascertain the amount. The law now provides that the damages shall be ascertained by commissioners.

Mr. HOLMAN. Allow me to make an inquiry. Of course there are three district courts held in the Territory of Utah, and is the citizen who complains of the action of a railroad company to have the right to have a change made in the court before which his case shall be tried? The case may be tried in either of the courts, and is not that a hardship in a large Territory like the Territory of Utah, where a citizen may be compelled to apply to the courts for redress? Does it not give corporations great advantage in drawing a citizen from his home to a point distant from it, and for that reason would not this bill be an interference with justice in that it authorizes such transfer?

Mr. POLAND. Undoubtedly some little inconvenience of that sort might arise, but I have had some experience in cases of this kind. Legal questions may arise in these cases, and it is thought better that the jurisdiction should be in the district court of the United States; and as the whole trial is to be by commissioners, as the law requires, to be appointed in the county where the land in question is held, we thought it advisable to make this provision.

Mr. SPEER. Does the Delegate from Utah know anything about this bill?

Mr. CESSNA. The Delegate from Utah has been sitting in the House ever since the bill was reported.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan. I will say that there was no controversy about this provision of this bill.

Mr. POLAND. I was furnished by the Delegate from Utah with the law in relation to this subject.

Mr. CANNON, of Utah. It would be a much better law if the power were restored to the probate courts; but in case there is a determination not to leave this power in the hands of the probate court, it would be better to have a clause inserted in this bill like that inserted in the general railroad bill which passed the House a short time since, giving to any court of record the right to adjudicate cases that arise between citizens and railroad companies where condemnation of lands is required for railroad purposes. If that bill were now law there would be no necessity for this bill which we are now considering, as it confers all the power necessary upon all courts of record. The point made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] against the bill as it now stands is a forcible one. Beaver City, where the second judicial court of the Territory of Utah is held, is so far distant that it requires as long a time to travel from the town of Saint George to it as it does to travel from Chicago to Boston, and this bill, if left as it is, will subject the citizens to very great inconvenience.

There can be no objections against the probate court, a court elected by the people, exercising this jurisdiction. It has exercised it without difficulty and without complaint. I imagine the taking away of this power from the probate court was an act of inadvertence at the passage of what is known as the Poland bill.

When upon examination it was found that this power had been taken away from the probate courts, and there was no court in the Territory of Utah that held this power, then steps were taken to frame a bill to supply the defect. I was consulted by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WILLIAMS] upon the subject. I thought, and so told him, that the power should be restored to the probate courts. But he informed me that he had been assured by the gentleman from Vermont that a bill restoring this authority to the probate courts would not be entertained; hence the bill was introduced in its present form. If objections exist to the probate courts having this authority alone, then let it be vested in them and the district courts. It would be much better for the interests of all citizens of the Territory if this bill were amended in this manner. And I move that it be so amended, and that the power be given to any court of record, which will include both the district and probate courts.

Mr. POLAND. I consent that the amendment be offered.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POLAND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RELIEF OF DISTRICT JUDGE OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. POLAND, from the same committee, reported back, with a recommendation that the same do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 4351) for the relief of the judge of the district court of the United States for the western district of Pennsylvania.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill provides that the provisions of section 714 of the Revised Statutes shall be extended and made applicable to Hon. Wilson McCandless, judge of the district court of the United States for the western district of Pennsylvania, in consequence of his physical disability, notwithstanding he has not attained the age of seventy years.

Mr. POLAND. The facts in this case, in reference to the judge of the western district of Pennsylvania, are almost identical with those in the case of the district judge of Vermont, in whose favor we have already passed a bill through both Houses, passing it here under a suspension of the rules. The age is about the same, the length of service just about the same, and the disabilities about the same.

Mr. SENER. What is the age of the judge and the length of service?

Mr. CESSNA. He has been upon the bench about sixteen years, and is now about sixty-six years old.

Mr. SENER. What is his disability?

Mr. CESSNA. Paralysis of the tongue and mouth.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I do not think we ought to pass this bill. We have provided by general law for the retirement of judges under certain circumstances, and I do not think we ought to extend the principle of that law beyond those terms. I know of no reason why a judge should be retired upon a pension any more than any other officer who has served the same length of time. Suppose that a member of Congress has served for sixteen years and is attacked by paralysis, as is the case of this judge; why should he not be retired upon a pension just as it is proposed to retire this judge? That is my view of the matter.

Mr. POLAND. We have already passed a bill in a case almost identical with this—passed it under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. SENER. It was claimed that that would not be a precedent.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POLAND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMMISSION ON THE ALCOHOLIC LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Mr. POLAND, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that the same do pass, the bill (S. No. 161) to provide for the appointment of a commission on the subject of the alcoholic and fermented liquor traffic.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be read a third time.

The first section of the bill provides that there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a commission of five persons, neither of whom shall be the holder of any office of profit or trust in the general or a State government; that the said commissioners shall be selected solely with reference to personal fitness and capacity for an honest, impartial, and thorough investigation, and shall hold office until their duties shall be accomplished, but not to exceed one year; that it shall be their duty to investigate the alcoholic and fermented liquor traffic and manufacture, having special reference to revenue and taxation, distinguishing as far as possible in the conclusions they arrive at between the effects produced by the use of distilled or spirituous liquors, as distinguished from the use of fermented or malt liquors, in their economic, criminal, moral, and scientific aspects, in connection with pauperism, crime, social vice, the public health, and general welfare of the people; and also to inquire and take testimony as to the practical results of license and restrictive legislation for the prevention of intemperance in the several States, and the effect produced by such legislation upon the consumption of distilled or spirituous liquors and of fermented or malt liquors, and also to ascertain whether the evil of drunkenness has been decreased or increased thereby; whether the use of opium as a stimulant substituted for alcoholic drinks has become more general in consequence of such legislation, and whether public morals have been improved thereby; that it shall also be the duty of said commissioners to gather information and take testimony as to whether the evil of drunkenness exists to the same extent or more so in other civilized countries, and whether those foreign nations that are considered the most temperate in the use of stimulants are so through prohibitory laws, and also to what degree prohibitory legislation has affected the consumption and manufacture of malt and spirituous liquors in the country.

The second section provides that the said commissioners, all of whom shall not be advocates of prohibitory legislation or total abstinence in relation to alcoholic or fermented liquors, shall serve without salary; that they shall be authorized to employ a secretary at a reasonable compensation, not to exceed $2,000 per year, which, with the necessary expenses incidental to said investigation, of both the secretary and commissioners, not exceeding $10,000, shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, upon vouchers to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and that for this purpose the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated; and that it shall be the further duty of said commissioners to report the result of their investigation and the expenses attending the same to the President, to be by him transmitted to Congress.

Mr. RANDALL. I raise the point of order on that bill that it makes an appropriation.

Mr. POLAND. Wait a moment.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not wait; I make it now.

Mr. POLAND. I am perfectly aware that the bill is open to this point of order; but the gentlemen who are interested in this matter desire very much to have this investigation made by somebody that shall be clothed with some authority. I am authorized by the gentlemen who are the promoters of this scheme to propose, if it will obviate the objection of the gentleman, to strike out of the second section all provisions for the payment of the salary of the secretary and the expenses, and to provide that the salary of the secretary and the expenses shall be paid by voluntary subscriptions; that no money shall be paid from the Treasury under this act.

Mr. RANDALL. It creates a new office. I insist upon my point.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. POLAND. I am aware of that; but I was in hopes that the gentleman's temperance principles would overcome his parliamentary scruples.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I understood that the Committee on the Judiciary were not to report to-night any bill making an appropriation of money.

The SPEAKER. This bill does not technically make any appropriation of money; but the stipulation of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] was that no bill in the nature of a claim should be reported. The Chair stated that all points of order would be good against any bill which might be reported.

Mr. MAYNARD. And it was also stipulated that no political bill should be reported.

The SPEAKER. The bill is clearly liable to the point.

Mr. POLAND. I will withdraw the bill, giving notice that on next Monday I shall move to suspend the rules for its passage. We shall then see how many temperance gentlemen we have here.

Mr. RANDALL. You will find out that some of us do not want to create any more offices.

Mr. CESSNA. An office without pay does not cost the Government anything.

JURISDICTION OF SUPREME COURT.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, from the same committee, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 3909) prescribing the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in certain cases therein named; and moved that the same be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

FORGERY OF CERTAIN INSTRUMENTS.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, also, from the same committee, reported back without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 4557) to prevent and punish the false making and uttering of certain instruments.

The bill was read. It provides that the false making, forging, or alteration, with intent to defraud, of any check, draft, or other paper writing, or voucher for the payment of money, or any paper writing or voucher whatever, issued by or under the direction or regulations of the Department of the Interior, or any Bureau, officer, or agent thereof, or to be filed or placed as evidence in said Department, in relation to pensions already granted, or in support of an application for a pension to be granted, or the uttering or producing of any such check, draft, voucher, or paper writing, with intent to defraud, shall be a felony; and the party found guilty thereof before any United States district or circuit court for the district where he resides, or the offense is committed, is to be punished by imprisonment at hard labor for a term not exceeding five years, or by a fine not exceeding $5,000, or both, in the discretion of the court by which he is sentenced.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire to say merely that there is no law now on the statute-book for punishing forgeries of certain public records and forgeries of pension-checks. This matter was brought to the attention of the Judiciary Committee by a letter from the Pension Office, stating that a man who had forged a pension-check had been discharged in one of the United States courts because there was no law for the punishment of that offense. I presume there will be no objection to the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LARCENIES.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4744) to punish larcenies and the receivers of stolen goods; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It provides that any person who shall embezzle, steal, or purloin any money, property, record, voucher, or valuable thing whatever, of the moneys, goods, chattels, records, or property of the United States shall be deemed guilty of felony, and on conviction thereof before the district or circuit court of the United States wherein said offense may have been committed, or into which he shall carry or have in his possession said property so embezzled, stolen, or purloined, shall be punished therefor by imprisonment at hard labor in the penitentiary, not exceeding five years, or by a fine not exceeding $5,000, or both, at the discretion of the court before which he shall be convicted.

The second section provides that if any person shall receive, conceal or aid in concealing, or have or retain in his possession, with intent to convert to his own use or gain, any money, property, record, voucher, or valuable thing whatever, of the moneys, goods, chattels, records, or property of the United States, which has theretofore been embezzled, stolen, or purloined from the United States by any other person, knowing the same to have been so embezzled, stolen, or purloined, such person shall on conviction before the circuit or district court of the United States wherein he may have such property, or wherein he resides, be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000, or imprisonment at hard labor in the penitentiary not exceeding five years, one or both, at the discretion of the court before which he shall be convicted, and such receiver may be tried either before or after the conviction of the principal felon; but if the party has been convicted, then the judgment against him shall be conclusive evidence that the property of the United States therein described has been embezzled, stolen, or purloined.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I desire to call my colleague's attention to a clerical error occurring in both the first and second sections. The bill speaks of the "court of the United States wherein said offense may have been committed." The words "for the district" should be inserted in both cases.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. That modification is proper. I presume it can be made by unanimous consent.

There being no objection, the bill was so amended.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INDEBTEDNESS OF SOUTHERN RAILROADS.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The Committee on the Judiciary have directed me to report back the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1938) to extend the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1871, entitled "An act to provide for the collection of debts due from southern railroads, and for other purposes." The committee recommend concurrence in the amendments of the Senate. When the amendments have been read I will explain them.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the preamble and all after the enacting clause and in lieu of the matter stricken out insert the following:

That the Secretary of War and Attorney-General are hereby authorized and empowered jointly to adjust and settle the claims of the United States against the Alexandria, Loudoun and Hampshire, the Edgefield and Kentucky, the Knoxville and Kentucky, the McMinnville and Manchester, the Mobile and Ohio, the Memphis, Clarks-ville and Linnville, the Memphis and Little Rock, the Nashville and Northwestern, the Southwestern Branch Pacific Railroad of Missouri, and the Selma, Rome and Dalton Railroad Companies, and all persons and corporations having any interest in the subject growing out of the sale and transfer by the United States of any rights of property to said railway companies above named respectively, in the years 1865 and 1866, or both, by making such abatement in the amount of such claims respectively as shall be deemed just, in respect of an overvaluation, if any, of the property sold, not exceeding 25 per cent. of the valuation of the property in each case, as made under the authority of the War Department on the occasion of such sales: Provided, That such settlements shall be made within one year next after the passage of this act; and that good and sufficient security be given to the United States, by or on behalf of the parties in interest respectively who do not pay in cash at the time of settlement, for the payment, with interest, of such sums as shall, on such settlements, be so found due at such times within ten years as may be agreed upon.

SEC. 2. That this act shall not be construed so as to produce or authorize any delay in the prosecution of said claims respectively other than as aforesaid; and each of said claims not so settled and disposed of as aforesaid shall be prosecuted and enforced according to existing obligations. In such settlements no allowance shall be made in respect of any matter occurring prior to such sales and transfers, nor otherwise, except such payments as may have been made in cash and such credits for transportation as the general course of the business regulations of the Departments authorizes. And in any such settlement the said Secretary and Attorney-General shall, as a condition thereof, take a full release from the other parties, respectively, of all claims and demands, of every name and nature, theretofore existing, if any such there be, against the United States.

Amend the title so as to read:

A bill to provide for settling with certain railway companies.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I want to state to the House exactly the difference between this and the House bill. There were certain southern railroads bought by the railroad companies back from the United States, but there were certain offsets claimed by the railroad companies. The House passed a bill providing that the Secretary of War and Attorney-General should settle upon a certain equitable basis. The Senate have amended it substantially only in this, that they permit a deduction not to exceed 25 per cent. We put on no limit; they have limited it to 25 per cent. The Judiciary Committee have instructed me to move concurrence in the Senate amendment, and I now ask the House to do.

Mr. HOLMAN. I could not ascertain from the reading the exact effect of the amendments of the Senate, or exactly where they come in, and I therefore ask the amendment be again read, in connection with the bill as it passed the House, so we may understand it.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. This is an entire substitute for the bill which passed the House. The House bill allowed them to settle generally at any price which they deemed to be just and equitable. The substantial difference is that the Senate provide that no deduction shall be made exceeding 25 per cent. That is all. I thought it better to concur than to have a committee of conference, and so did the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask now that the bill be read as it passed the House.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Very well; let it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the Secretary of War was directed and authorized by the act of Congress approved March 3, 1871, to compromise certain suits instituted by the United States against certain railroad corporations which purchased material from the Quartermaster's Department under the provisions of executive orders of August 8 and October 14, 1865; and whereas issues have been raised and are pending in the settlement of the accounts of other railroad corporations which made purchases under said orders and against which the Government has not commenced suit: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice of the Attorney-General of the United States, to compromise, adjust, and settle the same upon such terms as may be equitable and just and best calculated to protect the interests of the United States.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. You see what I have stated is all the difference there is between the House bill and the Senate amendments. I now demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT COURTS OF MINNESOTA.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, also, from the same committee, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 3855) to change the times and places for holding the circuit and district courts of the United States for the district of Minnesota, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill, which was read, in the first section provides that the circuit and district courts of the United States for the district of Minnesota shall be held at the city of Saint Paul on the second Monday of December, and at the city of Winona on the third Monday in June, in each year.

The second section provides that said circuit or district court may, in its discretion, order special terms, and order a grand or petit jury, or both, to attend the same, by an order to be entered of record twenty days before the day at which said special term shall be ordered to convene; and said courts respectively, at such special terms, shall have all the powers that they have at a regular term appointed by law; provided that no special term of said circuit court shall be appointed except by and with the concurrence and consent of the circuit judge.

The third section provides that the circuit court shall appoint two clerks, each of whom shall be clerks both of the circuit and district courts, one of whom shall reside and keep his office at the city of Saint Paul, and the other shall reside and keep his office at the city of Winona, who shall receive the fees and compensation for services performed by them, respectively, now fixed by law.

The fourth section provides that all recognizances, indictments, writs, processes, and other proceedings, civil and criminal, now pending in either of said courts, shall be returned, entered, heard, and tried at the times for holding said courts, respectively, as herein provided.

The fifth section provides that the act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage; and all other acts and parts of acts authorizing the holding of stated or special terms of either of said courts be, and the same are thereby, repealed.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move to strike out the fifth section, as it is entirely unnecessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT COURTS IN LOUISIANA.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, also, from the same committee, reported back a bill (S. No. 88) for the better organization of the district courts of the United States in the State of Louisiana, with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. SENER. I make the point of order on that bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the bill goes to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

TELEGRAPHIC LINES ESTABLISHED AS POST-ROUTES.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, also, from the same committee, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 4470) to establish certain telegraphic lines in the several States and Territories as post-roads, and to regulate the transmission of commercial and other intelligence by telegraph, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill, which was read, in the first section provides that all telegraphic lines of communication over which messages are transmitted for hire are thereby established and made post-roads; and the Postmaster-General is thereby empowered and authorized to advertise for proposals, under the same limitations and with the same authority as for the transmission of mails over post-roads, so far as the same are applicable for the transaction of all governmental business by telegraph over said post-roads, and make contracts with the lowest responsible bidder thereof.

The second section provides that each telegraphic company or corporation, maintaining telegraphic lines used for the purpose of sending telegraphic communications, for hire, over and along any of the highways and railways, or any part thereof, in the United States, shall receive all telegrams at any office thereof from any other telegraphic company directed to be delivered to any other office or station on the line of the receiving company, and transmit the same at the regular tariff rates of transmission established between its own offices, to and from which such messages are transmitted on its own lines, and no words shall be charged for beyond or in addition to those which the company delivering the message for transmission shall direct to be transmitted; and no company shall give any preference, either in the order of transmission or in the rate of charge for transmission, to any one connecting company over any other connecting company in sending any message.

The third section provides that each telegraphic company engaged in transmitting messages among the several States or with foreign countries shall limit its business to the transmission of such messages only as may be delivered to it for that purpose; and neither of such companies shall be, directly or indirectly, interested in the collection or purchase of commercial or other news to be transmitted by itself or any other company; and the tariff on all telegraphic messages by cable from offices in the United States to offices in foreign countries or from offices in foreign countries to offices in the United States shall not exceed, in addition to the cable rate, the rate of transmission of said messages from New York or Boston to the place of destination of the foreign telegram, or from Florida to the place of destination of the telegraphic message from Cuba.

The fourth section provides that the tariff rates of charges for the transmission of special telegrams to newspapers and commercial-news associations shall be the same to each association, without discrimination; and a rate of charges therefor shall from time to time be fixed by every such telegraphic company and exposed in some public place in its principal offices, and no charge except according to the tariff of charges so fixed shall be demanded or received by such company; and the rates of such special telegrams shall in no case exceed those charged to the Associated Press or American Press Association for like services on the 1st day of January in the year 1875.

The fifth section provides that all persons shall have the right to correspond by telegram in the manner therein described; and all telegrams shall be privileged communications in law to the same extent that sealed letters now are, and the contents thereof shall not be divulged by any agent or officer of a telegraphic company, except for the purpose of justice, by order of a court of competent jurisdiction.

The sixth section provides that the tariff for sending telegrams shall be uniform to all persons for similar service and without discrimination. Telegrams from the several Departments of the Government and their officers and agents, upon public business authorized or required of any such officer or agent in the execution of any duty devolved upon him by law, shall, when required in writing entered on the message, have priority in transmission without prepayment, and at rates to be annually fixed by the Postmaster-General in accordance with existing laws. All other telegrams shall be transmitted in the order in which they are received, except telegrams directed by the sender to be transmitted between the hours of six o'clock in the afternoon and six o'clock in the forenoon.

The seventh section provides that every person who shall willfully violate any of the provisions of this act, or willfully destroy, postpone, or delay the delivery of, or unlawfully divulge or permit to be seen by any other than the person to whom the same is addressed, any telegraphic message, or any part thereof, or give any duplicate or copy thereof to any other person, or who shall injure or destroy any property of any telegraphic company, or willfully interfere with the operation, repair, or use of any line of telegraph, or any part thereof, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon complaint to a United States commissioner or judge of a United States court in behalf of the United States, shall be held for trial therefor, and, upon conviction in the district or circuit court of the United States for the district where such offense shall have been committed, or where such person shall reside, may be fined not exceeding $1,000 or imprisoned for a term not exceeding two years, either or both, at the discretion of the court; provided that this section shall not hinder or be a bar to any suit for damages by the party injured because of the omission or commission of anything in this act prohibited or directed to be done.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I make the point of order the bill provides for the Postmaster-General making a contract, and therefore contains an appropriation.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire to have section 5 amended by adding at the end the words which were in the bill that I meant to have sent to the desk, "or by committee of either House of Congress."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. WILLARD] raises a point of order based on the first section of the bill, which the Clerk will again read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all telegraphic lines of communication over which messages are transmitted for hire are hereby established and made post-roads; and the Postmaster-General is hereby empowered and authorized to advertise for proposals, under the same limitations and with the same authority as for the transmission of mails over post-roads, so far as the same are applicable for the transaction of all governmental business by telegraph over said post-roads, and make contracts with the lowest responsible bidder therefor.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman please state his point of order.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. The point of order is this: that the bill involves an appropriation of money. The Postmaster-General is authorized to make contracts for the transmission of Government messages over these telegraphic lines.

The SPEAKER. Does it involve an appropriation of money not now authorized by law?

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I do not understand the point of order would not be as good as if it did.

Mr. RANDALL. It does do that.

The SPEAKER. In what respect?

Mr. RANDALL. There is no law existing now providing for what is provided for in that section; and what is therein provided does involve an expenditure of money.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that is correct as a matter of fact.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. The Chair has ruled uniformly under the new rule in respect to bills involving an appropriation of money that wherever a bill provided a contract might be made which would take money out of the Treasury that bill was subject to the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. An amendment to this bill would be in order appropriating money.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I ask to have the rule read.

The Clerk read as follows:

All proceedings touching appropriations of money and all bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriations to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, shall be first discussed in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. My point is that this bill will require an appropriation of money to be made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair takes this to be the case: There is a constant appropriation of money being made for governmental business by telegraph. This bill declares that the Postmaster-General shall advertise for the lowest responsible bidder to do such business. It is just as though coal were appropriated for the supply of the Navy and a bill should afterward be introduced providing that the Secretary of the Navy should advertise for the lowest bidder for the coal. Advertising for the lowest bidder does not appropriate money. It has nothing to do with it. This bill does not proprio vigore take a cent of money out of the Treasury; it only proposes that the Government business hereafter by telegraph shall be advertised and proposals received that it may be given to the lowest bidder.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. If the Speaker will allow me, I would remark that the provision here is that the Postmaster-General is hereby empowered and authorized—

The SPEAKER. Not to expend one dollar which is not now authorized to be expended.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. The Postmaster-General is hereby empowered and authorized to advertise for proposals, under the same limitations and with the same authority as for the transmission of mails over post-roads.

The SPEAKER. But not to expend a single dollar that he is not now authorized to expend. There is simply a limitation put upon it.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Then I see no use in this legislation, if the Postmaster-General can do it now. The bill says he shall do it under the same limitations as are now provided by law in reference to the transmission of mails. That is new legislation.

The SPEAKER. New legislation of course; that is another thing.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. It is new legislation authorizing the Postmaster-General to enter into certain contracts which will bind the Treasury of the United States, which he cannot do under existing law.

Mr. RANDALL. Let me call the attention of the Chair to one other point. This creates an additional branch of the Post-Office Department which no existing law provides for.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot see that there is a single expenditure on the part of the Government authorized by this bill which is not now going forward. There is a large amount of Government telegraphing done which the Government has to pay for. This bill enacts that hereafter it shall be the duty of the Postmaster-General to advertise for the lowest proposals for which that should be done. If the Chair should construe the bill in its legitimate effect, he would presume that it would keep money in the Treasury. It certainly does not propose to take a dollar out of it that is not now under the practice of the law going out. There has been an appropriation made heretofore for many years for Government telegraphing expenses, and that is done at the discretion of the Department. They pay what the Department is charged and what it thinks is legitimate. This stops that practice, and says that hereafter the Postmaster-General shall advertise for proposals. The Chair does not see how that involves the appropriation of money not now authorized by law.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Perhaps it is taking notice of too small things to raise the point—

The SPEAKER. By no means. If the point is good, the Chair would sustain it to the extent of a dime just as readily as if there were a million of dollars involved.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I was going to say that this authorizes the extension of the present law for advertising for proposals for the transmission of mails to advertising for transmitting telegraphic messages, and that it would therefore involve an increased expense in that regard.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont will observe that there is a considerable amount appropriated in the annual appropriation bills to be expended at the discretion of the heads of the several Departments. It is done in the faith that they will make these expenditures wisely and judiciously.

Now, if a bill should be introduced here declaring that each of the Departments should advertise for the lowest bidder for supplies of every kind, it would be only limiting and directing the mode in which the money appropriated should be expended.

Mr. GARFIELD. I would inquire if this amendment does not really extend the postal system and allow the Postmaster-General, under law, to transact a large amount of his business by telegraph which is now transacted by mail?

The SPEAKER. The bill does not authorize that.

Mr. GARFIELD. But it says in distinct terms that this line shall be a post-route just as railroads are post-routes.

The SPEAKER. As all railroads are now declared to be post-routes.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Postmaster-General may in his discretion extend the post-route system to the telegraphs. The bill enlarges the Postal Department of the United States to the extent of putting it on wires and giving to the Postmaster-General the power to increase the expenses to meet that extension.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio will observe that the declaring of any route a post-route does not imply that a mail shall be carried over it. It only implies that the Postmaster-General may put a mail upon it if in his discretion he thinks it necessary.

Mr. GARFIELD. But if the bill authorizes the Postmaster-General to make a contract for carrying the mails, it would involve an appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not see that the point is good against the bill.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move to amend the bill by inserting a few words. I move to insert in line 5, section 7, after the word "thereof," the following:

Or shall, without authority of the telegraphic company transmitting the same, take from the wires or other instruments of said company any telegraphic message while the same is being transmitted by said company.

I ask the kind attention of the House to an explanation of this bill. It is a bill of very considerable importance. The first section puts the control of the telegraph line of the United States under the Postmaster-General so far only as the Government business is concerned—no further—so that he can regulate how the Government business shall be transacted over those lines.

The first question that has been asked of me is, Where do you find the power for it? I answer that in the Constitution the provision adopted with most unanimity was to put post-routes and post-offices under the control of the General Government. It was the only means by which intelligence could be transmitted at the time of the formation of the Constitution, and therefore our fathers enacted that the post-offices and post-roads should be under the control of the General Government. They enacted in doing that the practice which has prevailed in every country in the world, that the transmission of intelligence should be under the control of the Government; and every one must see the necessity of it. In case of war or invasion there is an absolute necessity for such a rule.

Then came the railroads, and the mails were transmitted in a very different way.

Mr. MERRIAM. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No, sir; I will not be interrupted. I repeat what Mr. Proctor Knott once said upon this floor: that if Christ were delivering the sermon on the mount upon this floor, some gentleman would get up and ask to be allowed to put a question to him.

I say that the railroads came in and they were at once adopted as post-routes. The words "post-road" in the Constitution have never been construed to mean a post-road merely, as is seen in the fact that all the canals, rivers, and lakes have been made post-routes. They were made so as an easy means of the transmission of intelligence.

Then came the telegraph; and the first telegraph line established in this country was established by the General Government. The first telegraph line ever built in this country was built between this city and Baltimore by the Post-Office Department. And Cave Johnson, one of the ablest Postmaster-Generals we ever had—and I call the especial attention of my friends on the other side to this—in 1846, after the telegraph lines had been established for two years in this country, uses this language in his report:

Telegraph lines have been established from New York to Boston, Buffalo, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington; others are in process of construction. I may further add that the Department, created under the Constitution, and designed to exercise exclusive power for the transmission of intelligence, must necessarily be superseded in much of its most important business in a few years if the telegraph be permitted to remain under the control of individuals. It is the settled conviction of the undersigned that the public interests, as well as the safety of the citizens, requires that the Government should get the exclusive control of it by purchase, or that its use should be subjected to the restraints of law.

That is the good old Davy Crockett doctrine of democratic days, when democrats were democrats, and not obstructionists. And if that is not sufficient there is another power which we have, and that is the right to regulate commerce among the several States and with foreign countries. A telegraph line comes from Europe to these shores, and coming to these shores the United States has assumed control over it, so that it cannot land on the shores of any State, although the State may own the shores, without the permission of the General Government. Why? Because it is an instrument of commerce with foreign countries. It is an instrument of commerce among the States, and as such instrument of commerce it is a most potent engine of commerce. A merchant may sit in his counting-room in London and sell his goods in this country, in Chicago for instance, almost as well by telegraph as he can upon the docks in London. The prices are all regulated by telegraph. As I say, it is a most potent instrument of commerce, and therefore under that provision of the Constitution we have the power to regulate it.

But there is a still further instrument of power. In 1866 the telegraph companies came to Congress, and on the 25th of July of that year we passed an act allowing every telegraph company which chose to do so to put up its telegraph poles on every post-road and military-road in the United States, and to extend its lines over every navigable river and every arm of the sea in the United States, thereby subjecting our post-roads to the use of the telegraph companies who were the simple creatures of the State. It would seem that there is always a power in Congress to do something for a monopoly, but there is always a constitutional doubt when we attempt to do anything in the interest of the people and against a monopoly. Having these post-roads of ours with telegraph lines over them, we propose to assume the control over the transmission of intelligence on the top of the poles as well as through the mails carried on the roads. That is another source of power.

Now, if members will send for House report No. 125 they will find in the latter part of it this bill, and in the report they will find all the authorities upon this subject collated. That report will answer me to-night on this subject. And a little more reading and a little less talking would give a great deal of instruction to certain gentlemen.

Now for the bill itself. The first section simply makes these telegraph lines post-routes, and allows the Government, through the Postmaster-General, to contract for the Government business over the lines at the lowest rate of bidding, precisely as the carrying of the mails is paid for. That will commend itself to everybody.

The second section meets another difficulty, which is this: The telegraph companies to-day will not send each other's messages; that is, if you send a message by the Western Union Telegraph line, and for aught I know if the Western Union Company should send by the Atlantic and Pacific line, a message to a place where it had no wire, those messages would not be sent for each other at the usual and fair rates. Let me illustrate so that there will be no mistake about it. You send a message by the Atlantic and Pacific line, for instance, from here to New York. We will suppose that that telegraph company has no wire to Saratoga, but the Western Union Telegraph Company has a wire there. The Western Union Company will not take that message at the same rate at which they would send one of their own messages; they will charge a different rate.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Permit me to ask a question, if at common law they are not bound to receive and send their message at a reasonable rate?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I suppose that is the common law. But the difficulty about the common law is this, as applied to this case: you would have to bring suit on each message and recover ten cents damages, and perhaps lose $10,000 in costs, for you would have to fight a company with a capital of $40,000,000.

Mr. LAWRENCE. This provision of the bill comes in aid of the common-law right.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Yes, sir. We only propose to require them to do what every railroad company ought to be required to do and in every State is required to do—to pro-rate with each other. The bill provides further, that no preference shall be given to one message over another. The manner in which a line stops competition is that whenever another line sends messages to it, it will keep those messages back until all its own have gone, and by this means ruin the other line. That is the reason we have not had any competing lines until this bill has been reported; and now there are two competing lines between here and New York that send messages for one-half the rates that were charged a fortnight ago, before this bill was reported. If reporting a bill will do so much good to the public in fourteen days, what will be accomplished by the passage of a bill which shall bring these companies to their senses?

The next provision is as to cable telegrams; and here is a very great evil. The bill provides—

That each telegraphic company engaged in transmitting messages among the several States or with foreign countries shall limit its business to the transmission of such messages only as may be delivered to it for that purpose; and neither of such companies shall be, directly or indirectly, interested in the collection or purchase of commercial or other news to be transmitted by itself or any other company; and the tariff on all telegraphic messages by cable from offices in the United States to offices in foreign countries, or from offices in foreign countries to offices in the United States, shall not exceed, in addition to the cable rate, the rate of transmission of said messages from New York or Boston to the place of destination of the foreign telegram, or from Florida to the place of destination of the telegraphic message from Cuba.

Now, the thing to be met by that provision is this: The telegraphic companies collect news on the other side and sell it on this side; and they will not let other parties send any news over their lines until their news has gone ahead. Now, suppose corn has risen two pence a bushel in Liverpool, that will affect the corn market in Chicago to the extent of four cents a bushel. But the cable sends the news in cipher to the Western Union Telegraph Company or any other company whose lines connect with it; and they, having paid for the news, sell it to their customers, sending it over the line first. They will not let anybody else's dispatches go over until their customers have had the news in time to get the advantage of the rise in the market. Thus the business of the whole country is improperly affected.

Now, to meet that state of things this section is framed, providing first that the company shall transmit all cable messages in the order in which they are received; that these companies shall be telegraphic companies and nothing else; that they shall not be stock-jobbers and news-brokers for other people, and shall not keep back one message that another message may be preferred; that they shall charge the same rates on this side for all cable messages which they are to transmit as they do for messages not transmitted by cable.

The fourth section is meant to meet another grievance which the public suffer—a most intolerable burden. In the use of the telegraph a little institution grew up called the Associated Press, whose business it was to collect news at Halifax, at the end of the cable, and send it forward for publication. That association has extended all over the United States, and the members have made themselves a close corporation; they will not allow any other newspaper to come into the association. The value of having the privilege of that association, which has not cost them a dollar, is worth in the city of New York to any newspaper a quarter of a million dollars, and is so reckoned in the sale of a newspaper. No newspaper can be established without the consent of that association, because no newspaper can sustain itself if it has not the news. The telegraphic companies have a bargain with that association by which all the news goes through what is known as the Associated Press, who color every dispatch to suit themselves. You cannot get a dispatch upon any subject sent over this country except it is favored by the Associated Press; and whenever any dispatch is sent to the contrary it is either suppressed or colored. Why, sir, I have been told by my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALBRIGHT] his experience down in Alabama in connection with this matter. I yield to him that he may tell it to the House.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] for yielding to me. While the committee of which I am a member was down in Alabama gathering testimony, it was a noticeable fact that no agent of the Associated Press ever called upon any members of the majority, although we saw in the papers that news was sent to the North and other sections of the country purporting to contain a synopsis of testimony taken before that committee. While we were at Mobile it was considered proper that some of the facts which had been elicited before our committee should be furnished to the public; and a dispatch was prepared by a gentleman in Mobile from the facts furnished to him by members of the committee. The gentleman said that the dispatch could not go over the wires. We desired that he should present it to the agent, saying to him that it contained some of the facts which had been testified to before the committee. The agent of the Associated Press was handed the dispatch, but declined to send it.

Mr. BROMBERG. Did you offer to pay for that dispatch?

Mr. ALBRIGHT. No, sir; because it was understood the Associated Press agents were desirous of getting information which they would send out to the country. But, strange to say, the next day almost the opposite of what was attempted to be furnished the Associated Press was sent over the country as part of the testimony taken before the Alabama committee.

Mr. BROMBERG. Did they pay for that?

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I cannot say whether they paid for it or not.

Mr. TREMAIN. Did they object on the ground that it was not paid for?

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I was going to say that the gentleman who was the agent of the Associated Press asked whether it was an impartial report, and the gentleman informed him it was a report which had been gathered from some members of the committee, and he believed it was truthful; and, if truthful, was impartial, and that it was proper to send it.

Mr. CESSNA. Let me ask my colleague a question. Did they put the refusal to send the dispatch upon the ground that it was not paid for?

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Not that I understood. We were told before it was delivered that the agent of the Associated Press would not send it, because it was a known fact that unless the news was of a certain kind it would not go over the wires.

Mr. BROMBERG. Let me ask the gentleman a question right here.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I do not desire to be interrupted at this point. I wish to say that some important Government dispatches relating to the movements of Government troops were sent by Major-General McDowell to Captain William Mills and other officers of the Army, and before the dispatches were delivered or their contents were known to the officers the public was in possession of the information contained in the dispatches twenty-four hours at least before the dispatches were delivered to the officers; and in one instance the movement of the troops to which they referred was not made in consequence of the improper disclosure of the telegram. That this matter may appear more clearly, I will ask the Clerk to read the testimony taken before the committee. It will show too how the truth of a private dispatch was garbled for political effect.

The Clerk read as follows:

BENJAMIN F. HERR, editor Livingston Journal, Alabama.

By Mr. BUCKNER:

Question. Tell us whether you have any information that you rely upon as to why they were released without a trial so summarily?

Answer. I think I have information. On Thursday evening they were released, I think; Captain Mills who commanded the infantry had been absent a day or two. Q. These were a portion of Captain Mills's troops who made the arrest?

A. Yes, sir; they were the only troops here at that time. When he arrived on the train he found a dispatch awaiting him to this effect. I will not undertake to give the precise words: "Williamson and the negro must be examined forthwith, but no more men must go into that jail. The howl is getting too loud;" and within a short time after that he got down to the depot.

By Mr. ALBRIGHT:

Q. Where was that dispatch from?

A. I cannot tell.

By Mr. BUCKNER:

Q. Is the same man the operator here now who was here then?

A. Yes, sir; that is my information from a source that I deem entirely reliable. It was given to me confidentially.

By Mr. ALBRIGHT:

Q. You have given the contents of a telegraphic communication to Captain Mills confidentially?

A. I did.

Q. You got that from the telegraph operator?

A. No, sir.

Q. From whom did you get it?

A. Unless under compulsion, I prefer not to violate the confidence.

Q. You may take your election.

A. The gentleman who gave it to me requested me not to give it to anybody. I desire you to understand simply this: the gentleman who gave it to me is not the operator, but he procured the news in the office, and gave it to me.

Q. He probably procured it surreptitiously.

A. No, sir; not according to his statement.

Q. Had he access to the dispatches?

A. His business was about the depot.

Q. Was it his business to divulge the secret dispatches about the office?

A. I do not know whether it was or not.

Q. Did you take a copy of it?

A. No, sir.

Q. How did you get knowledge of it?

A. He simply related to me the contents of it.

Q. Repeat it, if you please.

A. As near as I can remember, it was to this effect: "Williamson and the negro must be tried at once; no more men must be put in that jail. The howl is getting too loud." That is the purport of it.

Q. Did he tell you where that dispatch was from?

A. He didn't. I didn't inquire.

Captain WILLIAM MILLS, Second United States Infantry.

By Mr. ALBRIGHT:

Question. Was there anything in that dispatch about the country howling?

Answer. No, sir. General Healey afterward wrote me a letter to know the kind of a dispatch I had received. I went to Mr. Hester, got the dispatch, and sent it back to General Healey as I received it from the telegraph operator, so that he could see just what it was. There was nothing about howling in it. When I wrote to General Healey, I told him that he had better go to the telegraph office in Montgomery also and get a copy of his dispatch. I know the newspapers made a great howl about jailing men, saying that no more persons must be put in jail, and I do not know what all; but there was not a word of truth in the statement that the dispatch contained anything about howling.

Q. In what paper did you see it stated that a telegram had been sent to you that you must release Williamson and Coleman, and that the country was "howling"?

A. The statement was published in the paper that the howl was getting too great. I think probably I saw it first in the Livingston Journal. I recollect that my officers and myself had a good deal of fun about it.

Q. There was not anything in the dispatch such as was reported in the papers?

A. No, sir; I have stated the facts in regard to that dispatch.

General ROBERT W. HEALY:

Question. Did you send a dispatch to Captain Mills containing these words, or anything like them: "Williamson and the negro must be tried at once. No more men must be put in that jail. The howl is getting too loud?"

A. No, sir; I never said anything of the kind. That is a garbled account of the dispatch I did send. The very next day after I sent the dispatch to Captain Mills it appeared in the Montgomery Advertiser in that garbled condition, and was stated to have come from the Attorney-General at Washington.

Q. What, in fact, was that dispatch?

A. I think it ran in this way, and was addressed to Captain Mills: "Tell the detectives to carry Williamson before the United States commissioner for examination at once. There is much complaint about their seizure of the jail. All persons arrested should be carried before a commissioner for examination before being jailed."

Captain MILLS. On that same day, the 19th of September, General McDowell sent me a telegram from Livingston, directing me to send one-half of my company to Belmont. That telegram did not reach me until Monday afternoon, the 21st, about four o'clock. On Sunday morning that party at Belmont, which consisted of the Williamson party and this man Holmes's party, and some seventy-five or eighty men who came from Meridian, and quite a number from Demopolis, in Marengo County, got a message from Demopolis that troops were coming there, and they came home.

On receipt of that dispatch from General McDowell I wrote back, explaining why I had not complied with its directions, saying that the excitement was over at Belmont and that they had dispersed. I on the next day sent my first lieutenant down there with a sergeant to investigate what had been going on. He made a report in accordance with the facts, and as soon as he could get it he took the testimony of white and colored people down there.

By Mr. ALBRIGHT:

Q. Why is it that you did not get your telegram earlier?

A. I do not know. I reported to General McDowell the fact, and I understand he communicated with Mr. Orton, of the Western Union Telegraph Company. The dispatch is as follows:

"LOUISVILLE, September 19.
[Received at York, September 21.]

"To the Commanding Officer at Livingston:

"HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE SOUTH,
"Louisville, Ky., September 19.

"Send half your company under a commissioned officer at once to Belmont, Sumter County, Alabama. A rapid movement necessary. Acknowledge receipt and report when detachment leaves.

"By command of Major-General McDowell.

"CHAUNCEY MCKEEVER,
"Assistant Adjutant-General."

As I say, I explained why I did not send those troops, having received the dispatch on Monday afternoon about four o'clock.

Q. State whether the information contained in that dispatch was known to anybody before you received it?

A. It was as far as I could learn; what I know is this: I was told at Demopolis that they sent a messenger to Belmont telling them there that the troops were coming, and on Sunday afternoon they dispersed and came home. I saw a good many of them myself in Livingston on Sunday night back at the hotel. A lot of them came in to supper.

Q. Could they have got knowledge of the fact of the movement of a portion of your command without becoming possessed of the information contained in your telegram?

A. No, sir; I did not know it. As I say, I did not receive the dispatch until Monday afternoon at four o'clock.

Q. In sending dispatches down South do you find the same regularity as you do up here? Do you receive them as rapidly there as you do here generally?

A. Yes, sir. While I was at Livingston I had seven or eight or ten dispatches, and I always got them about the right time; but I reported to the general two cases where dispatches were known to others before I received them. This case which I have recited was one of them, and another was a dispatch which I received at the time of the Louisiana difficulty on the 14th of September. The commanding officer of the post at Atlanta sent me a telegram to hold my company in readiness to proceed to New Orleans, and to notify the commanding officers in Pickens and Choctaw Counties to hold their companies in readiness. A gentleman, who, I think, was Mr. Little, a State senator, said to me, "Captain, I hear you are going to leave us." I told him I had not heard anything of it, and about fifteen minutes afterward the messenger from the telegraph office handed me the dispatch. I asked Mr. Little afterward how he heard of it, and he said that he did so down at the depot, hearing them saying that the Yankees were going away. I suppose that that dispatch was made known there. I will state that the telegraph line to Livingston belongs to the Alabama and Chattanooga Railroad Company. It is not a Western Union road, and dispatches are not sent in an envelope. They are written on any slip of paper, and anybody whom they may come across brings it up to you.

Lieutenant F. B. TAYLOR, Eighteenth United States Infantry.

Question. What has your experience been with regard to the contents of telegraphic communications that have been sent to you and other military officers, being known to the public before you got hold of them?

Answer. I will explain that. Though I am in command of the company at the present time, heretofore I have always acted in a subordinate capacity, not as commanding officer; therefore telegrams when sent to the commanding officer have not been sent to me. I cannot speak from my personal knowledge except that I am morally convinced, both from the testimony of my brother officers and of such facts as have come to my knowledge heretofore, that telegrams sent to post commanders in military places are considered public news and are so appropriated by the operator and made known. You can find plenty of officers who can definitely state cases.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I now think I need not pursue that thing any longer. I only ask a section shall be passed that the tariff of charges for transmission of special dispatches to newspapers and commercial associations shall be fixed and disposed of in some public station so everybody shall know exactly what the charges are.

Section 5 provides that all persons shall have the right to correspond by telegram in the manner therein prescribed; and all telegrams shall be privileged communications in law to the same extent that sealed letters now are; and the contents thereof shall not be divulged by any agent or officer of a telegraphic company, except for the purpose of justice, by order of a court of competent jurisdiction, or any committees of either House of Congress.

Mr. SPEER. Are those last words in the bill?

Mr. BUTLER of Massachusetts. I have added them. In view of what has been said and what has been read, I shall ask in regard to all telegraphic communications another penalty, to which I shall call the attention of the House.

The sixth section provides that the tariff for sending telegrams shall be uniform to all persons for similar service and without discrimination. Telegrams from the several Departments of the Government only shall have precedence. That is a matter of necessity. But night telegrams may be sent in any order the telegraph company chooses; that is, between six in the evening and six in the morning, because they send them usually at half rates.

The bill then provides in the seventh section for penalties, making the violation of the provisions of this act subject to certain penalties. It also came to the knowledge of the committee that there was no provision against injuring telegraph wires, breaking them down, interfering with them, stopping messages, stealing messages over these post-roads of the United States; and therefore you will find in the seventh section penalties for giving duplicates or copies of any message, tearing down telegraph lines, interfering with telegraph messages, as well for the protection of the telegraph company as for the community. For I want to say here I am no enemy of telegraphic communication, but I am an enemy, declared and determined, against all monopolies. And I do not mean that this great organ of transmission of intelligence shall remain and be a monopoly. I shall ask the Clerk to add after the fifth line of the seventh section what I send to the desk. After he has read the amendment I will explain the object of it.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "thereof," in line 5, section 7, add these words:

Or shall, without authority of the telegraphic company transmitting the same, take from the wires or other instruments of said company any telegraphic message while the same is being transmitted by said company.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It is well known that any telegrapher can climb up a telegraph pole, hitch around the wires a small copper wire and slip down, and read any messages that pass over the wire as well as they could be read in the office; and then he can send back by means of his tongue an answer. Now, it is to prevent that, which is an unauthorized and improper act, that I ask that the words which have been read may be put into the bill making it penal to undertake to do that.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Let me ask the chairman of the committee a question. I wish to ask him if he thinks this section is broad enough to cover the class of cases where, for example, one of these operators may sit and listen to a message that is being sent and then divulge it?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The words are—

Take from the wires or other instruments of said company any telegraphic message.

I have covered that exactly. Now, then, I want to say a word further, and then I shall be glad to answer any other questions that may be addressed to me. I want the Clerk to read in the first place, to show what the Western Union Company have done, the passage I have marked from the report of Mr. C. C. Washburn, made to the Forty-first Congress.

The Clerk read as follows:

Among others they bought the Missouri and Western stock, paying some cash and some stock. They also built, in partnership with myself, the Pacific Telegraph from Brownsville, Nebraska, to Salt Lake, Utah, some eleven hundred miles, (Congress gave this line $40,000 per annum for ten years—in all $400,000 as a bonus,) which cost, by considerable financing on the part of two of the Western Union directors, $147,000. Upon this expenditure they issued $1,000,000 of stock.

This $1,000,000 of Pacific Telegraph stock (prominent men of the Western Union Telegraph Company being the sole owners) was afterward taken into the Western Union Telegraph Company by issuing therefor $2,000,000 of Western Union Telegraph Company's stock. After this the Western Union Telegraph Company's stock was tripled, by which manipulation an original expenditure of $147,000 (and a part of that not honestly spent) came to represent $6,000,000 of Western Union Telegraph stock.

Mr. CESSNA. Mulberry Sellers was about. "There's millions in it."

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I want to call the attention of the House to how this thing has gone on. There has never been any power anywhere to have this thing regulated before. I desire to have read a passage from the report of the President to the stockholders of the Western Union Telegraph Company, wherein he openly, boldly, and clearly avows that he uses the franking of free passes to corrupt legislators and Government officials.

The Clerk read as follows:

The franks issued to Government officials constitute nearly a third of the total complimentary business. The wires of the Western Union Company extend into thirty-seven States and nine Territories within the limits of the United States and into four of the British Provinces. In all of them our property is more or less subject to the action of the national, State, and municipal authorities, and the judicious use of complimentary franks among them has been the means of saving to the company many times the money value of the free service performed.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I do not mean to refer that to any committee for investigation. But there is there an open avowal that a judicious use of franks has been of very great value to the company. Now, I think it is time that Congress take this thing in hand, and I call upon the men who have the intelligence and virtue of the people at heart—for all the people depend now so much upon telegraphic communication, such is the hurry and bustle of life—to take hold of this opportunity to make this great means of intelligence the servant and not the master of the people.

Mr. MERRIAM. Will the gentleman allow me—

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Will the gentleman from New York allow me to address an inquiry to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER?]

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The first section of this bill provides as follows:

The Postmaster-General is hereby empowered and authorized to advertise for proposals, under the same limitations and with the same authority as for the transmission of mails over post-roads, so far as the same are applicable for the transaction of all governmental business, &c.

Now, the Western Union Telegraph Company owns about 90 per cent. of all the telegraphic lines in the United States. If the Postmaster-General advertises for proposals for transmitting Government messages, by what means will the Government be secured against unjust rates, because the Western Union includes so large a portion of all the telegraphic lines in the United States? There will be no competition in bidding.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I will answer that. The Postmaster-General has now to pay exactly what the Western Union men choose to charge as compensation. He would not be any worse off after the passage of this bill. But if he can advertise for rates, then most of the railroad companies have telegraph lines along their roads, and they will compete for a large portion of the business, and connecting lines will also come in.

Mr. LAWRENCE. One thing more. If I remember right the act of 1860 authorized the Secretary of War to fix the rates at which telegraphic messages should be sent.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. That was only for certain purposes; we do not propose any legislation of that sort here.

Mr. LAWRENCE. But the bill would leave all that legislation in force.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Not at all. I yield now for a moment to my colleague, [Mr. PIERCE.]

Mr. PIERCE. I wish to ask my colleague whether it is within the constitutional power of Congress to provide that the seventh section shall be so far retroactive as to impose its pains and penalties upon any person who intercepted and divulged dispatches one year ago and make him amenable to those pains and penalties?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. O, no; it cannot be ex post facto. We do not propose to make it ex post facto. I should be very glad to do it if it could be done, but the Constitution unfortunately forbids it.

Mr. PIERCE. I think my colleague did not understand my question.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I understand the question to be whether the pains and penalties prescribed in this act can be applied to persons who violated its provisions a year ago. As my friend is a manufacturer of chocolate, and not a lawyer, I am glad to inform him that that cannot be done.

Mr. PIERCE. I want to know whether its provisions cannot be applied to a man who committed this offense a year ago and boasted of it.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. How is that, sir?

Mr. PIERCE. The gentleman can answer my question.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I will do so if I can hear it. I will answer any question anybody asks me. Now, what have you got to say?

Mr. PIERCE. I wish to know if my colleague believes it to be within the constitutional power of Congress to provide that the seventh section of this bill may be made retroactive, so that its pains and penalties shall apply to persons who intercepted and divulged dispatches sent from and received by telegraph one year ago?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Now, Mr. Speaker, I understand my colleague's question, and I say to him that I do not think as a lawyer it can be done; and as he himself is not a lawyer, I can excuse him for putting that part of the question. He did not know any better. Now, in reference to the next part of the answer, in relation to the one year ago, I have only to say that whatever was done by anybody will be answered for here or anywhere else; and if the gentleman means any sort of insinuation, why does he not speak it out in the first speech he has ever made since he has been a member of Congress?

Mr. PIERCE. Well, it will not be the last.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I trust it will be unless it is better than the one the gentleman has just made. I now yield a portion of my time to my friend from New York, [Mr. MERRIAM.] How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has fifteen minutes.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Then I yield seven of those minutes to my brother.

Mr. MERRIAM. The honorable gentleman has presented a bill here which possesses many good features, but there is contained in it that which I consider one of the most monstrous propositions that has been presented to the House for many days. A few days ago the honorable gentleman had the kindness to call my attention to this bill, and asked me to read the report, which I did, and I came to the conclusion that the title of the bill should be changed so as to read "A bill to enable rival telegraph lines to partake in the profits of the Western Union Telegraph Company without rendering any service therefor." And in order that I might the better know the full scope of this bill, I wrote to a friend in New York and sent him a copy of the report. I ask the Clerk to read the reply which I received.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Do not take more than the seven minutes.

Mr. MERRIAM. Not more than two or three minutes over.

The Clerk began the reading of the letter; but before concluding, the hammer fell.

The SPEAKER. The time for which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] yielded to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MERRIAM] has expired.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I must stop this reading right here, for I have not the time left to spare for it. I would like to have it go on, for I suppose the gentleman will admit that it was written by Mr. Orton, the president of the Western Union Telegraph Company.

Mr. MERRIAM. It is his answer to an attack made upon his company.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Well, if that is the best answer this telegraph monopoly can make, I am willing it should be made here.

Mr. MERRIAM. The House should have before it the facts to enable it to vote intelligently upon this bill.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. This bill only requires that company to carry messages for other companies at the same rates it carries them for other people, and that they shall not keep down competition by preventing any other company, as they have done, from sending any message over its wires at any price whatever, as the report shows this company has done. Now, as we have heard the argument on behalf of the Western Union Telegraph Company, I propose to call the previous question on this bill.

Mr. MERRIAM. It has not all been read.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Would it not be fair to hear the whole of the communication read?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. If it is not to come out of my time, I would like to hear the whole of it.

Mr. O'BRIEN. It will not come out of your time.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. That is for the House to say.

Mr. MERRIAM. It is only fair for the other side of the case to be heard. We cannot vote intelligently without hearing both sides.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I am willing to let the debate run on for a time, or for any time that is reasonable, provided that I shall have the opportunity to call the previous question. But I do not like to leave the floor until I do that.

Mr. MAYNARD. You can call the previous question and then you will have an hour to close debate.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. It will require a two-thirds vote to order the previous question to-night, this being the first day of the consideration of this bill.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I suppose it does. I call the previous question on the bill.

Mr. POTTER. I rather think this great constitutional question will bear some discussion on the other side.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I mean to give the other side an opportunity to be heard, the same as we have had. You had an opportunity to put in a minority report.

Mr. POTTER. Yes; and I propose to have an opportunity to discuss this bill on the floor, with the permission of the House, even if I cannot get the permission of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Very well.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us test the sense of the House on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken on seconding the previous question; and upon a division there were—ayes 73, noes 69; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, and Mr. POTTER were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 89, noes 71.

The SPEAKER. Two-thirds not voting in the affirmative, the previous question is not seconded. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER] as entitled to the floor.

Mr. POTTER. I will yield to my colleague [Mr. MERRIAM] for three minutes.

Mr. MERRIAM. I will ask the Clerk to read the remainder of the communication I sent up to him, and I ask the attention of members of the House to it.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the communication; which was as follows:

NEW YORK, February 15, 1875.

SIR: The Butler bill, although professing to be in the public interest, is, I believe, exclusively in the interest of telegraph companies competing with the Western Union, which seek to enjoy facilities and advantages which they lack the enterprise or the means to provide for themselves. Strictly speaking it should be entitled "A bill to compel the Western Union to carry messages for its competitors for less rates than the Western Union charges the public between the same points." In proof of this I submit the following illustrations:

First: The Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph Company takes a message at New York, say, for Springfield, Illinois, and carries it to Chicago, where it is turned over to us. We do not charge for date, address, and signature, nor the name of the place where a message is handed to us. This message we treat as an original message at Chicago, and send it forward for the local tolls between Chicago and Springfield, not charging for the word "Chicago," nor date, address, and signature. But it is our practice to require the company handing us such a message to put thereon the name of the place where it originated (in this instance New York) and the date it was filed with the other company when such date is different from that on which it was handed to us. That would require the Atlantic and Pacific Company to pay us for two extra words. But it is a necessary feature of our system that the office at which a message originates and that to which it is addressed shall both make an entry of the amount of tolls due thereon, which in this case would be the tolls between Chicago and Springfield; and in order that the Springfield office may not make a debit entry for the whole tolls from New York to Springfield we are obliged to send additional words, for which no charge is made, notifying Springfield that this message was handed to us at Chicago by another line. So that even when we charge two additional words on such a message for the place of origin and the date of filing we do not get pay for all the additional words we find it necessary to send for our own protection. Now, in a majority of instances, persons filing messages with other lines addressed to places not reached by such lines do so in ignorance of the fact that the company taking their message is unable to forward it to its destination. In short, the effect of the practice of the companies competing with the Western Union is to get business by deceiving the public concerning their ability to carry it.

Again: The Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph Company have only a line of one wire between Chicago and Omaha. They also have but one line (bearing three wires) all the way between New York and Buffalo. Now, if their line between the last two points was interrupted, and yet was in working order west of Buffalo, under the provisions of General BUTLER's bill they can group or pack any number of customers' messages at New York, destined for points west of Buffalo, into one consolidated message, addressed to their agent at Buffalo, and signed by their agent in New York, and require us to forward it as one message.

Now, the tariff rates on messages are for ten words, with a reduced rate per word for words in excess of ten. The rate from New York to Buffalo is fifty cents for ten words and three cents a word for each additional word. If, therefore, ten separate messages of twelve words each were handed to us at New York addressed to Buffalo, we should receive fifty-six cents each, equal to $5.60. Now, if these messages were packed into one message, we would be entitled to charge for the first ten words fifty cents, and for the remaining one hundred and ten words three cents each, making a total of $3.80. The difference against us would increase as the distance and the rate increased. For example: In the case of a message the tolls on which are $2.50, equal to twenty-five cents a word for the first ten words, the rate for additional words above ten is seventeen cents.

Again: The Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph Company competes with us for messages between New York and San Francisco. And it is not unfair to say that the Western Union lines between these two points work many more days in the year than those of the Atlantic and Pacific. Under our present practice, if the Atlantic and Pacific Company were unable to forward their messages to San Francisco, it would be necessary for them to so notify their customers, in order that they may be handed to us. But under the provisions of General BUTLER's bill the Atlantic and Pacific could go on taking messages for San Francisco when they had no wires working with that city, and by consolidating a dozen or twenty of them into one message, they would pay in the case of twenty messages of ten words each, equal to two hundred words, $2.50 on the first ten words, and seventeen cents on one hundred and ninety words, equal to $32.30; total $34.80. Whereas the Western Union tolls on twenty messages of ten words each, between New York and San Francisco, would be fifty dollars; so that our competitors could actually underbid us with our own customers at the rate of twenty-five or fifty cents a message between New York and San Francisco, when they had no wires working, and actually make a profit for themselves by compelling us to transmit for them.

Without raising any question as to the power of Congress thus to compel a telegraph company to provide facilities which its competitors may use, so as to derive profit from messages taken at lower rates than are charged by the other, I submit that this proposition is a flagrant violation of the general understanding of what constitutes fair play.

In respect to other sections of the bill the injustice is perhaps greater toward the public than toward the Western Union Telegraph Company. The bill undertakes to secure to all newspapers and press associations the transmission of news on the same terms. The result, I admit, is desirable; but will the means employed accomplish it? Let us see. A news report is filed with us every night at Washington for transmission to points South, its ultimate destination being New Orleans. The telegraph company has no proprietorship in the news report and this bill prohibits it being interested therein. Yet under present arrangements it is delivered to papers at small cities on the route at from fifteen to twenty-five dollars per week, and yet a paper at New Orleans will pay for it $150 per week. Now, suppose that a new paper is started, say at Lynchburg, Virginia, which desires to receive news by telegraph, and on application to this company is informed that we receive say twenty dollars a week for the news delivered to the paper which belongs to the combination owning or controlling the report. Is it the intention of this bill that we shall deliver a message (because a news report is nothing but a message) to some other person than those to whom it is addressed, or that we shall send an independent report from Washington to the new paper at Lynchburg of like length and character for only the twenty dollars a week received from the other paper, as but a small part of an aggregate compensation for a service which includes several other cities? If such is the intention of the bill, its effect would be to prevent our serving any news report at all at Lynchburg; and, indeed, to break up all combinations for receiving the same report so far as the smaller towns and cities and weaker papers are concerned, and to largely increase the profits of the more powerful papers in the larger cities. Let me say here that we will perform for all papers and combinations substantially similar service at the same rates. It is an element of protection to the weaker papers of the country that the Western Union Company have the right to serve them with news gathered by its own agents. And but for the constant exercise of this right by the company many papers now members of press combinations doubtless would not have been admitted to membership.

There are other points in the bill which I should be glad to notice, but cannot do so for want of time. I think, however, that the facts and reasons hereinbefore stated will show that the scheme is as unjust as it is impracticable, and that it would lead to far more clamor from the public who would suffer thereby than has ever been raised by all the wrongs alleged to have been committed by the Western Union Company. I do not care to dwell upon the fact, although I believe it to be a fact, that the introduction of this bill, and of several others hostile to the Western Union Company, is the result of appliances designed to influence results in Wall street, and not prompted by any sincere desire to benefit the public, which, so far as I know, has made no application to Congress alleging grievances and praying for their correction.

Respectfully, &c.,

WM. ORTON.

Hon. C. L. MERRIAM.

Mr. MERRIAM. Having no interest in the Western Union Telegraph Company, and never having owned a dollar of its stock in my life, when I saw that there was a proposition to take from an established enterprise a part of its business so that a rival company might through it make a profit to itself, I felt that it was an injustice which should be met, and, if possible, remedied on this floor.

Any man who is at all familiar with the working of the telegraph companies of this country knows that their success depends upon their integrity and their honor. They never divulge the secrets of the messages delivered to them for transmission. As to the case which has been alluded to here to-night as occurring in the South, all that I can say is that it is no more possible to obtain an honest man in the South than in any other part of the world. It may be quite impossible to find men in the South, two or three thousand miles from the home office, who are entirely immaculate. But, the attention of the Western Union Company being called to a case of this kind, the public will doubtless have no occasion whatever to complain hereafter. The gentleman from Massachusetts has said (and upon this point he would not allow me to interrupt him with a question) that in case of war or invasion this bill will enable the Government to take possession of the telegraph wires of the country. Sir, it is not necessary for me to say to this House that in such cases the Government always takes possession of the telegraph wires.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. And has to pay for them.

Mr. MERRIAM. I thank my colleague [Mr. POTTER] for the time he has yielded to me.

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Speaker, this is a most extraordinary bill, one of the most dangerous bills that has been introduced into Congress within my experience. It proposes to take possession of the telegraph lines of the country; to regulate and control their business; to declare the order in which they shall forward dispatches; the prices which they shall be at liberty to charge; under what circumstances the dispatches of the Government shall go first, and under what circumstances the dispatches of other persons shall go according to a prescribed order. It is so stringent in its limitations that if there were a train off the track between New York and Philadelphia, the telegraph company could not change the order of business to send notice of that fact out of due course even to prevent a collision, but must continue to send off in their order all the market, trade, or other dispatches that might at the moment be first on hand. The bill provides also that the telegraph companies shall not charge upon news dispatches offered to them more than the rates charged to the Associated Press, and must carry the Government dispatches at prices to be fixed by the Postmaster-General. In a word, it takes general control, supervision, and direction of the business of the telegraph lines, whether owned by companies or private individuals which do any business for hire.

Now, I should be glad to know where Congress gets any such power as this bill proposes. These telegraph lines are not the property of the United States. They were neither built by it nor subsidized by it; nay, they do not even exist by its authority. They are built by permission of the States in which they are located or of the individuals upon whose lands or roads they stand. In no single instance that I know of is there any one of these lines that is indebted for its existence or privileges or property in any degree whatever to the United States. Yet it is coolly proposed that Congress shall now take possession of this private property, shall regulate and control it and fix prices upon it. If Congress can do this, then it can fix or regulate the charges of hotels and church sittings, the price of flour or of boots. I am therefore surprised that a bill so unprecedented and revolutionary should have been pressed to a vote within the first hour of its consideration and that a majority of the gentlemen on the other side of the House should have been found to support it.

It has been said that the telegraph is an analogous enterprise to the post-office, and that as the Government has the power and the monopoly of forwarding letters it ought to have the power and the monopoly of controlling dispatches by telegraph. There may be much to be said on both sides of that subject. But however great may be the analogy between these cases, it is to be recollected that the power to control the post-offices and post-roads of the country—the power by which the Government exercises the monopoly over the transportation of the mails—is a power not implied or incidental but expressly given in the Constitution. By the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution there was given to the Government express power to establish post-offices and post-roads. By virtue of that express grant, and that alone, the Government possesses and exercises that power, and the grant has been deemed broad enough to give the Government a monopoly of that business. But no power was ever given to Congress to build telegraph lines and control telegraph messages; and until this night it has never been reported that the Government had any power to monopolize that business, still less to control the private lines and private business of citizens.

But it is said that under the general power to regulate commerce the Government has authority to regulate the prices and the order of business on telegraphs as it would have power to regulate the prices and order of business upon a railway. But how many gentlemen in this House believe the Government has any such power in respect of railways? And how many more of those who even believe it has that extraordinary power think it would be wise for Congress to exercise it? A railway is a far more expensive instrument than a telegraph line; it can be built only by the expenditure of great capital. A telegraph is one of the cheapest concerns in the world; you can build one for $100 a mile; and if the Government is not well served under existing laws it may for some thousand dollars establish a new line of its own to any of the principal cities of the country; so that there is not even the excuse of the necessity of using these lines which exist in respect of the railways.

The gentleman from Massachusetts talks here about being eternally opposed to monopolies. What are monopolies? Monopolies are men or associations of men who by law have special powers or privileges not generally granted; but what special privileges or rights has a telegraph company? Absolutely and exactly none.

So far as telegraph companies exist by law in most of the States, they do so under some general act under which a given number of persons can at any time form themselves into such a company. So far as these lines are built along railways, they are built by the permission of the persons who own the railway. So far as they are built along highways, they are built by permission of those who own or control those highways. They are in no proper sense of the word monopolies at all; since any one can build a telegraph line for himself. It is said that one of these companies has grown by aggregation of lines to be a great power and is guilty of great abuses, so that it breaks down competing lines and largely controls the business of the country. But the same thing may be true of Mr. Claffin or Mr. Stewart of New York, or any other great trader who has carried on a successful business for years until he has acquired a capital and influence which enables him in a degree to control trade and drive to the wall weaker merchants. But can Congress therefore go into New York and take possession of Mr. Stewart's business, say how he shall sell his goods, how he shall regulate his profits, and generally what his prices and order of dealing with his customers shall be? It seems to me that the cases are entirely analogous; that if this Congress can do the one, it can do the other as well.

Now, I do not know anything as to the abuses which have been spoken of. I have never experienced any difficulty in such ordinary transactions as I have had with telegraph companies. I have been told by gentlemen who are publishers that there are serious troubles growing out of the control of the Associated Press and its relations with the telegraph. But what have we to do with that? These are ordinary and private businesses built up without our permission, free from our control, over which we have no ownership, and in respect of which the people have given us no authority. If it be deemed desirable that we should control these telegraph lines, then let us go to work and propose to the States a suitable amendment of the Constitution so as to give the General Government authority to exercise the control now proposed. If the Government is not satisfied with the service it obtains from the existing lines, let it build a line of its own. It need not deal with the owners of existing lines a month longer if it does not choose to. But the power which the Government has in common with every citizen to build a telegraph line of its own and its power to monopolize the whole business are wholly different things. For such monopoly there is no authority; still less for undertaking to control the business while it remains in the hands of private citizens. To my mind, sir, it is too clear to admit of discussion that we have not now any such powers, any more than we have the power to regulate the price of any ordinary product of labor or of any necessity of life.

Now, Mr. Speaker, having merely suggested these objections to the House—for that seems to me all that is necessary in regard to this bill, a bill introduced at this late hour of the session, and which I have supposed it was never seriously intended to press—I am now prepared to yield to gentlemen who have asked me to give them a portion of my time; and I will yield first to the gentleman from Massachusetts on my right, [Mr. E. R. HOAR.]

Mr. E. R. HOAR. My colleague, the chairman of the committee, called my attention yesterday to this bill and the report which accompanies it. I desire to say, in the first place, that I heartily and thoroughly concur with him in many of the views which he has expressed to the House; that is, I entirely concur with him there are gross and palpable abuses of power and privilege and property by the men who have managed these telegraph lines. I think what was told us by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. ALBRIGHT,] and some of the incidents named in the report and some others which may occur to the memory or are within the knowledge of various members of the House, show that to be the fact. But I am the more sorry from those considerations that this committee should bring in just at the close of the session a bill of this vast importance, as it seems to me, so crude, so obnoxious to just criticism, so entirely beyond the constitutional power of this House to pass, upon any construction of the Constitution with which I am familiar.

Now there are two branches apparently, if we follow the line of reasoning, of constitutional power from which the authority is sought to be derived for the passage of this bill. One is the power given to regulate commerce with foreign countries and between the States of the Union, and the other is the power to establish post-offices and post-roads. I have thought, on the little reflection I have been able to give to the subject, that it is possible under the post-office and post-road power there may be authority, though it would be extremely derivative and analogous, not direct, for the Government to undertake the transmission of intelligence by telegraph; and the argument of the committee in the report as well as the oral argument addressed to the House is a very strong one in favor of the Government assuming and undertaking the business of the transmission of intelligence by telegraph. But I cannot see, and I cannot think my colleague can make the intelligence of this House understand, on what principle he undertakes to say you can make a telegraph wire a post-road or a private telegraph office a post-office. It is not supported by the United States. It is not anything to which the United States contributes in the transmission of intelligence.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I have the statute here.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I do not care to see the statute that we have once before attempted something of the same kind. My attention has been already called to it. It does not help the argument.

I cannot see why it is not as much within the constitutional power of Congress to declare the little boys who run around to distribute the information, the messages, the letters, are not post-roads just as much as these telegraph wires. The telegraph company undertook not merely to send from town to town, but to deliver; that is a part of its organization; and this House may, if it chooses to stultify itself, deliberately say these little boys are post-roads and then assume to legislate what they shall do in carrying messages, the speed and order and the price which shall be paid them, as they may regulate these telegraph wires when the Government does not have possession of them and they are not Government wires.

When the Government undertakes to run a telegraph, then I shall go as far as I can with my colleague in favoring the purpose he seeks, because I sympathize, as I have said, entirely with his feelings in regard to the way in which this business has been in some cases managed. But nobody can suppose the framers of the Constitution, in saying the Government might establish post-offices and post-roads, meant it might take any private means of communication which might afterward be devised, and without using it as the Government means of transmission without taking it into Government possession and regulation, undertake to say it will regulate private parties in the mode in which they shall go.

Now, under this regulation of commerce, I am clearly of the opinion that the Government of the United States has a right to say what foreign cables shall be landed on our shores, and to attach such conditions to the right as to it may seem fit.

I am not prepared to deny that under the power to regulate commerce as between the States the transmission from one State to another may be regulated; the power to regulate commerce being as Marshall has defined it, "intercourse." The social business intercourse of the community is included within the word "commerce." But this bill undertakes to regulate every line within the limits of a State that does not go out of it. There can be no constitutional power of legislation based on the post-office power and the post-road power, and it does not make it a branch of the post-office, to be run by the Government.

I do not see why, on the same principle, if you should say the Adams Express wagons were post-roads you might not undertake what is very important, the regulation of the delivery of their parcels in the cities, which is sometimes a matter of very great favoritism.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. We do that. I want to call the attention of my colleague to the fact that we do by law regulate that. Mr. E. R. HOAR. We do not by law regulate that within the States.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Yes, we do.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. Not Congress.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Yes. Let them abstract a letter, and they will get into State's prison.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. O! That is it.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. O, yes; that is exactly the thing.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. Let us see for a moment how that is. That brings me back to my post-road and post-office argument as to the constitutional power. Whatever you bring within the constitutional power of the Government to provide for the people, undoubtedly you give them the power to exclude everybody else but the Government from performing that public duty which they assume. But I am now speaking about the Government undertaking to control the Adams Express wagons, so that because there is a great evil and a great nuisance through their favoritism in delivering goods to different merchants and packages to different classes of people, from which I have myself suffered sometimes great inconvenience in my own city from papers not being delivered to me at the precise moment they were wanted in court—that because of that you might say the law of the United States shall be applied to their delivery of their packages, and that by calling them post-roads you can get over all the difficulty and fix their prices and their whole mode of transacting business.

Undoubtedly you may regulate the commerce of the States. Whether that goes to the length of fixing prices is a matter which was a good deal discussed in the railroad discussion we had during the last session, and I do not want to open it again. But this bill does not stop there. This bill regulates everything in the way of telegraphic operations within the States.

I should be very glad to have put into this bill a prohibition on officers of the United States, legislators, and others, over whom we have any control, from receiving complimentary passes. That would be a very good provision. That, undoubtedly, we have power to do, and to make that a penal offense. But I have not yet, in the time I have given to the examination of this bill, been able to find that it is one we ought thus hastily to pass.

Mr. POTTER. I now yield to my colleague from the Oneida district [Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS] ten minutes.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, as true as it is that this is a wonderful bill when considered by itself, we get a much broader view of it if we take it in connection with the report of the committee, which I have before me. The bill itself is very innocent on its face, proposing to authorize the contracting for the mere transmission of messages. The report is broad enough to justify the National Government in building telegraph lines. The report is much too large for the individual that seems to be hidden in it. I object at the beginning to the application of the principle. The gentleman from Massachusetts is logical enough to see the force of his arguments, and I venture to say that he does not shrink from the consequences of them.

He understands it was necessary that he should adopt the line of argument he presents in the report before he can get ground to stand upon for presenting a bill of this character. Innocent as the bill is on its face, it is yet the forerunner of other bills. It not only authorizes Congress to contract with existing lines, but it authorizes also the building of additional lines and the establishment of international telegraphic business. The argument of the gentleman covers the whole ground. I believe that such a policy is suggested by the bill itself, nor does the gentleman from Massachusetts hesitate in the application of his principle. He complains of the telegraphic companies because they distribute the news. Why? Because in this way the market for corn and stocks is affected! That is to say, the gentleman from Massachusetts comes here with a bill for regulating the markets for corn and stocks, and would have Congress interfere and say how intelligence shall be gathered and distributed which affects the whole interest and business of the country. He claims that capital ought not to have its natural advantage; that enterprise ought not to have that advantage. He wants to give the slow and lazy defense of law against tact and diligence. He seeks to place the markets under control of statutes.

But the chief bugbear is that so often pointed at with fear upon this floor—the Associated Press. The gentleman seems to be very much afraid of the Associated Press. What is the Associated Press? It is an organization in the city of New York of seven newspapers for the gathering of news which is sent to all parts of the country and to papers of every shade of politics and of no politics at all. The Associated Press, as such, indulges in no adverse criticisms upon statesmen distinguished or otherwise.

The very agreeable gentleman who sits here representing the Associated Press is not the man who makes the gentlemen on this floor wince. It is not the Associated Press that excites the ire of the gentleman from Massachusetts; it is the special correspondents who sit in the gallery above. The agent of the Associated Press on this floor sends news from this body of which, I venture to say, no gentleman can complain. He reports the proceedings without comment. He gives facts without gloss or color. But he sends only a small part of the reports which leave the capital. The wires and the mails are burdened with the notes and criticisms of an army of other correspondents. They are not representatives of the Associated Press. They represent their own journals, and those alone are responsible for them. They are as independent of the Associated Press as they are of this House. You cannot by slaughtering the Associated Press put shackles upon the newspapers of this country.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALBRIGHT] has recited an instance to show that the Associated Press is illiberal. It happened, judging from his statement, that in the city of Mobile, where his committee held its sessions, the agent of the Associated Press happened to be in his political sympathies in opposition to the gentleman. The Associated Press has to employ such agents as it can find. A friend from the State of Connecticut tells me that in that State the agents of the Associated Press happen to be all republicans. In the State of New York a majority of them are republicans, and I have often heard democratic politicians complain that only republican news passed over the wires. The gentleman from Pennsylvania complains that the agent of the Associated Press in Mobile refused to send a message containing his views over the wires. If he had addressed that message to the Inter-Ocean of Chicago or to the New York Times it would certainly have gone everywhere in the United States, and then the very rule of which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] complains would have made that dispatch the property of all the papers under the rules.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Would it have gone into the Associated Press?

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, I do not know any way that Congress—

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I ask, would it have gone there?

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I will answer the question when the gentleman takes his seat. I do not know any way in which Congress can regulate such matters.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I did not ask that question.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I know you did not.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Then what did you tell me that for if you are going to answer my question? I thought you did not know, and that is why I excused you.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I told you that because I thought you needed to know just that.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I did not need to know just that, because I knew that there was nothing that was true that got into the newspapers. Is your paper a member of the Associated Press?

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I will tell you when you take your seat.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. When I get an answer I will take my seat.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. You do not browbeat anybody here.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No, not anybody; of course not you.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I am not a member of the New York City Associated Press.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I did not ask you that. I asked you if your paper was a member of the Associated Press.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. My newspaper is not a member of the Associated Press of the city of New York.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Is it a member of the Associated Press?

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I will tell you.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No dodging; is it a member of the Associated Press?

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I will tell you when I get ready; and do not let me have any display of your impudence.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Well, do not do it before.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, my paper is a member of the Associated Press of the State of New York.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Thank you.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. And I will tell the gentleman from Massachusetts more now about the Associated Press. He has misrepresented the Associated Press.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Then we are only about even, that is all I have to say.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. With this difference—

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It is an even thing, I guess.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. With this difference, that there was reason of justice in what the Associated Press said of the gentleman from Massachusetts. Now, I attempted to discuss this bill upon principle.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I see you did, and upon interest too.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. And will do so, unless the gentleman from Massachusetts chooses to divert me from it.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Yes; upon principle and interest too.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I will tell you about that too. The Associated Press of the city of New York consists of seven newspapers.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. It represents a power which has grown up by the combination of enterprise and of capital. It is not true that a newspaper cannot be established in the city of New York without membership in the Associated Press. The portion of the news which is now gathered by the Associated Press for the city of New York is a small part of that which goes by telegraph. Some of the leading members of the Associated Press, like the New York Herald, deem the association a burden upon them, and are anxious to break away from it. In the country where my newspaper is a member of the Associated Press anybody may become a member by paying an admission fee, which goes into a fund for the common interest of all the members.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Now let me—

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I do not choose to be interfered with again at present.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Can they get into the Associated Press without every member agrees to it?

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I do not choose to be interfered with again.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I see you do not.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. If the gentleman from Massachusetts exercises courtesy I will answer any question he may choose to ask. But if he does not choose to show courtesy, he shall have no courtesy from me.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Sho!

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I say that taking the country as a whole the Associated Press is not the tyrant which gentlemen here for their own purposes see fit to represent it to be. That it has its abuses, that it inclines here to one party and there to another party, is true. It operates as all parties and as all that is human must operate, through men. But what is the proposition before us now? It is to exercise a censorship over the press because the press does not choose to say what we want the press to say. Congress tried to do that in pro-slavery days by tyranny over the mails. But the press is more powerful now than then. You cannot bind it with withes. It is stalwart in its well-earned freedom. Its enterprise has become marvelous, and it is the greatest customer of the telegraph. It has set examples to governments in gathering intelligence of important movements. We propose to say by law how it shall gather its news and under what circumstances it shall gather its news. We are trying to clip the wings of its enterprise.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MERRIAM. I hope my colleague's time may be extended.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I want to say a few words upon the bill.

Mr. POTTER. Does the gentleman want two minutes longer?

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. Two or three minutes.

Mr. POTTER. I will yield for three minutes longer.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I want to say, first, that section 3 of the bill would operate with great disadvantage to the smaller newspapers, because the telegraph companies, through their agents, do gather news for the smaller newspapers. Everywhere where a fire occurs, where an accident happens, the telegraph company co-operates in the gathering of news. That section would be most fatal to the news department of the smaller papers.

So again—I am sure the gentleman from Massachusetts did not mean it—but I think that the effect of section 4 of the bill would be to compel the telegraph companies to charge the smaller newspapers a much higher rate than they now charge them. For example, the telegraph company contracts to send a certain amount of news to New Orleans. The news has to go to New Orleans. Now, if the company were compelled to charge to every newspaper on the line at the same rate then the smaller newspapers could not get that news at all. But because the news has to go over the wires the company can afford to furnish it to the smaller newspapers at a very low rate, because whatever is received in that way is clear gain. I think therefore that the third and fourth sections are in antagonism to what the gentleman from Massachusetts declares to be the purpose of the bill.

Now, if I had more time I would call attention again to the fact that in the beginning of the sixth section there is a phrase which while very fair on its face would interfere with the great charities which the Western Union Company and I suppose other telegraph companies exercise; as, for example, when disaster comes upon a town like Shreveport, the telegraph company becomes the almoner of the charities of the people, and does it gratuitously.

I thank my colleague [Mr. POTTER] for his courtesy in yielding to me.

Mr. POTTER. I yield now to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. FINCK.]

Mr. FINCK. Mr. Speaker, this is a remarkable bill; and whatever may be said about it, we ought at least to give credit to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] for his bravery and courage in presenting it to the House. It sounds more like a military order than anything else. In a single paragraph it proposes to take charge of all the telegraph lines of the United States. Allow me to read what it says in the first three lines:

That all telegraphic lines of communication over which messages are transmitted for hire are hereby established and made post-roads.

By a single sweep of the pen, the gentleman from Massachusetts undertakes to make all the telegraph lines of the United States post-roads. What are these telegraph lines? They exist in the thirty-seven States of the Union, and are corporations under the laws of those several States, private companies in the enjoyment and possession of private property. The gentleman might as well undertake to regulate the running of a steam-mill in Ohio and to fix the rate of tolls that shall be charged by its proprietors as to undertake to assume control of the telegraph lines in Ohio or Massachusetts. Where does he obtain this power? The gentleman from Massachusetts tells us that it is derived under that clause of the Constitution which provides for the establishment of post-roads. His colleague [Mr. E. R. HOAR] has, I think, disposed of that proposition. How can you make post-roads out of these wires upon which telegrams are sent from one part of the country to the other? You cannot establish them as post-roads or post-offices; you have no power over them. How do you obtain control of a private corporation in the State of Ohio or Massachusetts? There is no authority vested in the Federal Government to take possession of these lines—no more than to take possession of a turnpike-road within a State.

The gentleman from Massachusetts undertakes to regulate also the rates of charges on these lines. He does not stop there; but he undertakes also to make a violation of the provisions of this act a crime punishable by indictment in the courts of the United States by fine or imprisonment. Where does he get the power to do that? It is a bold and daring attempt on the part of the gentleman from Massachusetts to regulate and control these telegraph lines without any authority whatsoever vested in Congress by the Constitution for that purpose.

Mr. Speaker, I am not connected with any news association; I have no interest whatever in any of these telegraph lines. But I do know that there is no power in Congress under the Constitution to pass any law of this character. It is possible the gentleman from Massachusetts may feel that he has cause to complain of the Associated Press. I do not know whether that is the fact or not; but whatever may be his purpose, I have to say that in my opinion we have no power to pass this bill. It is now pressed upon us at the close of this Congress, and I trust it will be defeated by the House.

Mr. POTTER. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut. [Mr. KELLOGG.]

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. Speaker, I rise merely to say that this bill is an illustration of a tendency on the part of Congress to attempt legislation upon private interests and upon matters that concern State legislation only. I think this bill contains too much altogether for us to be justified in its passage by any reason that has been given. We have here a proposition to take control substantially of all the telegraph lines of the country. We might as well attempt to regulate the rates for freight and passengers on all the railroads of the United States which are post-roads. When we attempt legislation of this kind, especially upon matters of private interest, where private capital has built up an establishment like the Western Union Telegraph Company, I think we are going altogether beyond our jurisdiction, and it is time to "call a halt." I do not know anything about the abuses in the management of the Associated Press. The charges that are made may be true. I do not know whether the agents of the association in my State are republicans or not. I never heard that question raised until to night. I do not know democrats or republicans in any matter of business of this kind. I say that in my judgment it is altogether beyond our power to legislate in the manner this bill proposes. I trust the bill will be defeated.

Mr. POTTER. I now yield to the gentleman from Connecticut. [Mr. HAWLEY.]

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, in connection with this subject, there are unquestionably some evils and aggravations under which the public and the press labor. I think they are not well understood by the House; and as a newspaper man allow me to explain them. I think such explanation will aid in a better understanding of this bill.

Now, a great deal of the trouble gentlemen feel, most of the exasperation they feel, is due not to the Western Union Telegraph Company but to the Associated Press. That is a very peculiar institution. Its history, its character, are partially sketched in the report of the Judiciary Committee; but I fear the House does not yet understand it. The seven great newspapers in the city of New York, which began humbly many years ago, have now come to have the supervision and control, the complete control, of the collection and distribution of all the news published in the newspapers of the country as telegraphic news. There are agencies established under these seven newspapers. They have their contracts and arrangements all over the country, by means of which they collect this news, and then from a center in the city of New York they distribute it to the newspapers belonging to the Associated Press. The telegraph company is to them an agent for the collection and distribution of news—an express company, so to speak. Under this national associated press, or in the New York Associated Press, as it is called, are a number of local press associations, as we call ourselves. I belong to the New England Associated Press, and my friend from Utica [Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS] to the New York Associated Press. There is a western, a northwestern, and a southwestern press association.

I will take, for instance, the New England Associated Press. The contract with us is that we shall collect all over New England whatever news of local interest there may be and send it to New York. It is dropped on the way to all of our New England papers. The New England Press Association, I may say, is composed only of some eight or ten of the leading newspapers, and they peddle out to smaller papers, which come under another contract. We are bound, as I have said, to collect the local news of New England and send it to New York, and in return we get the news from the agents throughout the Union and the cable news from abroad, but we have to pay them a heavy sum of money besides.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Let me ask the gentleman from Connecticut whether anybody who owns a newspaper can get into the Associated Press without all the members of that Associated Press agree to it?

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I will come to that fairly in the course of my explanation. These local associations agree to collect and furnish news to these various press associations, and they in turn contract to do the same toward the New York Associated Press. Let me say right here that if we do not like the New York Associated Press, we can set up for ourselves. We do not do this because it would be just as much as our property is worth. We cannot stir a single foot—not a foot. We have had long and angry controversies with the New York Associated Press. They have been settled generally somewhat to our satisfaction. So has the great Western Associated Press, for collecting and furnishing the news in that section of the country, had angry controversies with the New York Associated Press. The management has not been to our satisfaction at all times. We are subject to them, however; our business is subject to their dictation. They control the collection and distribution of the news of the whole country. The Western Union Telegraph simply contracts to send it. They can make a contract with any other associated press.

Now, what is the evil complained of? You say that dispatches from certain portions of the country are colored to represent only particular sentiments. I will tell you how that happens, and you will see how much or how little there is in it. Wherever there is a newspaper belonging to the Associated Press that newspaper is made its agent to collect the news in its particular locality. If anything happens in the region of Springfield or Chicago, the Chicago Tribune or the Springfield Republican is bound to collect the news by means of the local telegraph and make up a dispatch, and that dispatch you will read in the morning in the New York press.

But it is said that this news is often colored to suit party purposes. In some regions of the country there is no old leading newspaper of the republican party, and the agents of the Associated Press of Mobile, Savannah, or Nashville are exactly the same old papers established before the war, and the editors are of the democratic persuasion. And then at many more points where there are no newspapers the local telegraphic operator is charged with collecting the news, and he is very probably a man of democratic politics; so that the news coming from the South has been almost wholly in the control of that class of people, people of that political persuasion, and is naturally colored accordingly. Now, the dispatches ought not to be colored in that way. A dispatch for general use is a sort of general possession, and should be non-partisan. In Connecticut generally every agent of the Associated Press is a republican, and we hold it our duty in making up a dispatch, say of a democratic convention, that it shall be strictly impartial. For example, the one which was published to-day about the Connecticut democratic convention at Hartford is made up by the republican editor there. It is his duty to make it of a non-partisan character, and to give a fair account of the members and character of the convention. And it is the duty of every agent of the Associated Press in the whole South, and I have no doubt it is the directions they give their agents as honorable men, to make up a non-partisan account. But they do not do it. That accounts for some of the things you complain of.

Let me refer to one other point. These things are not quite right, but I think they will cure themselves. It is in the power of the northwestern press, the New England press, &c., to come together and form one national association, bring their collectors of news together, and make their contract with the cable, and completely leave those seven great papers stranded. For they can do nothing without the country press. It collects all the news for them just as they collect their news for us. It is the fault of the country newspapers themselves that they do not have the position they ought to occupy.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman answer the question I addressed to him?

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. As to the close corporation?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. The New England association is composed of eight or ten of the leading newspapers and will sell to any newspaper a portion of its news; for example, to the Pittsfield paper or the Fall River paper, which are not large enough to pay the full rates. Now, the point of the gentleman from Massachusetts is this: Suppose a new morning paper wants to start in Boston, can it do so? Not without the consent of the others which have built up that association with an expenditure of a great deal of money and time. And I am free to say, as one of the men engaged in this business, that the conduct of our own association, and I am a member of it, is not what it ought to be. And I am free to say while I manage the only morning paper in Hartford, I will not stand in the way of the establishment of any other paper in that town, but I have the right to prevent it.

Mr. DAWES. How about your neighbor up the river?

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. O! you must take care of the Springfield Republican yourself.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. Allow me to say that in the State of

New York it is different. Outside the city of New York any person desirous of establishing a newspaper may become a member of the association by paying a sum equivalent to five years' dues as an admission fee.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. That is fair enough; but as a rule you can prevent the establishment of any other paper.

Mr. POTTER. I yield now to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WARD.]

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman from New York yield to me for a moment? Under the new rule this bill has to go over until to-morrow, and until it is disposed of no other bill can be introduced, because it would go over as unfinished business. I therefore suggest, as we have been ten hours in session, that the gentleman yield to me for a motion to adjourn.

Mr. POTTER. In a moment. I wish to yield for a few moments to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WARD.]

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. My own position as a member of the Judiciary Committee in regard to this bill may be of little consequence to anybody but myself, but I do not want to be misunderstood. I am opposed to the legislation proposed by this bill and to the principle on which it is based, and I have acted in accordance with that position ever since I have been in Congress. I do not believe in this kind of legislation. And I desire to state this because I understand it has been claimed that I have supported this bill; that in the committee I understood that the bill was to be reported here and discussed and that I did not make any objection to it.

I look upon some of the evils which have been described here in connection with the Associated Press as unmitigated evils, and I would be glad to find some remedy for them. I look, however, upon the recognition of the principle on which this legislation is based as a greater evil than any we have suffered from the Associated Press. I am opposed to that kind of legislation on kindred subjects and I am opposed to it on this subject. I do not believe the Congress is yet ready to run telegraphs, or to fix the prices of wages or commodities throughout the country.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] suggests that this bill goes over. I understood that the Judiciary Committee had this evening only.

Mr. RANDALL. That applies only to unfinished business. They would not have the power to make other reports.

The SPEAKER. The point has been somewhat discussed and the Chair would be glad to have it well understood by the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I stated the case under the new rule as I understood it.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I suggest that the Committee on the Judiciary had this evening only for the consideration of its business and that the business which it has failed to finish this evening falls.

The SPEAKER. That point is raised, and the Chair desires the attention of members to it, for it is an entirely new point. Heretofore by usage of the House, when an evening was given for the consideration of a particular bill and it failed to pass because of the lack of a majority in its favor, it failed on the simple principle that there was no use in carrying it over as unfinished business. But on this bill the demand for the previous question was seconded by a majority of the House; but the new rule which has been adopted requires a two-thirds vote to second the demand for the previous question on a bill on the first day of its consideration. That rule does not require that in case two-thirds fail to vote to sustain it the bill shall die and not come up as unfinished business. The Chair does not think it would meet the equities of the case to decide otherwise. A majority have seconded the demand for the previous question, and the bill is presumably in charge of that majority, who might control it absolutely by moving to recommit the bill and then moving to reconsider the vote on its recommitment. The Chair thinks that a majority having voted to second the previous question, they have a right to have a vote upon the bill. The law of the House on the subject of the previous question has not been changed. The majority still control the business of the House. The rule has only been changed so that the minority shall have the right to debate. Now, if the majority should recommit the bill and enter a motion to reconsider, what question would be more highly privileged to-morrow than that?

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. But the bill came up under the rules as they are.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is quoting the usage and not the rules, and the usage of to-day must conform to the rules of to-day. The bill does not go over unless there be not a majority of the House in its favor.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I have understood the usage to be that unless the previous question is seconded on a bill on the special day set for its consideration, the bill falls, and that the only change made in the rule was as to the number required to second the demand for the previous question on the first day of the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Does not the gentleman from Vermont now perceive that if a majority of the House are in favor of the bill, it is perfectly competent for them to recommit the bill, and then a motion can be entered to reconsider the recommitment?

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. It does not follow that because some other parliamentary method may be resorted to to bring the bill before the House, therefore this is a proper mode of doing it.

The SPEAKER. If there is a majority against the bill, that majority can recommit and enter a motion to reconsider.

Mr. GARFIELD. Suppose the House adjourns without the motion to recommit being made?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has only stated that as a majority voted to sustain the previous question, that majority could accomplish its object of bringing the bill before the House in the manner which the Chair has indicated, by recommitment and reconsideration, and there is no use of doing indirectly what can be done directly.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. Suppose a majority had not seconded the previous question?

The SPEAKER. Then the bill would have been dead, clearly.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. Therefore it seems to me fair to determine whether the majority wish to keep the bill alive until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. If the majority wish to do that, they can easily do it in the mode indicated by the Chair.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move that the House do now adjourn, and I will not withdraw the motion.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at ten o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. ALBRIGHT: Memorial of members of the Woman's National Christian Temperance Union, praying for restrictive legislation in regard to the importation, manufacture, and sale of alcohol in the District of Columbia and the Territories, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ARCHER: The petition of Jane E. Slamon, of Prince George's County, Maryland, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CLYMER: The petition of citizens of Blandon, Burks County, Pennsylvania, for the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction of duties made in 1872, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petitions of citizens of Reading, Millerstown, and Birds-borough, Pennsylvania, that the national credit be extended to aid the completion of the Texas and Pacific Railroad, to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

By Mr. DANFORD: The petition of R. S. Lacey, for relief, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DAVIS: The remonstrance of Alfred Glass and others, of Brooke County, West Virginia, against the restoration of duties on tea and coffee and revival of internal taxes, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FARWELL: The petition of members of the Woman's National Temperance Union, for restrictive legislation in regard to intoxicating liquors, to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. FRYE: Petitions of the Methodist Episcopal church of Biddeford Pool; of the Methodist Episcopal church of Guilford; of the Universalist church of Auburn, and of sundry citizens of Maine, for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GARFIELD: Two petitions of members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union from the State of Ohio, asking restrictive legislation in reference to the use and sale of alcohol in the District of Columbia and the Territories, to the same committee.

By Mr. GUNCKEL: The petition of Henry C. Cassad, formerly of Company E, Fifty-seventh Indiana Volunteers, for correction of his military record, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of Franklin C. May, formerly of Company K, Forty-second Ohio Volunteers, for correction of his military record, to the same committee.

Also, the remonstrance of tobacco manufacturers and dealers against an advance in the existing rate of tax upon tobacco, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HARRISON: Additional papers in support of the claim of J. Bloomstien, of Nashville, Tennessee, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. E. R. HOAR: The petition of the Methodist Episcopal church of Ballard Vale, Massachusetts, for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, the petition of John Ashworth and others, of similar import, to the same committee.

By Mr. KELLEY: The petition of citizens of Philadelphia, for the passage of the bill in aid of the completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad, to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

By Mr. KILLINGER: Two petitions of citizens of Schuylkill County, Pennsylvania, praying Government aid to the Texas and Pacific Railroad, to the same committee.

By Mr. KELLOGG: The petition of Charles W. Adams, for an appropriation to satisfy a judgment against the United States rendered by the United States district court for the district of Louisiana on the 11th day of May, 1866, to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. MONROE: The petition of G. P. Sperry and 111 others, of Summit County, Ohio, for restrictive legislation in regard to the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PARSONS: The petition of H. M. Kelly and 149 others of Newark, Ohio, members of the Woman's Christian Union, for restrictive legislation in regard to the use of intoxicating liquors, to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS: The petition of the Grand Temple of Honor of the State of New York, for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ROBINSON, of Ohio: The petition of George Bennett, Lucretia Potter, and 852 others, of Ohio, for restrictive legislation in regard to the use of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia and the Territories, to the same committee.

By Mr. SCHELL: The petition of dealers in drugs, perfumery, &c., for the repeal of Schedule C of the internal-revenue laws, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania: Six petitions of citizens of Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, asking Congress to extend aid to the Texas and Pacific Railroad, to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

By Mr. SPEER: The petition of citizens of Hollidaysburgh, Pennsylvania, asking Congress to extend aid to the Texas and Pacific Railroad, to the same committee.

By Mr. WADDELL: The petition of Charles W. Phifer, of Texas, for removal of disabilities, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WOOD: The petition of the Carriage Builders' National Association of the United States, that the duties upon carriages may be so adjusted as to be more in harmony with the duties placed upon the articles used in their construction, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 18, 1875.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the rules be suspended and the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the tariff bill. Pending that motion, I move that all debate upon the first section of the bill be limited to ten minutes.

Mr. COBURN. I desire to make a privileged report.

Mr. RANDALL. I insist upon the regular order.

Mr. COBURN. Is not a privileged report the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The report is privileged under the rules. The motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] is to suspend the rules and go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DAWES. If it is only to submit a report for printing and recommitting, I will not object. I do not object to mere routine business.

Mr. RANDALL. I insist upon the regular order.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. If the House shall go into Committee of the Whole now, what will be the effect upon the unfinished business coming over from last night?

The SPEAKER. That will postpone it.

Mr. RANDALL. It would keep its place.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Very well.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I desire to submit some reports, and I ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. When one member demands the regular order, it is the absolute duty of the Speaker to enforce it.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not withdraw my demand.

Mr. DONNAN. Have I not the right to submit a report from the Committee on Printing?

The SPEAKER. That right is not of so high a privilege as it is for the House to go into Committee of the Whole on the tariff bill. The report from the Committee on Printing is privileged under the rules, and the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts is to suspend the rules and go into Committee of the Whole. Pending that the gentleman moves to limit all debate upon the first section of the bill to ten minutes.

Mr. BANNING. I hope not.

Mr. DAWES. How much time is needed?

Mr. BANNING. Time enough to debate the question fully.

Mr. FIELD. At least thirty minutes.

Mr. DAWES. I will say twenty minutes.

Mr. BANNING. This is the most important section in the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Say thirty minutes.

Mr. DAWES. Very well; I will move to limit the debate to thirty minutes.

The motion limiting debate was agreed to.

The question was taken on suspending the rules and going into Committee of the Whole; and upon a division there were—ayes 67, noes 22.

Mr. SENER. That is not a quorum.

The SPEAKER. It is not; and the Chair will order tellers, and appoint the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. DAWES, and the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. SENER, to act as tellers.

The tellers took their places; but before announcing the vote on either side—

Mr. SENER (one of the tellers) said: I will withdraw my demand for a further count if there can be ten minutes allowed for business by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot consent to entertain conditional objections or withdrawal of objections.

Mr. SENER. Then I will withdraw the call for a further count.

The motion to suspend the rules and go into Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

TAX AND TARIFF BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. HALE, of Maine, in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4680) to protect the sinking fund and provide for the exigencies of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate upon the pending section is limited to thirty minutes. The pending question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SOUTHARD] to strike out the section as amended.

Mr. FIELD. I move to substitute for the section proposed to be stricken out that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That on and after the 1st day of July, 1875, the duties on all commodities, the growth and productions of foreign countries and subject to duty by existing laws, shall be increased 10 per cent.; and on the first day of each succeeding quarter of each fiscal year thereafter all duties shall be advanced an additional 10 per cent. until the price of American gold coin in the open market shall not exceed the par of United States legal-tender notes: Provided, That the legal-tender notes called greenbacks shall on and after July 1, 1875, be received for duties on imports.

Mr. DAWES. I raise the point of order that the proposed amendment is not germane to the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FIELD] can reach his object at a subsequent stage of the consideration of the bill, by offering his amendment as an additional section or as a substitute for the whole bill.

The question was then taken on striking out the section as amended, and upon a division there were—ayes 37, noes 63.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. That is not a quorum. I call for a further count.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. DAWES and Mr. SOUTHARD were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were ayes 34.

Before the noes were counted,

Mr. DAWES (one of the tellers) said: I understand the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SOUTHARD] does not insist upon a further count.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the motion to strike out is not agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to move an amendment to the first section.

Mr. BECK. Did a quorum vote?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman is too late in making that inquiry.

Mr. BECK. The Chair had not said the motion was lost before I asked the question.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I stood here on the floor and called for tellers; and I do not know of any one who has a right to withdraw my call.

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SOUTHARD], who made the motion to strike out and who was one of the tellers, I supposed was the one that called for a further count.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman making the motion to strike out [Mr. SOUTHARD] and the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. DAWES] antagonizing that motion were appointed as tellers, and agreed that no further count should be had, and the Chair so announced. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] states that he rose in time to insist upon a further count, as he had the right to do. The Chair considers that the demand for a further count was made in time, and the tellers will resume their places and complete the count.

The tellers accordingly resumed their places, and, completing the count, announced that there were—ayes 64, noes 96.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend the section by striking out "$1," in line 70, and inserting "90 cents" as the amount of tax per gallon.

Mr. Chairman, if this tax is to be imposed, it ought to be fixed at such an amount that the revenue of the Government may not be defeated in consequence of the temptation to frauds. I believe, sir, that 90 cents is as high as Congress can go without tempting the manufacturers of whisky and others who may be induced to go into the business to commit fraud. It will be very well remembered that when we made this tax $2 the temptation to evasion of the tax was so great that the revenue derived by the Government was comparatively small; and subsequently, when we fixed the tax at 50 cents, the amount received at that rate was more than double what we had received from the two-dollar tax. I believe I am correct in my statement upon this point.

While I do not entirely concur in the necessity for any imposition of additional taxes, yet if this bill is to pass, the tax ought to be fixed at such a rate as will enable the Government to collect the entire amount due to it; and in proposing 90 cents as a suitable figure I believe I concur with the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury, as I have heard it stated without contradiction.

As to the general policy of our taxation, I cannot concur with the recommendation of the Committee on Ways and Means. My own belief is that the proper method of relieving the Government from its present embarrassments would be a reduction of the amount of our appropriation bills. In my view, an increase of taxation will only aggravate the present paralysis of business throughout the country. I believe there is absolutely no necessity at this time for any increase of taxation. After a careful examination of the appropriation bills—in fact I may say after a thorough study of them—I believe that if this House really meant economy, it could reduce the appropriation bills at this session of Congress at least $40,000,000. I believe that this opportunity will be offered to the next Congress; and that at the next session we shall be able to reduce the appropriation bills to the extent of $50,000,000, without embarrassing at all any function of the Government.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. After "a careful study of the appropriation bills," does the gentleman think that we can make a reduction of $40,000,000 on those bills yet to be acted on?

Mr. RANDALL. Of course I do not. I am speaking of all the appropriation bills. The naval appropriation bill alone could be reduced to $10,000,000.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is an old parliamentarian; and I would like to know how we are to get back to the bills already passed upon and reduce them.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not expect that, of course; but I say to-day that if you will reduce the civil service appropriation bill to what I deem would be a proper amount; if you will make a moderate reduction in the Army bill; if you will strike out altogether the deficiency bill; if you will lay aside for twelve months the river and harbor bill, there will be no necessity whatever for an imposition of one dollar of additional taxation. In this manner business may be allowed to proceed toward a revival instead of being subjected to another disastrous blow by the imposition of an unnecessary and outrageous tax.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DAWES. I wish to say one word in regard to this proposition to fix the tax at 90 cents. I agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] that we ought to seek to fix the tax at such a point (and not higher) as will secure the faithful collection of the revenue; and adopting this view, it is difficult to ascertain whether the rate should be 90 cents or $1. I will say, however, that the general drift of all the testimony before the Committee on Ways and Means was that the Government could collect a tax of $1. The change from 50 cents to 70 cents was apparently an alteration in the rate of tax, but was not so in fact.

Mr. RANDALL. That is true.

Mr. DAWES. Under the 50 cents tax there were certain other small taxes which practically made the tax equivalent to 70 cents.

Mr. RANDALL. And the 70 cents tax was a decided improvement.

Mr. DAWES. Yes; a decided improvement. The tax of 70 cents has been collected a great deal better than was the tax of 50 cents. But it does not follow, from our experience on this point, that we cannot make the tax somewhat higher. The general testimony thus far of those engaged in the collection is that they could collect a tax of $1. If I thought that we could not collect a higher tax than 90 cents, I would assent to this amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania; for nothing would be so demoralizing in every sense, as well as detrimental to the revenue, as to fix the tax higher than could be collected faithfully; and nothing could so damage the honest, enterprising, and prosperous distillers as to have so high a tax as to cause illicit distilleries to spring up all over the country.

But the general belief is, the belief of very many of the large distillers themselves, that if you put it at a round dollar and let them know it is going to remain there and all improvements in methods which can be devised will be resorted to, we will get it faithfully. That is why the committee yielded to the conclusion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that it should be a dollar. I yield now to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] on the subject of the reduction of expenditures.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat surprised by the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.] I want it to be remembered that he now believes and promises there can be and will be $50,000,000 of reduction.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not promise; I say I believe it. I have no power to make promises.

Mr. GARFIELD. I say that he expressed that as his belief of what can be done.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no doubt it can be done.

Mr. GARFIELD. Can $40,000,000 be reduced this session? I wish to call his attention to the fact that the sinking fund and the interest on the public debt are $140,000,000. The total appropriations for the last year were $270,000,000 exclusive of the sinking fund. How he proposes to cut down $40,000,000 on our present establishment can only be seen by what he proposes in reference to the Navy. He thinks we ought to get the Navy down this year $10,000,000 below what we have put it at. In other words, he wishes to put the Navy down to $7,000,000. It is now in the bill which has passed and become a law I believe a little less than $17,000,000. If the gentleman will show how he can maintain the Navy in anything like its present shape on any such sum as $7,000,000 he will show what nobody has yet offered to show in this country. We pay almost that amount for the actual pay of the Navy outside of the repairs of our ships and general incidental expenses of the Navy.

Now let it be understood in the country that we are going in the next year to get $50,000,000 of reduction on our appropriations. I think it is high time the country should look forward to see in what a crippled condition the public service will be with such retrenchment as that.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman does not fairly state it.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am willing to go as far as possible, and I hope the next Congress will go lower than we have gone. I think they ought to.

Mr. RANDALL. You did not fairly state what I said. I said that I believed it ought to be cut down fifty millions, but I also said without any legitimate interference with the proper functions of government. And I say to the gentleman now, so far as I know and so far as I shall be guided in the next Congress as a member of it, that the Administration has nothing to fear whatever from any attempt on my part to cripple it in its finances.

Mr. GARFIELD. What does the gentleman propose in the way of cutting down the Navy?

Mr. RANDALL. I think that your party is utterly incapable of cutting down—utterly incapable of cutting off excrescences from the appropriation bills. I believe, and the gentleman will not deny it, that all these Departments can be cut down. I take for instance the Department of Justice—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to increase it 1 cent, making it 91 cents; and I have sought the floor for the purpose of replying to the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] on a view of the case which is certainly entitled to great consideration, that is to make the tax so as not to defeat the object of revenue. He refers to the time when the tax was $2 a gallon, when our entire amount of collection of tax on liquors amounted to a little over $18,000,000 a year, although it was known the amount distilled reached very nearly 100,000,000 gallons; and also to the fact that the amount which was collected when it was reduced to 50 cents a gallon, with certain special taxes, amounted to something over $50,000,000 a year.

I wish to call the attention of the committee to another fact. While the $2 tax was pending it was collected in money from the distillers and the casks were marked with a stencil-plate to indicate that the tax was paid. The law of 1868 which reduced the tax from $2 to 50 cents, with certain special taxes, making it in the aggregate on the average 70 cents, the whole mode of collecting the tax was changed, and instead of collecting in money the tax was collected by stamps which were required to be attached to the casks. And then there were other provisions of the law not necessary to refer to, increasing the safeguards so as not only to make the collection more certain but to make the means of evasion far more difficult. But I am persuaded, having had occasion to examine the subject at that time, being on the committee that had charge of such questions, that the increased collection arose quite as much from the change in the mode of collection and from the safeguards thrown around the collection as from the reduction of the tax from $2 to about 70 cents. Of course the tax of $2 a gallon was a great temptation; 70 cents was a great temptation; even 25 cents a gallon would be a great temptation. And unless you make your methods of collection secure you will have frauds upon the Government no matter what tax you may impose.

I do not think therefore the argument deduced from the result of changing the law from $2 a gallon, as we did by the act of 1868, to something like the present amount of 70 cents a gallon, is a legitimate argument or ought to have weight in considering this question arising under this bill which is merely to raise the rate of tax per gallon and to keep the same methods of collection, the same use of stamps, the same safeguards precisely as have been in use since 1868 and which, so far as I am informed or have reason to believe, have been efficient; so that we have had comparatively little illicit distilling done in the country.

The question, therefore, suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] supported as he seems to support it, seems to me hardly to arise; and I think we are perfectly safe in imposing a tax of $1 per gallon if we are satisfied that the interests of the public Treasury require a tax of that amount.

I desire to submit to the committee as part of my remarks a portion of the report of the commission for the reduction of the revenue system in 1866.

Mr. HOSKINS. I rise to oppose the amendment, and only intend to occupy a few moments of the time of the committee. I am opposed to any legislation looking to a change of tax upon the article of whisky unless it is to have the effect of doing the revenues of the country some good; and from my own experience as collector of internal revenue of my district, I believe I have a right to speak upon this question in relation to the probability and possibility of collecting this tax of $1. I know from my own personal experience that it will be just as easy to collect this tax of $1 per gallon upon whisky as it is to collect the tax of 70 cents. The taxes are now paid by stamps and not in gross. These stamps will be purchased and put upon the package precisely the same with a tax of $1 as with a tax of 70 cents a gallon.

The reason why more tax was collected when the rate was 50 cents a gallon than when it was $2 a gallon was not because there was not enough whisky distilled under the latter tax to yield a larger revenue, but because the systems and forms of collection were not properly enforced by the Government. But with the machinery now enforced for the collection of this tax upon whisky it will be just as easy to collect the tax of $1 a gallon as it is to collect the tax of 70 cents per gallon. I say this from my own personal experience in collecting these taxes. The distillers, when they know distinctly what they have got to do, are just as well prepared and willing to come up and pay the tax of $1 as to pay the tax of 70 cents.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. Does not the larger tax lead to surreptitious distilling?

Mr. HOSKINS. In answer to the question of the gentleman from Ohio, I will say that the difference between 70 cents a gallon and $1 a gallon does not hold out to distillers any temptation whatever to go into illicit distillation. And I believe that not only would it be a benefit to the revenues of the country, but that it would inure to the benefit of the distiller himself to fix the tax at $1 per gallon rather than at 80 or 90 cents; and for this reason: When the tax is fixed at $1 per gallon, an increase of 30 cents, the distiller will of course add that to the price of the distilled spirits. But if you increase the tax only 10 cents per gallon, it would be impossible for him to add that tax to the cost of the distilled spirits. This proposition is therefore better for the distiller, it will largely increase the revenue of the country, and the tax can be successfully collected. We shall then get at a fixed basis, and can there remain, and the distillers, the Government, and everybody will be satisfied.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MAYNARD. I withdraw the pro forma amendment which I offered.

Mr. BURCHARD obtained the floor and said: I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee to have read some matters which will be of interest to the House.

Mr. MAYNARD. I hold in my hand, Mr. Chairman, a report made to the Secretary of the Treasury in 1866 by David A. Wells, who held official relations with the Treasury Department at that time—a gentleman of high repute with our friends on the other side of the House—and I ask that those portions of the report which I have marked upon pages 179 and 181, which relate to this subject, be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That distilled spirits ought to contribute a very large proportion of the amount which the necessities of the country require shall be annually raised by internal taxation is, we believe, the almost unanimous sentiment of the whole country. It may, indeed, be considered as an axiom in political economy that there is no article which constitutes a fairer subject for excise and none which can be made to produce so much revenue with so little suffering to the tax-payer. In Great Britain, where the duty has been for the last four years at the very high rate of 10 shillings per imperial gallon, the concurrent testimony is to the effect that of all the methods adopted in that country to raise a revenue this is the one most cheerfully borne and least oppressively felt by the people. In this connection the commission would also refer to the review of the revenue experience of various foreign States in relation to this subject, as given in the opening pages of this report.

In fact, the commission regard the present standard of consumption of distilled spirits for drinking purposes in the United States, which they now estimate at 39,000,000 of proof gallons per annum, as one which no legislation and no augmentation of tax can materially diminish. They believe, furthermore, that there are no people less inclined to regard expense in the gratification of their desires and appetites than the Americans.

Mr. MAYNARD. I now ask the Clerk to read the paragraph at the top of page 181, which is italicized by the author of the report himself.

The Clerk read as follows:

In a revenue, industrial, and moral point of view, it would be expedient to reduce the existing excise of $2 per gallon on distilled spirits, and to substitute therefor a lower rate of $1 per proof gallon.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means for a moment to a statement made by himself, that the present tax of 70 cents per gallon is honestly collected. I apprehend the gentleman is incorrect. I do not think that it is very safe to rely upon mere theory in matters of this kind; reliable information is still better. I have before me a statement from a gentleman whose integrity and high character can be vouched for by many members of this House, the Hon. James W. Gaff, for many years a State senator in my State, and who, I believe, at the head of what is known as the Distillery Association of the United States. He states that under the present rate of taxation it is difficult for the honest manufacturer to carry on his business successfully at a reasonable profit; that frauds are being perpetrated on the revenue in various sections of the country, and that even the present rate of taxation on spirits holds out great temptations to fraud. He states that to preserve the purity and integrity of the officials of the Government from being tempted by the cupidity of illicit manufacturers, greater safeguards are even now required. The association over which he presides insisting on investigation in certain sections, investigation was made, and it was found that there had been frauds to the extent of $700,000 in the single city of New Orleans by distillers; but it was too late to collect the amount, and it was lost to the Government. It is for the purpose of collecting the tax in those regions of the country where corn is not grown and where illicit distillations are going on that we need legislation. Even now corn used for distillation has been removed to remote parts of the country for fraudulent manufacture. At the point of distillation where corn is raised the distiller is taxed on 3.20 gallons of whisky to the bushel of corn; but in the regions of illicit distillation, remote from the corn regions, apparently to avoid frauds, the distillers are taxed only upon 2.45 gallons to the bushel of corn. It is evident, therefore, that even with the present tax of 70 cents per gallon the Government is still losing in consequence of the strong motive offered for illicit distillation, the high premium for fraud.

I believe, sir, that if the tax is increased it will greatly add to the present difficulties—a misfortune far beyond the loss of revenue to the Treasury, and that is the corruption of the revenue officers. It will not be so much a demoralization of the Treasury Department, but a demoralization of the public servants to whom this increased temptation for fraud would be held out.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House debate upon this section was limited to thirty minutes; that time has expired.

Mr. RANDALL. I would ask whether an amendment to place the duty at 85 cents has not already been voted on by the committee and defeated?

The CHAIRMAN. A motion fixing the duty at 85 cents was made, but the Chair understands that it was withdrawn. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNING] offered that proposition, but subsequently withdrew it.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I will modify my amendment and make it 90 cents instead of 85. At the request of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, I put it at 90 cents, and propose to test the sense of the committee upon it.

Mr. DAWES. I want to keep it as near $1 as I can.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for tellers upon my amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. RANDALL and Mr. DAWES were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 63, noes 88.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BANNING. I offer the following amendment: I move to amend the first section of the bill by striking out the whole of the first proviso; that is, by striking out all after the word "repeal" in line 13, namely, the provision putting 15 cents per gallon additional on stock now on hand.

This amendment strikes out—

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted upon this section.

Mr. BANNING. I would be very much obliged to the chairman of the committee if he would hear me for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order; the Committee of the Whole has no power to allow debate after the House has fixed the time for closing it.

Mr. BANNING. I would like to say one word in explanation of my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has no power to extend the time for debate beyond the limit fixed by the House.

Mr. BANNING. This amendment strikes out the 15 cents additional tax proposed on the stock now on hand.

Mr. DAWES. Does the gentleman understand that this amendment would make the tax on the stock on hand $1 instead of 85 cents per gallon?

Mr. PAGE. I desire to move an amendment to come in after the amendment adopted on motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment would not now be in order.

The question was taken upon the amendment moved by Mr. BANNING; and upon a division there were—ayes 59, noes 77; no quorum voting.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BANNING and Mr. DAWES were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 69, noes 88.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. PAGE. I move to amend by adding to the section the following:

And provided further, That nothing in this section shall be construed to increase the tax on brandy manufactured from apples, peaches, or grapes.

I would inquire if debate upon this amendment is in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I desire now to offer, on behalf of the Committee on Ways and Means, an amendment to perfect this first section, to come in at the end of the first proviso. I send it to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That whenever it shall be shown by testimony under oath, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury, that any person liable to pay the increased tax upon domestic distilled spirits by this act imposed had, prior to the 10th day of February, 1875, made a contract for the future delivery of such spirits at a fixed price, which contract was in writing prior to that date, such spirits may be delivered to the contracting party entitled thereto under special permit from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue provided therefor, without previous payment of such additional tax; but the said additional tax shall be a lien thereon, and shall be paid by and collected from the purchaser under such contract before the sale or removal thereof by him, and when demanded by the collector of internal revenue for the district to which the same shall be removed for delivery to the purchaser; and any sale or removal by such purchaser, prior to the payment of such tax, shall subject him and the spirits so sold or removed to all the penalties and processes of law provided in the case of distillers so selling or removing spirits to avoid the payment of tax.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARRERE. I move to amend the first section by striking out the words "date of the passage of this act," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "1st day of April, 1875."

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. ARTHUR. I move to amend the section by adding to it the following:

And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall apply to spirits sold but not delivered, or sold and in process of manufacture, or sold and to be manufactured and delivered, as by contract made and confirmed in good faith on or before the 10th day of February, 1875.

Mr. KASSON. That is all provided for in the amendment just adopted upon my motion.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. ARTHUR; and upon a division there were—ayes 33, noes 71; no quorum voting.

Mr. BANNING. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ARTHUR and Mr. MONROE were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were ayes 31, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BANNING. I move to amend this section by adding the following:

Provided, That no whisky now owned by distillers and in bonded warehouses shall be subject to the increased tax provided in this act.

The amendment was not agreed to upon a division, ayes 26, noes not counted.

Mr. ARCHER. I move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

The motion was not agreed to upon a division—ayes 65, noes 89.

The committee rose informally.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate insisted upon their amendments disagreed to by the House to House bill No. 3912, to reduce and fix the Adjutant-General's Department of the Army, and had agreed to the conference asked by the House upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LOGAN, Mr. SPENCER, and Mr. RANSOM as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

TAX AND TARIFF BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session, and proceeded with the consideration of the special order.

The Clerk read the following:

SEC. 2. That section 3368 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the words "20 cents a pound," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "24 cents a pound." Provided, That the increase of tax herein provided for shall not apply to tobacco on which the tax under existing law shall have been paid when this act takes effect.

Mr. PENDLETON. I move the following as an additional section, to come in after the section just read by the Clerk:

SEC. —. That section 3418 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, repealed, to take effect on and after the 1st day of July, 1875.

Mr. DAWES. I raise the point of order that that is new legislation.

Mr. PENDLETON. I ask to have the section read which I propose to have repealed.

The Clerk read as follows:

There shall be levied, collected, and paid, for and in respect of every bank-check, draft, or order for the payment of money drawn upon any bank, banker, or trust company at sight or on demand, by any person who makes, signs, or issues the same, or for whose use or benefit the same is made, signed, or issued, two cents.

Mr. DAWES. I am opposed to the amendment, but I desire to say to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. PENDLETON] that that particular section of the Revised Statutes is repealed by what is called the "little tariff bill," and a new section has been adopted in its place. The gentleman therefore will not reach his object by the amendment he has proposed.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to reserve a point of order on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has already been raised, and the Chair sustains it. The gentleman offering the amendment can reach his object by proposing an additional section at the end of the bill; but the amendment is not germane to the section which the Committee of the Whole are now considering.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I move to amend by striking out the whole of the pending section. Mr. Chairman, I hope I am loyal to the Government and the Administration. I have labored and voted to cut down expenses and so obviate the necessity of increased taxation. But if, notwithstanding our reductions, there is, by reason of the depressed business of the country, still a necessity for additional revenue, I am willing to vote it; but I ask that in imposing the taxes upon the people you do it somewhat with reference to an equal distribution of the burdens of taxation among the different sections of the country. The Committee of the Whole has already, by a sufficient vote, agreed to a tax of $1 upon whisky. Say what you will, that is a high tax and a heavy burden which must first be paid and largely borne by the West. Now, you are about to impose another heavy tax which will fall almost entirely upon the West and the South; and I protest in behalf of my people against its imposition. While it bears heavily on the tobacco of Ohio and the West, it does not reach Massachusetts and Connecticut tobacco at all. Their tobacco goes into cigars, and is never manufactured into smoking or chewing tobacco, and so not reached by this bill or injured by this tax. But as cigars compete with smoking-tobacco, it will really inure to the benefit of the New England tobacco-growers.

Mr. DAWES. Most of the Connecticut tobacco is called "Connecticut leaf," and is used for wrappers of cigars.

Mr. GUNCKEL. And is not for that very reason affected by the proposed tax.

Mr. DAWES. A portion of it, the poorest portion, goes into cigars; but the best of it is the leaf.

Mr. GUNCKEL. The fact remains, that all of it goes into cigars; and therefore none of it is affected by this particular section. But much of the cheaper tobacco raised in the Western and Southern States is manufactured into smoking and chewing tobacco and therefore will be affected by this provision.

Mr. DAWES. I have an amendment I would like to offer to put 1 cent increase of taxation upon cigars, to correspond with this.

Mr. GUNCKEL. It is somewhat singular that the Committee on Ways and Means did not think of it before and report it in the original bill. Rich men smoke cigars; poor people use the pipe and smoking-tobacco. Was it for this reason the committee discriminated in favor of cigars and against smoking-tobacco; or was it because the former are made of Connecticut tobacco and the latter of western and southern tobacco?

Mr. DAWES. I propose to offer the amendment I have indicated.

Mr. GUNCKEL. And I shall oppose it because it makes worse what was bad enough before. But a word more as to the pending section. I oppose it because it will impose an additional burden upon the poor people who use that particular kind of tobacco, and because its inevitable effect will be to injure the producers and manufacturers of the West.

Mr. DAWES. I do not see that.

Mr. GUNCKEL. If I only had time I could made you see it clearly enough. I trust others who represent similar interests will do so in the time allotted them under the rules. I can only repeat, I believe the proposed tax would be unwise, unjust, and ruinous to the West, and to express the hope that it will be stricken out.

Mr. DAWES. I do not see how this tax helps New England; New England does not smoke the cigars.

Mr. GUNCKEL. No; if she did she would pay more of the tax. But the less manufactured tobacco is used, the more cigars will be smoked and the more Connecticut tobacco used.

Mr. DAWES. The cigars are not made in New England; the manufacturers take your tobacco for the middle of the cigar and make the wrapper of ours.

Mr. GUNCKEL. Some of the best cigars are made entirely from Connecticut tobacco; but, whether partially or wholly, your tobacco is used and so your growers favored.

Mr. DAWES. There is in a cigar four times as much of the Ohio tobacco as there is of the leaf, which is merely used for the wrapper.

Mr. GUNCKEL. That is not so as regards the best cigars.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUCKNER. I move as a substitute for the section the provision which I send to the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That on and after the 1st day of July next there shall be levied and paid a tax on all sales of stocks, bonds, gold and silver bullion, coin, and other securities at the rate of one-tenth of 1 per cent. on the amount of sales thereof; and every person, firm, or corporation engaged in the business of selling stocks, bonds, gold and silver bullion, coin, and other securities, either for their own account or on the account of others, shall keep a true and accurate record thereof under oath that the same is true and correct, to the collector of the district where such business is carried on, on or before the 15th day of each month; and the collector shall thereupon assess and collect a tax of one-tenth of 1 per cent. on the gross amount of such sales. Such test or return shall be made in such manner or form as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. DAWES. I raise the point of order that this amendment is not germane.

Mr. BUCKNER. Then I withdraw it, giving notice that I shall offer it at the end of the bill.

Mr. DAWES. Then it will be in order.

Mr. BUCKNER. I desire to make a few remarks in reference to this tobacco tax, and for that purpose I move to amend by striking out "24" and inserting "16."

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. What has become of the amendment of my colleague, [Mr. GUNCKEL?]

The CHAIRMAN. That is pending. The amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER] is to perfect the section.

Mr. BUCKNER. Mr. Chairman, there is one view of this question of taxation of southern tobacco and western grain that does not seem to have been considered at all by gentlemen of the Committee on Ways and Means or the House, and that is the effect of such legislation upon our exports and indirectly upon the question of the resumption of specie payment. It is with this view I desire to call the attention of the House and the country to the fact that while the exports of the country have been increasing for the last ten or fifteen years or since the conclusion of the war, in every other branch of business I can think of, in reference to exports of alcohol and spirituous liquors, there has been a large diminution since this tax has been imposed upon whisky and tobacco. It is true as to both.

I have before me, Mr. Chairman, a table of exports of the article of spirituous liquors derived from grain from the years, 1868 to 1873 inclusive. It will be found in 1869 that the exports amounted to 47,000 gallons; 23,000 gallons the year afterward; 47,000 gallons in 1871; falling down to 26,000 in 1872; while in 1873 they amounted to 654,365, a large increase. But going back prior to the war, when this was perfectly free—when there was no tax—when every man had a right, without tax and without supervision on the part of the Government officers, to manufacture spirituous liquors, what was the result? In 1858 you had a million of gallons, and in 1861 2,294,000 gallons derived from grain alone.

The same facts appear in reference to manufactured tobacco. I will give you some tables on that subject. In 1858 the exports of manufactured tobacco amounted to $2,400,000; in 1859 to $3,334,000; in 1860 to $3,383,000; in 1870 to $1,593,000; and in 1871 to $2,034,000.

That is the result of your legislation affecting our industries and the products of our labor. It is a tax in effect upon the production of grain in the West and throughout the country. So far from helping by your legislation the labor of the country engaged in raising grain which is afterward put into whisky or the labor of the country employed in producing tobacco, your legislation has so far been directed, as the results show, to oppress that labor. That is shown in the diminishing amount of exports every year.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state, while the gentleman's statistics are all correct, the cause must be sought somewhere else, inasmuch as the present system gives a drawback of all this tax to everybody who will export these articles. So the exporter has the privilege of raising his tobacco and producing his whisky without paying this tax. If he pays the tax and exports the article, he has that tax all back again. So, then, while the gentleman's statistics may all be true, the cause is not to be found where he puts it. Of course there is something that causes all this.

Mr. RANDALL. What is it?

Mr. DAWES. The statistics apply to years before this remedy was applied—before we had a drawback. I think we have done everything in reference to these products to stimulate their exportation. We have taken away all the impediments, we have removed all restrictions, so that a man may raise for exportation all of these products just as easily as if the tax were not in existence. We have tried to stimulate these productions for exportation, just as we propose when we come to the sugar clause to move an amendment the object of which will be to bring sugar in here to refine it and send it abroad as part of our exports.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. My real object is to support the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GUNCKEL] to strike out the section. I do not believe the American Congress, of whatever political party it may be, want to do gross injustice to any portion of the American people. We have all a common interest and a common destiny, and to oppress one section is virtually to injure the credit of all. I am sure if the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means or the Commissioner of Internal Revenue knew the effect this tax will have upon the tobacco interest they would not ask for its imposition. Why, sir, the tax of 20 cents a pound, the Commissioner informs us, brings in more revenue than when the tax was 32 cents a pound. He says, too, that this interest is in a most prosperous condition.

But, sir, how does this law affect it? Our people buy the tobacco one year in the leaf to be manufactured the next year. Consequently they want to get the law as stable as possible before they will buy. No man will wish to buy tobacco in the leaf one year when it may be that next year he will have to pay 25 per cent. more tax upon it.

The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means is always ready to protect the interests of New England, not because they are the interests of New England, but because he understands those interests better perhaps than the interests of other sections. Therefore he says that cargoes bound for this country and goods in bond should not be liable to the additional duty imposed by this bill. Why? Because they have been bought with a view to the existing tariff of the country, and therefore ought not to be compelled to pay any higher rate of duty. Now, these manufacturers in the South and throughout the country have bought leaf tobacco to be manufactured next year upon the present rate of tax upon that article, which is now 20 cents a pound, and to impose upon them any additional rate of taxation is unjust. Indeed to increase the rate of taxation under the circumstances would be most oppressive to the manufacturers of tobacco.

I ask the Clerk to read a letter from a gentleman in my State, who is at the head of the American Tobacco Exchange, to show what effect this law will have on the poor people of the South. Our factories will be closed, and our white and colored laborers will be turned out in the midst of winter, with no other means of livelihood to resort to.

The Clerk read as follows:

RICHMOND, February 12, 1875.

DEAR SIR: I see the Committee on Ways and Means have reported an additional tax of 4 cents per pound on manufactured tobacco. As your friendly interest in this important part of the business of our State is well known, I address you in its behalf, requesting you to oppose its passage, or at least strive to have the bill so amended as to take effect on the 1st of July next. If this bill takes immediate effect, it will paralyze the manufacturing interest for some time to come and throw thousands out of employment.

Yours, truly,

S. H. FRAZIER.

Hon. JOHN T. HARRIS,
Washington, District of Columbia.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I want to say one word further.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I wish only to say that if the manufacturers were allowed to work up the stock on hand under existing rates this change in the law would not be so oppressive.

Mr. BUCKNER. I withdraw my amendment that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] may renew it.

Mr. BECK. I renew the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to say to the committee that in my opinion this is another blunder as a revenue measure. I say so for this reason: Two years ago, when the Committee on Ways and Means were considering the propriety of making the tax on tobacco uniform, the rate upon this article being then 32 cents a pound for all chewing-tobacco and 16 cents a pound for certain grades of smoking-tobacco, three-fourths, perhaps seven-eighths, of our revenue from that article was derived from the 32-cent tax; and it was because gentlemen who were paying 32 cents charged and proved that there was a great deal of swindling going on under the 16-cent tax that the committee determined that it ought to be made uniform. Twenty-four cents was the amount we then thought we could afford to reduce it to. But the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and all of his Bureau officers came before the committee and insisted we should lose by reducing the tax to a uniform rate of 24 cents a pound at least $4,000,000; and that if we attempted to reduce it to a uniform rate of 20 cents we would lose $3,000,000. The committee hesitated a long time in view of the information thus given as to whether we could afford to make the tax less. But a uniform rate of 20 cents was finally adopted, many gentlemen, contending then as they do now properly, that the reduction from 32 cents to 20 cents would not involve a loss of revenue, but that we would get as much or more in a very few years at that rate than we had been receiving at the higher rate of 32 cents, because of the frauds and evasions of the law.

What was the result? When we were collecting 32 cents on tobacco, a small fraction only paying 16 cents, in the year 1870 we received $31,350,000 of tax; in 1871 we received $33,578,000; and in 1873, $33,736,000. All the estimates made by the Department assumed that we would receive a sum not exceeding $25,000,000 at the 20-cent rate; and the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means stated on the floor, in a speech to be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, if my memory is correct, that from all the information before him he believed there would be a positive loss of $8,000,000; and the committee did not dare to recommend a reduction lower than 24 cents.

The tax was reduced to 20 cents; and next year, 1873, the receipts were $34,386,000; and last year they were $33,242,000. Instead of a loss of $8,000,000 by the reduction of the rate of taxation, the very next year gave us more than we had received at a tax of 32 cents; and last year the amount was almost as high as had ever been collected before.

The lesson taught is this: The reduction of taxation to the revenue point is the true interest of the Government. If you put the rate back to 24 cents, you are thereby increasing the chances of fraud, and your revenue will be less than at 20 cents. You would get more, in my judgment, at 16 cents than at 20 cents; because the inducements to fraud would be that much diminished. And if the experiment is tried of raising the tax on whisky, on which I suppose we are now about to impose a tax of $1, I am satisfied that we will get less revenue from that than we do now.

Even the President in his message only ventured to recommend an addition of 10 cents. The Secretary of the Treasury never recommended a greater addition than 10 cents. It is within the knowledge of every man of experience in that matter in the country that frauds are being perpetrated now because the taxation on whisky is so high. We ought to have regard to the lesson taught us in 1863, when we put the rate on whisky down from $2 to 50 cents, and the revenue was increased from $13,000,000 to $33,000,000 in a single year—the same Government officials managing the business, the same men carrying it on, the increase being simply because the manufacturers could not afford to buy the Government officials at the low rate and did at the high one, and they will always do it under the like circumstances.

Mr. DAWES. I oppose the amendment.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. I rise to oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has been spoken to and opposed; the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] having risen to oppose the amendment and then resumed his seat.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. I move to strike out the last word of the pending amendment. I am very glad the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means has learned the important fact that the consumer pays the duty. That has not always been held as a theory with the gentlemen who advocate a protective system in this country. It is true, Mr. Chairman, that the consumers pay the duty, and it seems to be the purpose of the Forty-third Congress that duties shall be imposed upon the articles consumed by the poor and taken from articles consumed by the rich. Sir, we had a specimen of this in the "little tariff bill" passed by this Congress a few days since, in which the duties upon the common silks, those composed in part of silk and in part of cotton, were increased from 50 to 60 per cent. ad valorem, not in the interest of revenue, but in the interest of a few manufacturers of mixed goods in the Eastern States, and this, too, notwithstanding the fact that this class of goods, being cheap, has entered into common use among the poorer people and become with them almost a necessity. It is noticeable that upon rich and expensive silks worn by wealthy people no increase of tax was suggested.

In the same bill the duty upon still-wines was fixed at the uniform rate of 40 cents per gallon, thereby increasing the duty from 25 to 40 cents on cheap wines of daily use among our people, and regarded as a necessity by one class of them, while it decreased from $1 to 40 cents the duty on expensive wines found only on the tables of the rich.

To-day we are called upon to follow in the line of these precedents and to tax the poor man's tobacco at such rate as to increase the price from about 10 cents, the cost of production and manufacture, to from 40 to 50 cents per pound. We are told that you must not tax the poor man's tea and coffee because they are necessities of life. I do not say that I favor such a tax, but I do say that tea and coffee are no more necessities of life than tobacco. Both are stimulants, and by the customs and habits of the people have alike become necessities to them.

Gentlemen may moralize on this as they will, but the fact remains, and the burden of the increased price is none the less onerous.

Mr. WILBER. Does the gentleman mean to include whisky as well as tobacco in his statement?

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. Yes; I will include whisky if the gentleman desires. The poor man's glass of whisky is as much to him, conduces as much to his comfort and oftentimes to his health, and is as much one of the necessities of his life as is the gentleman's champagne at dinner, of which he would not like to be deprived.

Mr. WILBER. I want the gentleman to understand that I do not drink champagne at dinner nor do I need whisky as one of the necessities of life.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. The Secretary of the Treasury's opinion has been quoted here. I want to say that the Secretary of the Treasury never advocated any such tax as is imposed by this bill on whisky and tobacco, and has said publicly and privately that he does not favor it and does not believe as much revenue will be received under the proposed bill as is received under the existing law.

Mr. Chairman, as an expression of the feelings and views of persons engaged in the tobacco business, I beg leave to insert the protests of sundry of my constituents as a part of my remarks.

The papers are as follows:

The Cincinnati Tobacco Board of Trade, at a meeting held February 8, 1875, unanimously passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That it is the belief of this board that any advance of the existing tax on tobacco would prove most injurious to all branches of the tobacco trade, and particularly to those sections of the country especially interested in its growth, manufacture, or sale.

Resolved, That we deem it unjust to the consumers and producers of tobacco to add any additional burden upon an article already so heavily taxed, and that as a measure to increase the revenue we believe that it would most signally fail of its purpose.

Resolved, That this board, while representing the tobacco trade of Cincinnati, does also hold close and intimate relations with the tobacco interests of our sister States, and we do most respectfully request that all members of Congress, in sympathy with our interests, will use their utmost efforts to prevent any advance in the rate of tax on tobacco.

B. F. POWER, President.

W. J. DUNHAM, Secretary

Protest against an advance of the tax upon tobacco by the Western Tobacco Cutters' Association.

CINCINNATI, February 6, 1875.

SIR: I observe with great regret by the Washington dispatches of last night, that in order to supply the deficiency of revenue, your committee have under consideration a proposition to place an additional tax of 4 cents per pound upon tobacco.

As president of the Western Tobacco Cutters' Association, I would very respectfully but earnestly endeavor to represent to your honorable committee that such an advance of the tobacco tax would bear very heavily and injuriously upon the interests which I have the honor to represent, and that the additional burden would be most seriously felt by the great multitude of the consumers of cheap tobacco.

Our association embraces all of the States west of Pennsylvania, and pays a very large proportion of the revenue raised from tobacco. The present tax, for at least one-half of our entire product, averages one year with another 400 per cent. on the value of the material used, and upon one-third of the balance of our manufacture it amounts to 200 per cent. This great quantity is consumed almost entirely by farmers, laborers, and mechanics, and must be classed among their indispensable wants.

The tobacco for which they now pay 40 cents per pound would be sold to them if there was no tax at an average price of 10 to 12 cents per pound; the additional cost being the 20-cent tax, the expense of packing in accordance with the requirements of law, and the interest and profit required by the trade for the tax, which is paid in advance.

That a large portion of the consumers of tobacco in this country are now keenly feeling the weight of this enormous tax upon their daily supplies must I think be apparent to you by the powerful influences which have heretofore been brought to bear upon your committee and the House, leading them to pass a bill abolishing all tax upon tobacco for a large class of consumers, and a very recent vote in the House upon this same measure indicates that the danger in that direction is still very great. Could there be any more positive evidence that, practically, the maximum tax upon tobacco had at least been reached.

It is the conviction of the trade generally that any increase of the tax would fail ultimately in giving increased revenue, and we trust that the investigations and experience of your committee will lead you to reject so dangerous an expedient.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

T. R. SPENCE.

President Western Tobacco Cutters' Association.

Hon. H. L. DAWES,

Chairman Committee on Ways and Means,

Washington, D. C.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

We, the undersigned, manufacturers and dealers in tobacco of Cincinnati, Ohio, would very respectfully but earnestly petition your honorable bodies to make no advance on the existing rate of tax upon tobacco, for the following among many other reasons which could be given:

First. Tobacco, on the average value of the entire amount which enters into consumption, is now more heavily taxed than any other article, either of domestic or foreign production.

Second. The great preponderance of this tax falls upon the laboring portion of the community, the consumers of cheap tobacco, who not only pay the tax but about 50 per cent. additional caused by the expense of packing in accordance with the requirements of law, and the interest upon the tax which is paid in advance.

Third. It must be apparent, from the repeated action of the House of Representatives to abolish all tax upon leaf-tobacco for consumption, that under the general reduction of wages which now exists, a large class of consumers severely feel the burden of this great tax upon an article of home production and which is indispensable to them.

Fourth. The revenue now obtained from tobacco far exceeds in amount that which was contemplated by Government during the highest days of taxation, when the currency and all business was greatly inflated; and when it is remembered that every reduction of this tax resulted in increased revenue, is it not fair to believe that in view of all these evils and difficulties, an advance of the tax now would fail to enrich the Treasury?

Barber & Stout, B. G. Stall & Co., R. Luthy & Co., F. S. Burdall & Co., Rissel & Helmeckamp, Jacobs & Mescher, J. M. Shaw, W. A. Shaw & Bro., A. B. & A. R. Clark & Co., J. M. Fisher & Co., F. H. Andersen & Co.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WHITEHEAD. I rise for the purpose of indorsing what was said by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GUNCKEL] in regard to the duty on cigars, and to explain what seems to be a misunderstanding on the part of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means. Now, as I understand the dispute between the gentleman from Ohio and the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, it is whether the manufacturers of cigars under the present tax had any advantage over the manufacturers of chewing and smoking tobacco. Now, I think that I can in a few minutes satisfy the chairman of the committee himself that that is the case. The tobacco made in his State and in Connecticut, the best is used solely as wrappers for cigars and the inferior for filling of the cigars. The tobacco which was made into chewing-tobacco, and which took the premium at the exposition in Vienna, was raised and can be raised nowhere else than in Virginia. You cannot import this kind of tobacco, because it is raised nowhere else. But cigar tobacco is raised in the West Indies of a better quality than you can raise, and would be imported by the million pounds but for the 35 cents per pound duty which you put upon the leaf which you would manufacture into cigars. You have the protection of a tariff on your manufacture of $2.50 per pound and 25 per cent. ad valorem on cigars imported and the protection of the tariff on the raw material which is manufactured into your cigars. We have not that benefit and cannot get it on either chewing or smoking tobacco. Therefore the cigar manufacturer and the raiser of the cigar tobacco in the United States are protected by the tariff and are upheld by this committee in making money, while the burden of the tax comes solely upon us.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BANNING. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] to strike out "24" and insert "16" as the tax upon tobacco.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to move an amendment to perfect this section. It is, mutatis mutandis, the same that I offered, and which was adopted, in regard to whisky.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That whenever it shall be shown by testimony under oath, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury, that any person liable to pay the increased tax by this act imposed had, prior to the 10th day of February, 1875, made a contract for the future delivery of such tobacco at a fixed price, which contract was in writing prior to that date, such tobacco may be delivered to the contracting party entitled thereto under special permit from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue provided therefor, without previous payment of such additional tax; but the said additional tax shall be a lien thereon, and shall be paid by and collected from the purchaser under such contract before the sale or removal thereof by him, and when demanded by the collector of internal revenue for the district to which the same shall be removed for delivery to the purchaser; and any sale or removal by such purchaser, prior to the payment of such tax, shall subject him and the tobacco so sold or removed to all the penalties and processes of law provided in the case of manufacturers of tobacco so selling or removing tobacco to avoid the payment of tax.

Mr. BUCKNER. I desire to amend the amendment by striking out the words "in writing."

Mr. KASSON. All contracts, to be valid, must be in writing of course, except where money has been paid. We cannot go beyond that and include verbal contracts without subjecting the Government to great frauds.

Mr. BUCKNER. I moved the amendment for the purpose of stating the reason why there has been such a falling off in the exports of manufactured tobacco and of grain manufactured into whisky. So far as the article of manufactured tobacco is concerned, I understand that since the tax upon tobacco was increased a competing rival has arisen in Canada. Prior to that time there was not a pound of tobacco, so to speak, manufactured in the Canadas. Now there is quite as much manufactured in Canada as in any State of this Union, except it be in Virginia, and more than is manufactured in Missouri or Kentucky. That is the reason why the manufacturers there come in competition with us, and not the reason given by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.]

By adding to the tax on whisky the manufacture of whisky is made a monopoly in the large cities and towns. Instead of whisky being manufactured out of the grain where it is worth only 15 or 20 cents a bushel, it is manufactured now where it costs 40, 50, or 75 cents a bushel. Before this tax whisky was manufactured in the western country, not only in Peoria, Chicago, Cincinnati, and Saint Louis, but in the country where the grain itself is raised. If the manufacture of whisky is left unfettered and unshackled, I think the solution of this question of transportation as to grain will be developed by it. Corn, wheat, and other articles raised in the West will not bear the cost of transportation; but if you enable the farmer to manufacture it into alcohol, he can manufacture it cheaper and therefore come in competition with the manufacture elsewhere. But now the grain is shipped from here to Europe and there converted into alcohol, instead of our being left to supply the markets of the world with this important article used in almost all departments of trade.

The question was then taken upon the amendment moved by Mr. KASSON; and it was adopted.

The question was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. BECK to reduce the tax on tobacco from 24 to 16 cents per pound; and it was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the motion to strike out the section as amended.

Mr. DAWES. Before that motion is put, I desire to move to insert after the word "pound" in line 5, the following:

And that section 3394 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the word "five" wherever it occurs therein and inserting instead thereof the word "six."

Also, amend line 6 by inserting after the word "tobacco" the words "cigars or cigarettes." The object of these amendments is to increase the tax upon cigars from 5 cents to 6 cents, so as to make it correspond with the increased tax upon tobacco.

Mr. BECK. Let me ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] whether a proper method of making the tax on cigars correspond to the increased tax on tobacco would not be by providing a 20 per cent. addition to the tax now collected on cigars?

Mr. DAWES. This tax of 1 cent is precisely the same proportion; but this tax is specific while the other would be ad valorem.

Mr. BECK. Whether the tax proposed by the gentleman is equivalent to a 20 per cent. addition depends upon the value of the cigars. The addition of 20 per cent. would, I think, be a better mode of reaching an equivalent.

Mr. DAWES. It would be the better way if there is no objection from the danger of fraudulent invoices and undervaluations.

Mr. BECK. My suggestion is that allowing the present machinery of the law to stand, we simply add 20 per cent. to the existing tax, which is specific, not ad valorem.

Mr. DAWES. I now understand the gentleman, and I think he is correct in his suggestion. I withdraw my amendment for a moment until I can modify it.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, it must be conceded by every one that tobacco is now one of the most highly taxed articles that we have in this country. We are now taxing the poor man's tobacco 200 or 300 per cent.; and we are taxing the cheap tobacco at just as high a rate as we tax costly tobacco. It is now proposed to add to the tax on the poor man's tobacco just as much as we put upon the rich man's tobacco.

The poor people of this country generally use tobacco. I undertake to say that nine-tenths of all the negroes in the South use tobacco. It is also very extensively used by our people throughout the West. It is proposed by this bill to raise from this tobacco a tax of $4,200,000, nine-tenths of which will be collected upon the tobacco used by the poor people of the country.

Now, is it absolutely necessary to impose this taxation? Is there no other means of finding money to support the national Treasury? I have an amendment which I propose to offer to this bill, to levy a tax of 2½ per cent. on all incomes over $2,000. I have a dispatch from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue stating that such a tax will yield $13,000,000, and I am very glad to be assured that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means is ready to vote to insert such a tax in this bill.

Mr. NEGLEY. I can assure my friend that a great many gentlemen here are not prepared so to vote.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I trust that before we tax the tobacco of the poor negroes of the South, and the other poor people all over the country, we shall put a tax upon the great fortunes of the country which are yielding vast incomes to those who live in that favored portion of the country from which the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means comes.

Mr. NEGLEY. This is the highest type of agrarianism.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. GUNCKEL to strike out the pending section, it was not agreed to; there being—ayes 57, noes 77.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I move to amend the pending section by adding the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That the increased tax herein provided shall not apply to tobacco purchased from the planter before the passage of this act.

Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is to place the manufacturer of tobacco upon precisely the same footing with purchasers of goods under our tariff legislation. For instance, this bill provides in the last section that this increase of tariff shall not apply to goods shipped from foreign countries and destined for this country, nor to goods in the warehouses in this country. The object of this provision is to avoid taxing men who bought goods under existing rates of value, because it would do them injustice. Now, by the same rule, the buyers of tobacco—men who have bought tobacco in the leaf to be manufactured and sold—have the same right to ask the protection of the American Congress. They should not be taxed 4 cents a pound, which is 25 per cent. and in some cases 50 per cent. of the value of the tobacco, upon tobacco bought under existing laws and which they cannot resell until it is manufactured. These men should have the right to manufacture and sell this tobacco unaffected by this taxation. If they buy tobacco after the passage of this act, they of course buy it with the knowledge of this legislation and they cannot then complain of the tax. But pass this section in its present form, and I warn gentlemen on the other side that the class of people whom they regard as worthy of the highest consideration, and whom none of us desire to treat with injustice, will be turned out of doors and many of them will wander through the country suffering for the necessities of life; because this bill will break up our manufacturers and consequently all their employes must be thrown out of employment.

Mr. DAWES. I cannot see that there will be any such effect, because every manufacturer gets back the additional tax when he sells the manufactured tobacco.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Do not your men who buy goods in Europe and import them to this country to be sold get the benefit of the additional tariff duty?

Mr. DAWES. But I cannot see how this legislation is going to break up the manufacturers of tobacco.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I ask the gentleman again whether the men who buy goods in Europe and import them into this country are not compelled to pay a tariff duty before they put them on the market, and after paying that duty do they not add it to the price of the goods?

Mr. DAWES. But they buy in foreign markets unaffected by this.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. That makes no difference.

Mr. DAWES. It makes a great deal of difference.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. O, no; the cases are analogous. You protect your own and oppress ours under exactly the same circumstances. If you relieve one, relief also ought to be granted to the other.

Mr. DAWES. I do not see how we are to break up these manufacturers of tobacco by this measure.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. The facts are precisely as I have stated them.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 47, nays 63; no quorum voting.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, and Mr. EAMES were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 77, noes 82.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

In line 5, section 2, after the word "pound" insert the following words:

That section 3394 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the word "five" wherever it occurs therein and inserting in lieu thereof the word "six," and by striking out the word "sixty" and inserting "seventy-five."

That is made after consultation with the gentleman from Kentucky, to meet the case.

Mr. GUNCKEL. One word on that amendment. Connecticut tobacco is worth about 50 cents a pound, while Ohio tobacco is worth only about 10 cents a pound. Therefore to tax Connecticut tobacco the same as Ohio tobacco would unfairly increase the tax on cheap cigars. This, then, is still another burden imposed upon the poor people of the country.

Mr. DAWES. There never was so great a mistake in the world. My friend has never, it seems to me, lived within fifty miles of where cigars are made. Does he not know there are five times as much of his Ohio tobacco in the common cigars as of Connecticut leaf? There is a little spot of a few acres in Massachusetts and in Connecticut where enough leaf-tobacco is raised to wrap all the cigars made in this country, and all the rest of those cigars come from the gentleman's quarter and from other quarters of the country. Therefore whatever is protected in favor of the cigar brings five times as much to his section compared with this small interest in Connecticut and Massachusetts.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I did not happen to think of Connecticut and Massachusetts in the matter at all. That never occurred to me. I do not belong to that class, when I am here as an American Representative, always trying to find the lines of my district. I have been in the committee-room of the Ways and Means nearly five years putting taxes upon this whole country and taking them off from this whole country, and there is not an interest in my district that has not suffered when taxes have been put on as much as any other and been relieved as slowly and as reluctantly by the Committee on Ways and Means. I am not here trying to find out what little petty thing is raised or produced in my district so that I can stick only to that. When I come to that I will take my hat and go to Massachusetts and ask the people of this country to despise the Representative who can take no broader view of duty here than that.

Mr. STORM. I should like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts how it is about the little mine of emery ore in his district?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I am glad, Mr. Chairman, to be informed of what I have long since believed to be the truth, that while the gentleman was engaged in his committee-room he did not think of Massachusetts and Connecticut when taxes were to be levied.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I rise to a question of order. I do not understand how the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee got my time. I was on the floor, and he took it from me and made a speech.

Mr. DAWES. I will tell the gentleman how I got the floor. I offered my amendment, and while on the floor he jumped into my speech, when the floor was mine.

Mr. GUNCKEL. As the gentleman has made an attack upon me I want some time to answer him. It is not considered fair in my country to attack a man and then give him no time for reply.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I have the floor now, and I want it understood that this colloquy is not to come out of my time, although I must say I find that five minutes in this committee is longer than ten minutes in the House the other day; and I say that without any reflection on the Chair.

I am glad to find that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] admits that when he seeks to raise revenue he does not take into consideration Massachusetts and Connecticut, but looks to other sections of the country.

I do remember that some five or six years ago, just before the time he refers to, the gentleman remembered Massachusetts enough to take off $32,000,000 of taxation from that section of the country, while he increased the taxation in my section. These are facts. And when the gentleman says, as he has just said, that he does not look after his own district, perhaps he does not require to do so in this House, for he always has persons to take care of it in the committee-room and keep the hand of the Government off it.

And what is it that is now attempted? I characterize it now, after listening to these discussions all these days, as being one of the most unfair pieces of legislation I ever read or heard of. You do lay the heavy hand of the Government on the producers, on the class of people who are least able to bear it. That is the effect of this legislation, as the gentleman himself admits. This bill from beginning to end, it seems to me, has been based on this principle. It seeks in every part of it to add to the burdens elsewhere which the gentleman forgets to lay on his own section, and then he gravely tells us that he never looks after the lines of his district. The lines of the gentleman's district recently have, fortunately or unfortunately for the country, been extended. The lines of my district have been practically blotted out. But here, though I am in the last days of my service in this House, I do insist that the legislation in which you are now engaged, in which you are levying burdens on certain sections of the country more than upon others, is unfair.

The tax on incomes is the truthful, honest, and fair way of getting additional revenue. By taxing incomes the gentleman from Massachusetts will in his own State alone raise enough to restore all the loss of revenue he complains of. The restoration of that tax would give us $32,000,000, assuming that the gentleman's constituents have not grown richer since, as probably they have done, by the interest they have charged my constituents for loaning them some of their money. The amount that might be raised from incomes I believe would be much larger than it was formerly.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I am utterly unable to see the necessity for stimulating sectional jealousy in this matter. When the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GUNCKEL] spoke he showed me there was apparently an inequality in this, that the tax proposed by section 2 did not bear so heavily upon my own section as upon others. The region that raises a very fine quality of tobacco for wrappers is partly embraced within my own district, and I have not made the slightest objection to anything any reasonable man may conceive to be proper in equalizing the tax. There has now been put in here an addition of 20 per cent. to the tax on cigars. All right. But I think there ought also to be the proviso that this shall not affect stocks purchased previous to February 10, as is provided with reference to ordinary chewing and smoking tobacco in the other part of the section.

I think it right to add this to the tax on cigars if you make the addition of 25 per cent. to the tax on tobacco. And if you find that New England has got any special advantage over any other section,

I say take it away. You may vote us down if you please. We are only a small portion of the country. But we are not paupers, we are not beggars.

I will have something more to say concerning apparently sectional interests under the fifth section when the committee reaches that point. I will only say further now that I have an infinite and unutterable contempt for this sectionalism. Put on the tax the best you know how, on all sections of the country fairly, and I will vote for your bill.

Mr. WHITEHEAD. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 2, lines 3 and 4, strike out the words "by striking out the words 20 cents a pound and inserting in lieu thereof the words 24 cents," and insert "so that on all cigars paying $5 a thousand internal-revenue tax there shall be paid a tax of $10 per thousand."

Mr. WHITEHEAD. I do not desire to detain the committee, and shall only say a word or two. The tax of \$5 per thousand on cigars is on the finest cigars, and the amount of tax raised on cigars, according to the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, was \$9,333,000. That was at the rate of $\frac{1}{4}$ a cent per cigar. Make the tax 1 cent per cigar, and you will get from the consumer an addition of \$9,333,000 revenue. You may thus strike out the increase of the tax on tobacco to 24 cents a pound, and have \$5,200,000 of surplus revenue to apply where you choose. And in that case it would be the rich men and not the poor man who would pay the tax.

Mr. MYERS. In answer to the gentleman who has just taken his seat let me say that Congress years ago set the seal of its disapproval upon the system of a sliding scale of taxation on cigars such as he now proposes. In 1868 at my own instance, against the opinions of some gentlemen who are still on this floor and against the recommendation of the Internal Revenue Department, we succeeded in fixing a uniform tax on cigars. The sliding scale providing a higher tax for the dearer class of cigars and a lower one for the poorer was found to promote frauds, tempting the maker to undervalue and the inspector to aid in the wrong. We then fixed the tax at a uniform rate of $5 per thousand, and contrary to the predictions of its opponents the result was that the next year cigars yielded one and a half million dollars more than they had done under the sliding scale, the receipts increasing yearly since, and the vexations and troubles arising from attempted frauds in this respect have almost ceased.

The next year I tried to get a uniform tax on tobacco, but the recommendation of the Internal Revenue Department was against it and so we continued with two rates on tobacco until at last the Bureau yielded, the House took a strong stand on the question, and in 1872 we placed a uniform tax of 20 cents a pound on all kinds of tobacco, which has given general satisfaction and is producing a large revenue. While the bill of the committee retains the uniform tax, it proposes 4 cents a pound increase on tobacco, and now 1 cent more a hundred is to follow on cigars. What I fear is to disturb this rate so recently fixed for tobacco. The producers have just become used to it and this addition may not stimulate so much production. If it does not, then the laborers of the tobacco section will be the losers and the Treasury not the gainer. The five-dollar tax on cigars has been so satisfactory to the Government and people I dislike to disturb it. We must have additional revenue; and I am anxious to perfect this bill for that purpose and shall sustain it wherever I can, but we should so arrange a bill for the raising of this additional revenue as to give a new stimulus to the industries of the country. This cannot be done more effectually than by the restoration of the 10 per cent. duties which were illogically taken off in 1872. The Committee on Ways and Means did not think of the tax on tobacco and cigars originally, but afterward they proposed to include them. I hope this increase may not be pressed, but at least let us not retrograde by returning to the sliding scale on cigars or tobacco. Taxes should be uniform wherever possible. In this way we shall get more money in the Treasury and frauds upon the revenue will be less likely to occur.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. WHITEHEAD and on a division there were, ayes 46, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I now hope that we shall take a vote upon my amendment.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I offer the following amendment to come in after section 2 of the bill:

That farmers who produce less than 500 pounds of leaf-tobacco shall have the right to sell to their employes or others upon the place where it is grown in quantities less than 5 pounds, free of any tax.

I will state that the tax now on tobacco is very oppressive to many of the farmers in my section of the country and all over the country. There are many farmers who live from fifty to one hundred miles from any licensed dealers and no farmer under the law now can sell to any but a licensed dealer. They are not allowed to pay it to their hired men. Now, I ask that the law may be so arranged that farmers may sell to their employes a quantity of tobacco less than 5 pounds without tax. I yield the remainder of my five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SOUTHARD.]

Mr. SOUTHARD. I am opposed to the whole bill with the single exception of the third section, which relates to the repeal of the stamp tax on matches. This increase of taxation means continued increase of expenditures, when the people are demanding, and have a right to demand, retrenchment—a cessation of the extravagance and profligacy that have prevailed for the past few years. The gentleman from Ohio, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, in his remarks yesterday stated that—

We are bound in honor to do one of two things, either to increase the amount of revenues by additional taxation sufficient to raise some $20,000,000 additional revenue, or refuse to pass the river and harbor bill altogether and stop work on all our public buildings.

I do not agree with the gentleman. There are other sources of retrenchment besides the river and harbor bill. The sundry civil bill and the Army and other bills afford opportunity for the pruning-knife. What necessity in time of profound peace for the expenditure of over forty millions a year, for the War Department? This item is increasing year by year although professions of retrenchment have been held out to the people at each recurring election for the past series of years. Sir, I deny the necessity of such large war expenditures. For the year 1871 this item of expenditure amounted to thirty-five millions, in 1872 to a like sum, and in 1873 to forty-six millions, and in 1874 to forty-two millions, (Finance Report for 1874, page 16.) The estimate for 1876 is thirty-eight millions, yet I venture the prediction that the actual expenditure will amount to forty-odd millions. The estimate for 1874 was thirty-six millions, (Finance Report of 1872, page 8,) while the actual expenditure amounted to forty-two millions. (Finance Report of 1874, page 16.) So will it be for the ensuing fiscal year.

Baron von Schwarz-Senborn recently said:

There was an old European general by the name of Montecuculi who said that if you are preparing for war and wish to become victors you must have three necessary things—first, money; secondly, more money; thirdly, much more money.

This Administration and that side of the House seem to have taken up this philosophy, and in order to carry on the war in the South and perpetuate their party power demand money, more money, much more money, from an overburdened and tax-ridden people.

Mr. GARFIELD. What was that last statement of my colleague?

Mr. SOUTHWARD. The estimate is $38,000,000 for the next ensuing year, and yet I dare say the actual appropriations will be $40,000,000. The estimate for 1874 was $36,000,000, and yet the actual expenditures were $42,000,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman is entirely mistaken.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. CESSNA. I object to the withdrawal.

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order to oppose the amendment.

Mr. COX. I rise to oppose the amendment then. This amendment is in favor of the farmers of the country. Members of the House do not seem to take quite as much interest in the farmers as they did before the last election. There was a great deal of talk in favor of the farmers then; and as I represent a city rus in urbe, and as I moved yesterday to tax champagne, and being, like the gentleman from Massachusetts, illimitable as a Representative, I propose to say something in favor of the farmers. And I show it in this way: When the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WARD] came here and growled about our not putting an income tax upon the rich men of the East—

Mr. FORT. I want to introduce it now in a few minutes.

Mr. COX. Did you get up to say that? When the gentleman from Illinois a moment ago growled about our not putting the income tax upon the people, believing that it would fall especially upon the eastern section of the country, I asked him why he and his party friends for the last ten years have been sitting under this burden of protective tariff legislation with scarcely a whimper from them.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I was not here.

Mr. COX. Gentlemen know that the farming interest produces over $3,000,000,000 worth of productions annually—twelve-thirteenth of all the productions of this country. I could give you a list of the articles upon which you have imposed so high a tax that it becomes a burden upon the agricultural people of this country. Yet you are all the time seeking to place new burdens upon that interest. The farmer might well make a reduction of the price of his pork per hundred pounds, and of other things, provided he did not have to buy everything except his food under the burdens of taxation which you have imposed upon him with your abominable protective system. He cannot go to town and buy a pair of shoes for his wife without putting upon her feet the value of two loads of potatoes. If he gets a dress for his wife, fifteen acres of corn will hardly pay for it under your scoundrelly Pennsylvania system of protection. I can scarcely think of anything connected with our manufactures, either hosiery, blankets, or anything made of copper or iron or woolen or cotton goods, on which the farmer does not have to pay a tax of from 60 to 160 per cent. of its value by this insidious mode of taxation.

In the past eight years by our peculiar system of paying the customs duties in gold we have drawn from the people millions and millions of money. If you will only look at our importations, and consider that we have not the currency of the world, and of commerce, that our taxes are paid in gold and silver, and that we have to buy the gold in market on an average of 15 per cent. premium during the last eighteen years, you will see that there has been at least $1,413,000,000 of money robbed from the people by your peculiar system of legislation.

Now, I am a friend of the farmer. Although I do live in the city, I cannot forget my old relations and associations. Now, to come back to the amendment of my friend from Georgia, [Mr. YOUNG,] which I thought in the first instance I would oppose; I cannot in my heart do it, as it is in the interest of the farmer. And although I rose to talk against his amendment, I think if I had five minutes more I could straighten it all out for him.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. YOUNG] to permit producers of less than 500 pounds of tobacco to sell on the place where it is produced quantities of five pounds or less to their employes and others.

Mr. DAWES. You might just as well say that there shall be no tax levied on tobacco.

The question was taken upon the amendment; and upon a division there were—ayes 51, noes 75.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia, called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia, and Mr. DAWES were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were ayes 46, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I move to amend by adding to the second section the following:

Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not take effect until the 1st day of July, 1875.

Mr. BUCKNER. What has become of my amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdrew his amendment.

Mr. BUCKNER. I withdrew it until the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. YOUNG] could be disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Virginia who has moved an amendment.

Mr. DAWES. Is that amendment in order before the one I offered?

The CHAIRMAN. Two amendments are in order to perfect the section, and the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia is in the nature of perfecting the section.

Mr. DAWES. But which should be considered first? It is not an amendment to my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It is an amendment to the section in the nature of perfecting it.

Mr. DAWES. So is mine.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair allows two amendments to be pending.

Mr. DAWES. But which should be considered first?

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. Is my amendment recognized as in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I desire to state to the committee as briefly as possible the reasons which compel me to ask that this amendment shall be adopted. I am of course opposed to any change in the law imposing a tax upon tobacco, especially a change to increase the tax. I believe that our experience has proved that we shall receive no increased revenue from increased taxation on certain articles. We are getting more money from the present uniform tax of 20 cents per pound on manufactured tobacco than we derive from any other rate of taxation ever tried by Congress.

Now, if it is the determination of this committee to adopt this section, as I believe to be the case, I desire that those who are connected with the tobacco trade and more particularly interested in it shall have the necessary opportunity to prepare themselves for the proposed change and not to permit this additional tax to come upon them in an entirely unprepared condition, as they now are. The result of this proposed legislation has already shown itself in the State which I have the honor to represent in part upon this floor and in which the tobacco interest is so large an interest. It has caused those who have put their capital in the manufacture of tobacco to make great sacrifices to raise money in a country where money is not plentiful and to rush to the offices of the collectors of internal revenue to purchase the stamps necessary to pay the tax on the tobacco which they have on hand already manufactured before this law shall go into operation.

The provision as it now stands in the bill makes a great discrimination against the men who have not such means or credit that they can, through their bankers or their friends or from their own resources, raise money to enable them to purchase stamps for the tobacco which they now have on hand. By the provision of the section, the men who are able to raise money for this purpose will have a great advantage over the poorer class—an advantage which ought not to be sanctioned by our legislation. It must be readily seen that a man having on hand in his factory a quantity of tobacco already manufactured, if he can raise money to buy the stamps to put upon that tobacco, has a great advantage over those who have not the means to do so. The men who cannot pay the tax before this bill goes into operation will have to pay an increased tax of 4 cents a pound upon tobacco already manufactured. Speculators are already at work raising all the money they can to purchase these stamps in large quantities, not for their own use but to be sold to the manufacturers of tobacco after this bill has gone into operation; for even if these stamps are sold by these speculators at an advance of 3 cents per pound the manufacturer will still save 1 cent a pound.

The object of my amendment is to enable the trade to accommodate itself to this change in the law. No possible advantage can be taken of this provision; the Government cannot be defrauded out of one dollar in connection with this matter. The amendment simply enables the manufacturers to prepare for the change in the law. It is in the interest of fairness and justice that I ask the committee to allow this additional time.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GUNCKEL. I rise to oppose the amendment. The distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] proposed a little while ago an amendment to his own bill, increasing the tax on cigars by a horizontal tax of 20 per cent. on the present rates. Thereupon, I was bold enough to suggest one fact—that Connecticut tobacco is worth about 50 cents a pound, and Ohio and other western tobacco about 10 cents a pound, and that therefore a cigar made entirely of Connecticut tobacco, and worth 5 cents or 10 cents, would pay precisely the same tax as a cigar made of Ohio or other western tobacco and worth perhaps less than a cent. They used to sell a handful of them for a penny. That was before they were taxed. Well, I objected to a tax which was the same upon the good as the poor cigar, the same on the dime cigar as the penny one, and especially I objected to continuing and not only continuing but increasing this inequality and injustice. But before I had half stated my objection, the chairman of Ways and Means takes the floor—putting me off by some sort of legerdemain which I could not understand—and without denying my facts or answering my argument assumes to lecture me, for what? For raising a sectional question! Well, this is a very old question, and has been raised many times before. It was fought in the Committee on Ways and Means by my predecessor, General Schenck, who insisted that the tax should be imposed in such an ad valorem tax so that the rich men who enjoyed good cigars should pay a greater tax than the poor man who were compelled to smoke cheap ones. But New England voted him down, because it was to the interest of the growers of Connecticut tobacco.

And it is my friend from Massachusetts who again raises this sectional question by the amendment which he submitted, and which proposes to increase and perpetuate this inequality and wrong. And the fact cannot be obscured by the denial that this legislation is not in the interest of New England. Gentlemen who represent the western people, and who feel it their duty to protect western interests, are compelled to take the aggressive and to make statements and arguments which they would much prefer not to make, but which are necessary to protect the interests of their constituents. But the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] says the eastern members do not raise sectional questions, and for a very good reason. They are fully protected in any case—protected under the old law, and again fully protected under the new bill.

Why, look a moment. We have already provided for taxing whisky, a western production, and also the manufacture of tobacco, a large western industry, the tax upon which will be injurious, not only to the producers and manufacturers but to a vast body of consumers, including large numbers of poor people. It is now proposed to add a horizontal tax on cigars, putting no more tax upon the cigar smoked by the rich man, for which he pays 5, 10, 15, or 20 cents, than on the cigar smoked by the poor man and costing but a penny or two. You put also an additional tax upon manufactured tobacco for fear he might resort to his old pipe, and then you couple with this a proposition to remove the tax upon matches. Why? That tax yields I believe two and a half millions of revenue; there is nobody protesting against it; but the matches are made largely in New England and this repeal of the tax is to benefit that section. And then we come to the 10 per cent. increase in the tariff; why is that inserted? To help New England manufacturers. It is the old story over and over again. Every tax bill that has been passed heretofore has been in favor of New England and to the injury of the West. And now I protest against its repetition in this new bill and appeal to western men to stand by western interests.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. DAWES, it was agreed to.

The question then recurred upon the amendment of Mr. PLATT, of Virginia.

Mr. DAWES. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "June" and inserting "July." I do not want to have any misunderstanding with my good friend from Ohio, [Mr. GUNCKEL.] I think if he understood what he is talking about to-day just as well as he did what he was talking about last Saturday, he would not talk as he does. He speaks about the tax on matches, and says that the proposition to remove this tax is, like everything else, made in the interest of New England. Sir, what has induced the Committee on Ways and Means to report in favor of the repeal of the tax on matches? Because the western manufacturers came down here and spent hours with the committee to persuade them to repeal that tax. They put it in, and the eastern manufacturers upon the other end of the aisle came here to persuade us to let the tax remain. I will tell my friend from Ohio that when he moves to strike out that section he moves just as New England manufacturers want it. If he lets it remain, it is just as the western manufacturers want it.

And just so the gentleman has talked about the fact that we have put a uniform tax on cigars, so as to help the eastern manufacturers of cigars. The best cigars are not made in the East. They furnish the wrapper in the East, which goes to the West, where they make the cigars. They raise the wrapper there, while you furnish all the rest and make the cigars. Now, when my friend from Ohio has been here as long as I have, and I hope he will be, and when he goes into that Committee on Ways and Means, as I hope he will, because I know he is honest, industrious, and faithful, he will understand that there is no such thing as undertaking to fix things for one particular district. He cannot do it if he tries. He cannot touch one industry in this land that does not spread itself all over the land, as the system of human nerves spreads itself all over the human body, so that if you touch it in one place it is felt in every other. There is no such thing as undertaking to build up here a law which is applicable to the whole country which at the same time will protect any special industry in any particular locality. If you make it profitable there this year, one hundred rival establishments all over the land will spring up in consequence.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KASSON. Does the gentleman withdraw his amendment to the amendment?

Mr. DAWES. I do.

Mr. KASSON. In order to perfect the proviso adopted on my motion in respect to contracts for future delivery, I want to put in after the words "such tobacco," the words "cigars and cigarettes," so as to make it harmonize with the amendment adopted on motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.]

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. What becomes of my amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is pending, and the question will now be taken.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 75.

So the amendment of Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, was rejected.

Mr. KASSON's amendment was then adopted.

Mr. BUCKNER. I move to add at the end of the section these words which I will send to the Chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, From and after the passage of this act any farmer or planter may sell at the place of production tobacco of his own growth and raising at retail, directly to the consumers, an amount not exceeding 100 pounds annually, subject to such rates and regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. BUCKNER. I only desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that this is the provision carried by the majority of this House and especially adopted by a large vote on the other side at the last session of Congress, and was a part of the "little tariff bill." As my friend from New York has well remarked, there was an anxious desire on the part of the other side of the House to do something which would favor this agricultural interest. Now here is the opportunity for which they have asked. Here is the opportunity for them to manifest that anxiety to protect the interest of the farmer. Here is this change in the provision I submit to the committee at this time, that instead of $100 worth it is limited to 100 pounds, so that you give the farmer the right to sell to his employees or for any other purpose 100 pounds of tobacco. We all know, as gentlemen have well said that the man who raises less than a hoghead of tobacco, unless he can sell to the manufacturers or wholesale dealers—and they are scarce all over the country—the tobacco will be left on his hands utterly worthless. That is true of nothing else raised in this country. Nothing else under the broad canopy of heaven except tobacco has this stigma and blight put upon it. I wish to see whether these gentlemen who voted for the proposition less than a year ago will now go back on it.

Mr. ATKINS. I move to strike out "pounds" and insert "dollars."

Mr. ATKINS's amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The question recurred on Mr. BUCKNER's amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 47, noes 79; no quorum voting.

Mr. WHITEHEAD demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. DAWES and Mr. BUCKNER were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 47, noes 75.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 3. That so much of section 3437 as imposes a stamp tax on friction matches, lucifer matches, or other articles made in part of wood and used for like purposes, be, and the same is, repealed, to take effect on and after the 1st day of July, 1875.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I move to strike that section out.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE MOUTH OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

The committee informally rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair directs the Clerk to read the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the rules be suspended and House bill No. 4714, for the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River, shall be made a special order for consideration in the House, to the exclusion of all other business, on Thursday, 18th day of February, 1875, at the hour of two o'clock p. m., and the previous question shall be called on the same at four o'clock on the same day.

Mr. COBURN. I rise for the purpose of submitting a report from the special committee on political affairs in Alabama.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. Under a suspension of the rules the bill relating to the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River is the regular order of business.

Mr. McCRARY. I ask to have a report printed.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. DAWES. Would it be in order to raise the question of consideration?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the House can never be debarred from that.

Mr. STANARD. I hope we will be allowed to proceed with this bill.

Mr. DAWES. I understand that this is to close at four o'clock?

The SPEAKER. Yes; at four o'clock.

Mr. STANARD. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill (H. R. No. 4714) for the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River. Some amendments have been made to the bill as recommended to the Committee on Commerce, and I ask that as now reported it may be treated as a substitute.

The substitute was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 4714) for the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River.

Be it enacted, etc., That James B. Eads, of Saint Louis, Missouri, be, and he is hereby, authorized, with such others as may be associated with him, on the conditions hereinafter mentioned, to construct such permanent and sufficient jetties and such auxiliary works as are necessary to create and permanently maintain, as hereinafter set forth, a wide and deep channel between the Southwest Pass of the Mississippi River and the Gulf of Mexico; and for that purpose he may construct in the river, outlet, or pass, and likewise in the Gulf of Mexico, such walls, jetties, dikes, levees, and other structures, and employ such boats, rafts, and appliances as he may, in the prosecution of said work, deem necessary: Provided, That no such structures or means employed shall hinder, delay, or materially interfere with the free navigation of said pass; and, to protect his said works, he may build and maintain such levees or embankments as may be necessary to secure their permanency along the banks of the river or Southwest Pass: Provided further, That unless the construction of the proposed work shall be substantially commenced within eight months from the date of the approval of this act, and prosecuted with due diligence, the provisions contained herein shall be null and void; and unless the said Eads and his associates shall secure a navigable depth of twenty feet of water through said pass within thirty months after the date of the approval of this act, Congress may revoke the privileges herein granted, and cancel the obligations herein assumed by the United States. And Congress may revoke the privileges herein granted, and cancel the obligations herein assumed by the United States, unless the said Eads and his associates shall, after securing twenty feet of water, secure an additional depth of not less than two feet during each succeeding year thereafter, until twenty-six feet shall have been secured, and four feet additional, or thirty feet, within twenty-four months after having secured twenty-six feet; and in case said Eads and his associates shall fail to comply with the foregoing conditions as to depth of water and time for any period of twelve months in excess of the time fixed, as aforesaid, then this act shall absolutely become null and void without action by Congress. And in the event of the privileges and authority herein granted being thus forfeited by the default of said Eads to substantially commence said work, and to diligently prosecute the same, as above stated, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to cause plans and specifications for the said work to be made, and to commence the construction of the same under the direction of the Chief of United States Engineers without delay; and the funds herein provided to be paid to said Eads and associates shall be applied, under the Secretary of War, in the construction of said works.

SEC. 2. That the conditions herein prescribed being complied with, the United States hereby promise and agree to pay to said Eads, or to his assigns or legal representatives, $2,000,000 for constructing said works and obtaining a depth of thirty feet in said channel, and the annual sum of $150,000 for each and every year that said depth of thirty feet shall be maintained by the jetties and auxiliary works aforesaid in said Southwest Pass during twenty years after first securing the said depth. Payments shall be made on certified statements of an engineer officer, who shall be detailed by the Secretary of War, and whose duty it shall be to report the depth of water and width of channel secured and maintained from time to time in said channel, together with such other information as the Secretary of War may direct. When a channel of twenty-two feet depth of water, and of not less than two hundred feet in width, shall have been obtained by the action of said jetties and auxiliary works, $500,000 shall be paid; and after said depth and width of channel shall have been maintained for twelve months consecutively, $500,000 shall be paid with interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date when said depth and width was first obtained.

When a channel twenty-four feet in depth and not less than two hundred and fifty feet in width shall have been obtained, there shall be paid $500,000; and after said depth and width shall have been maintained during twelve consecutive months, there shall be paid $500,000 with 6 per cent. per annum interest from the date when said twenty-four feet were first obtained.

When a channel twenty-six feet in depth and not less than three hundred feet in width shall be obtained, there shall be paid $500,000; and when said depth and width shall have been maintained for twelve months consecutively, $500,000 shall be paid with interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date when said channel was first obtained.

When a channel twenty-eight feet in depth and not less than four hundred feet in width shall be obtained, there shall be paid $500,000; and after said depth and width shall have been maintained for twelve months consecutively, $500,000 shall be paid with interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date when said twenty-eight feet were first obtained.

When a channel thirty feet in depth and not less than five hundred feet in width shall be obtained, there shall be paid $1,000,000; and after said depth and width shall have been maintained for twelve months consecutively, there shall be paid $1,000,000 with interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date when a channel of said depth and width was first obtained; making a total aggregate of six millions for the aforesaid payments, the respective depths and widths of channel being measured at average flood-tide, as ascertained and determined by the Secretary of War.

When said thirty feet depth of water and width of channel of not less than five hundred feet shall have been obtained by the effect of said jetties and auxiliary works aforesaid, the remaining $2,000,000 shall be deemed as having been earned by said Eads and associates; but said amount shall remain as security in the possession of the United States for the purpose hereinafter set forth, interest at 6 per cent. per annum on the same being payable to said Eads, his assigns and legal representatives, semi-annually from the date when said thirty feet shall have been first secured, so long as said money, or any part thereof, is held by the United States.

SEC. 3. That after said depth of thirty feet of water, of not less than five hundred feet in width, shall have been secured, $150,000 per annum shall be paid in equal quarterly payments during each and every year that said depth of thirty feet of water and width of channel of not less than five hundred feet shall have been maintained by said Eads and his associates in said pass for a period of twenty years, dating from the date on which said depth of thirty feet and said width of channel shall be first secured: Provided, however, That no part of such annual compensation shall be paid for any period of time during which the depth of water in the aforesaid channel of said pass shall be less than thirty feet of the width hereinbefore specified.

SEC. 4. That the said depth of thirty feet of the width specified having been maintained for ten years, one-half of the $2,000,000 hereinbefore mentioned shall be released and paid to said Eads, his assigns or legal representatives; and said depth and width having been maintained for ten additional years, the remaining half of the said $2,000,000 shall be released and paid as aforesaid. And if any of said money shall have been paid under the provisions of this act as hereinafter provided, then the residue shall be paid at the times above stated.

SEC. 5. That in case said Eads and associates, in order to maintain said thirty feet depth of water, and width of channel above specified, shall deem it necessary to expend on said works, during any one or more of said twenty years, any money in excess of the annual payments received by them during said year or years under section 3 of this act, the Secretary of War shall, on satisfactory proof of such expenditures, authorize, as often as such extra expenditures may require, the payment of the same from the said money in pledge, to said Eads, or his legal representatives. And such payments shall be made from the $1,000,000 to be released at the end of ten years, before any payment shall be made from that to be released in twenty years; and if any failure to maintain said thirty feet depth and the specified width of channel shall occur, the date for releasing the said money held in pledge shall be postponed for an equal period of time, and the compensation for maintaining said depth shall cease until said depth and width shall be again restored, the maintenance of thirty feet of depth and width of channel of five hundred feet for twenty years exclusive of all such periods of failure being intended by this act. And any time after said jetties shall have been completed, and said depth of thirty feet and specified width shall have been obtained, that the United States may elect to pay the said $2,000,000 and stop the payment of said interest and said annual sum of $150,000 for the maintenance of said depth and width, said United States shall have the right to do so on payment of said money held as security and in pledge as aforesaid, together with the interest and annual compensation for maintenance which may be earned at the date of such final payment; and on such payment being made by the United States, the supervision and maintenance of said jetties and auxiliary works by said Eads and associates, and all liability on their part shall cease and determine.

SEC. 6. That in order to facilitate the proper location of said jetties, which shall not be less than two thousand feet apart, and to correctly determine such effects as may be produced by them, the chief of the Coast Survey shall, as soon as practicable, cause a careful topographic and hydrographic survey to be made of said pass and bar, and shall submit the same to the Secretary of War, who shall furnish to said Eads the results of any such survey.

SEC. 7. That any person maliciously or intentionally injuring said works, or interfering with the construction thereof, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and may be tried for such offense before the district court of the United States for the district wherein such offense may be committed; and, if found guilty, he shall be liable to a fine not exceeding $1,000, or to imprisonment for not more than two years, or to both fine and imprisonment as aforesaid, for each offense.

SEC. 8. That the said Eads and his associates may have the right to use any materials on the public lands of the United States within twenty miles of the mouth of the Mississippi River that shall be suitable for, and may be needed in, the construction of said works: Provided, That said right may be limited or withheld by the President of the United States if he deems it contrary to the public interest.

SEC. 9. That in case of death or other disability of said Eads before the completion of said works, the same may be prosecuted and completed by his legal representatives and his associates aforesaid, with the same powers, rights, obligations, and compensations as if done by him in person.

SEC. 10. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to carry into effect the provisions of this act on behalf of the United States, and when the said Eads and his associates shall from time to time have fulfilled on their part the several conditions of this act, to draw his warrants upon the Treasurer of the United States in favor of said Eads or his legal representatives in payment of the aforesaid amounts as they respectively become due by the provisions of this act. And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to embody in his annual report the payments made from time to time under this act and the probable times when other payments will become due, and to report during the construction of the works herein authorized all important facts relating to the progress of the same, the materials used, the character and permanency with which the said jetties and auxiliary works are being constructed, to the end that the Congress of the United States may be kept fully advised as to the faithfulness and efficiency with which the said works are being executed by the said Eads and associates; it being expressly understood that while said Eads shall be untrammelled in the exercise of his judgment and skill in the location, design, and construction of said jetties and auxiliary works, the intent of this act is not simply to secure the wide and deep channel as above named, but likewise to provide for the construction of thoroughly permanent works by which said channel may be maintained for all time after their completion; and in case the Secretary of War shall be of the opinion that this work is not being constructed according to the spirit and intent of this act, he shall report the same to Congress at the earliest moment thereafter for its action.

SEC. 11. That the sum of $500,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purposes herein set forth.

SEC. 12. That the option of discharging the obligations herein assumed by the United States, either in money or bonds, is expressly reserved; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to issue the bonds of the United States, bearing 5 per cent. interest, and payable in not exceeding thirty years from their date, to said Eads or his legal representatives, in payment at par of the aforesaid warrants of the Secretary of War, unless the Congress of the United States shall have previously provided for the payment of the same by the necessary appropriations of money.

Mr. STANARD. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to speak at any great length upon this bill, but merely to say enough that its provisions may be thoroughly understood by the House, and then I shall give way to other members of the committee and other gentlemen who may be disposed to speak.

The bill which has been read at the Clerk's desk is a bill which has been prepared by the Committee on Commerce of the House with the greatest care and scrutiny. It has been before us by night and by day for the past two weeks, and in one way and another before the House of Representatives and the Senate for the past twelve or fourteen months. The Committee on Commerce have had the benefit of the investigation and the scrutiny of the Committee on Railways and Canals, and of a committee of the Senate, and we believe that we have prepared as nearly perfect a bill for presentation to the House as it is possible for us to do.

It will be remembered that a scheme for the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River was before this House at the last session of this Congress. It was discussed at great length. We finally agreed to and passed a bill making an appropriation of $2,000,000 for the purpose of constructing what is known as the Fort Saint Philip Canal below New Orleans. That bill went to the Senate, and instead of passing it, in order that Congress might have further light upon the subject, the benefit of the best engineering skill of the country, the benefit of extended observations of improvements not only in this but in foreign countries, the Senate saw fit to insert in the provisions of that bill the following, establishing a commission:

SEC. 3. That a board of engineers, to be composed of three from the Army, one from the Coast Survey, and three from civil life, be appointed by the President; which said board shall make a survey of the mouth of the Mississippi River, with a view to determine the best method of obtaining and maintaining a depth of water sufficient for the purposes of commerce, either by a canal from said river to the waters of the Gulf or by deepening one or more of the natural outlets of said river; and said board shall make a full and detailed estimate and statement of the cost of each of said plans, and shall report the same, together with their opinion thereon, showing which of all said plans they deem preferable, giving their reasons therefor, to the Secretary of War, to be presented at the commencement of the second session of the Forty-third Congress; and that the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the cost of said survey.

This amendment was agreed to by the House. In accordance with the provisions of this section, the following engineers were appointed to carry out the duties therein prescribed: Lieutenant-Colonel H. G. Wright, Lieutenant-Colonel B. S. Alexander, and Major C. B. Comstock, of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, and Professor Henry Mitchell, of the United States Coast Survey, T. E. Sickles, W. Milnor Roberts, and H. D. Whitcomb. These gentlemen were appointed by the President to constitute this commission and to make the report.

I have the report in my hand; it is Executive Document No. 114. I will simply say, without reading from the document, that six of the seven members of this board report in favor of improving the mouth of the Mississippi River by what is known as the jettee plan, and report against the canal.

Mr. Speaker, I will now as nearly as I can and as briefly as I can explain the provisions of this bill. The bill provides that a contract be made with or a cession be made to James B. Eads, of Saint Louis, Missouri, and his associates, for the construction of this work. It contemplates that the work shall be commenced within eight months. It provides that there shall be 20 feet of water within thirty months from the passage of the bill, while the depth of water now is only 16 feet; it provides that there shall be 22 feet of water within twelve months from the time of having secured the 20 feet; it provides that when the 22 feet of water has been secured with a width of said depth of 200 feet the Government shall pay $500,000, and that when the said 22 feet of water has been maintained for one year thereafter another $500,000 shall be paid. It provides that when 24 feet of water has been secured with a width of 250 feet of that depth $500,000 shall be paid, and that when the said depth and width have been maintained for twelve consecutive months thereafter another $500,000 shall be paid. When 26 feet of water has been secured with a width of 300 feet it provides that another half million dollars shall be paid, and when the 26 feet of water has been maintained for twelve months with the width before mentioned that another half million dollars shall be paid. It provides that when 28 feet of water has been secured with a width of 400 feet of like depth another half million dollars shall be paid, and that when that has been maintained for twelve additional months another half million dollars shall be paid. It provides that when 30 feet of water has been secured with 500 feet in width of the same depth a million dollars shall be paid, and that after a depth of 30 feet of water with 500 feet in width has been maintained for twelve months another million dollars shall be paid.

It provides further, that when 30 feet of water with 500 feet in width of the same depth has been thus maintained for twelve months the $8,000,000 which was to be the original cost and price of the canal shall then be considered due, only $6,000,000 having been paid up to this time. It provides further, that these $2,000,000 of the $8,000,000 shall remain in the hands of the Government as a security—one million for ten years and one million for twenty years—that the said James B. Eads and his associates shall maintain this 30 feet of depth and 500 feet of width for twenty years at a cost of $150,000 annually for that purpose. As a guarantee that this work shall be maintained and that it shall not cost more than $150,000 a year, this provision is put in to guard against the fact that the commissioners who have been appointed and who reported were of the opinion that it would cost $390,000 a year to maintain and extend these jetties; Mr. Eads believing it will cost no such amount.

But, sir, the bill makes a further provision in order to make the Government doubly safe. It provides that in case $150,000 a year is not required to maintain this channel, the Government may pay the $2,000,000 which have been left as security and only the balance of the $150,000 that may be due to Mr. Eads and his associates, and take the work of maintaining and extending itself.

Mr. Speaker, I am of opinion—and there are many gentlemen who have given this subject careful and thorough investigation who unite with me in the opinion—that these jetties—which are to help the national outlet will widen, deepen, and extend themselves; that it will require a very small amount of money to keep them in order; but as that is somewhat problematical, we have put in the provision that $150,000 may be expended for the purpose of keeping the works in repair and extending the jetties; but we have left it discretionary with the Government to take it in hand and maintain the works for any sum they may see fit to expend rather than expend $150,000 a year. I believe that these are substantially all the business provisions of the bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I understand that after obtaining a depth of 30 feet of water the Government is to contract to pay Mr. Eads $8,000,000.

Mr. STANARD. That is so.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I find that the third section of the bill provides—

That after said depth of 30 feet of water, of not less than 500 feet in width, shall have been secured, $150,000 per annum shall be paid in equal quarterly payments during each and every year that said depth of 30 feet of water and width of channel of not less than 500 feet shall have been maintained by said Eads and his associates in said pass for a period of twenty years, dating from the date on which said depth of 30 feet and said width of channel shall be first secured.

By that it would seem that as soon as this work is constructed these parties are to receive $150,000 a year for the purpose of keeping up this 30 feet depth of water, in addition to the $8,000,000 to be paid them for the construction of the work itself.

Mr. STANARD. I will state that the engineers of the commission estimate that it will cost $390,000 a year to keep up that depth of water. I do not myself believe that it will cost $150,000. But there is a provision further along in the bill that if it does not cost $150,000, if it costs a less sum or nothing at all, then the Government is empowered to take the work off his hands and to stop any payment to him for that purpose, and maintain the works as it may elect.

Eight million dollars! This may be considered a very large amount by some to be expended in this way for this great ship canal. It is a large sum of money, but the work is one of vast importance. The Government of the United States for the last half century or more has been attempting to improve the mouth of the Mississippi. We have been spending from $150,000 to $250,000 and $300,000 a year for the purpose of keeping something like a navigable channel at the mouth of the Mississippi River. I observe in the report from the Engineer's office that although a larger amount of money was expended last year for the purpose of keeping as good navigation as it was possible, yet at no time did they secure over seventeen and one-half feet depth of water.

Many may consider this a novel and perhaps very precarious method of improving the mouth of the Mississippi. The engineer officers of the Government have failed thus far to give us the necessary depth of water, although the Government has been constantly spending money for the purpose. Now comes a gentleman who proposes to improve the mouth of the Mississippi River at a time when the Government is poor in its Treasury, and not disposed to expend large sums of money for uncertain results—he comes forward and proposes to do this work and to accomplish these results or to get no pay. He proposes to leave his money earned in the hands of the Government as a security that this work shall be accomplished, and if it is not accomplished in accordance with the specifications of this bill the money is to be forfeited to the Government. There can be no better security for results than this.

When the depth of water shall be secured of 22 feet, 24 feet, 26 feet, 28 feet, and 30 feet, he proposes to leave at four of the periods $500,000 a year in the hands of the Government, and at the other period $1,000,000 a year as a guarantee to the Government that that depth and width of water shall be secured and maintained. After he has secured 30 feet of depth he proposes to leave two millions of money earned by him as a guarantee that that depth and width shall be maintained for ten and twenty years, as prescribed by the bill and as before explained.

The bill further provides that this money may be paid in the bonds of the United States after the provisions of the bill have all been complied with, in bonds running not over thirty years, bearing interest at 5 per cent. I have stated that it looked like a large figure to pay. By reference to estimates made by the board of engineers of which General Barnard was president, in the report dated January 3, 1874, to be found in Executive Document No. 220, Forty-third Congress, you will find on page 117 the estimate that this very work—which Captain Eads proposes to complete for $8,000,000 and to sustain for twenty years, should it be necessary, for $150,000 per year, making in the last contingency $11,000,000—this board of United States engineers, who made this first estimate for a like work, estimate that it will cost $25,771,523.20.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Out of what kind of material was that work to be constructed on account of which this estimate was made?

Mr. STANARD. It was simply to be constructed out of such materials as were at hand, and which were proved by experience to be the best for the construction of permanent works; timber and stone; it may be of iron or willow—anything making a bank by which the waters shall be confined.

There has been another estimate made by a board of engineers of which General A. A. Humphreys, the Chief of Engineers, was president. You will find that in Executive Document No. 220, on pages 13 and 14. The cost of construction as asked for a like work which Mr. Eads proposes to give to the country for $8,000,000 or in a contingency $11,000,000. The engineers estimate that it will cost $23,000,000.

In the act which I have already read a commission is provided for, which commission has recently reported, after having visited the month of the Mississippi and many rivers in the Old World. That commission makes a careful estimate, and say that the jetties will cost $16,053,124 at the Southwest Pass. This proposition of Mr. Eads saves the Government all risk and is $14,771,223 less than the estimate made by the board of Army engineers which met in New Orleans. It is $12,000,000 less than the estimate made by the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army during the last session of Congress, and $5,053,124 less than the estimate made by the select commission of engineers in their report dated January 13, 1875; and all payments to Captain Eads and his associates are dependent on the results that may be accomplished. So much for the cost.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we are not without precedent in this work. Although the Government has not, nor have private corporations so far as I am aware, constructed jetties in this country, it has been for almost a century and perhaps longer the recognized and acknowledged method in the Old World for the improvement of rivers. I hold in my hand photographs of the mouths of some nineteen rivers of Russia, Prussia, Sweden, and other lands, where the mouths of rivers have been improved by the jetty system, giving the results in detail as to how and when they were constructed, as to the depth of water before their construction and the depth afterward. I will read from but a few of them to give results of the work, as that is really what Congress wants. It does not want theories; it wants facts, and I am attempting to give them as accurately as I can.

The mouth of the river Liban in Russia had 6 feet of water before the introduction of the jetty system, and 16 feet after completion. The river Pernau in Russia had 6 feet before the jetties were applied, and 16 feet afterward. The river Warne in Prussia had 6 feet of water before the introduction of the jetty system, and 13 feet afterward. The river Niemen in Prussia had at its mouth a depth of only 10 feet before the jetties were applied, but afterward and up to the present time the depth of water has been 23 to 24 feet. The river Pregel in Prussia had 12 feet of water before the application of jetties, and now has 20 feet, though the improvement is not yet completed. The river Oder in Prussia had 7 feet of water before the jetties were applied, and now it has 23 to 24 feet. The jetties there are permanent in their character. The river Danube, the mouth of which is very similar to that of the Mississippi, had 9 feet of water before the application of the jetty system, and now has 21½ feet. The river Trave in Prussia had 7 feet of water before jetties were constructed, and it now has 18.

Mr. Speaker, I might occupy the time of this House at great length in talking about the grandeur of the Mississippi River, of the country through which it runs, of the country through which its tributaries run. But, sir, we have heard much of that here. Many of us live upon the banks of this Mississippi River, some of us were born west of this grand river; and although many of you do not live there, you know of its importance as a great artery of commerce, running from Minnesota to Louisiana through the most fruitful and prosperous country on the face of the earth, through a region of country that has the greatest promise for the future of any country known to man. I might speak to you at great length about the resources of the ten or fifteen States where this river runs, and the importance of improving the mouth of the river so that boats drawing twenty-four, twenty-six, or twenty-eight feet of water shall be able to pass in and out, after the commerce shall have been collected from these twelve to fifteen thousand miles of navigable water.

How is it to-day? We are spending millions of money every year to improve the Mississippi and its tributaries. You have already a bill reported to you making appropriation for the improvement of these waters. The experience has been and will be for all time to come, unless you improve the mouth, that this commerce through these waters shall be carried to the mouth, and then the nation finds itself in a pitiable condition with the mouth of the river so filled with mud and so low that this commerce cannot take vessels that come into the Gulf of Mexico from the waters of the great oceans of the world and be distributed almost wherever man lives in other countries as well as to our eastern sea-board. I say that I do not believe the Congress of the United States will longer allow the country to be disgraced in this way.

I have spoken to you here of the improvement of some nineteen or twenty rivers in European countries where the commerce does not amount to mills where ours amounts to dollars; where they have expended in the improvement of a single river nearly half of what this bill provides for expending.

The rapid increase of population in the Western States where this river runs and where its branches ramify is too well known for me here to lay it before you. The statistics of the country show that the States that I mention increased in population about 64 per cent. during the decade from 1860 to 1870; that the productions of the cereals increased more than 100 per cent., amounting to about one thousand million bushels of grain; that its manufactures in some of the States increased more than 500 per cent. We may judge somewhat by this what is to be expected in the near future and what is to be the transportation wants in the next ten or twenty years or longer; and I am sure there comes a voice unmistakable in its sound from all over the southern country asking that this appropriation shall be made so that one of its chief harbors may be reached in this way, giving them new spirit and new hope of prosperity within their borders; and when prosperity comes to a people, then also come peace and contentment.

All over the northwestern country, where there are organizations of men, either in granges, boards of trade, chambers of commerce, political conventions, or conventions expressly called for the consideration of this subject, as well as in State Legislatures, comes up the plea unmistakable in its sound to Congress that the mud shall be taken out of the mouth of the Mississippi River, and a deep and permanent channel be given to the Gulf. I am sure if we have a vote on this bill to-day it will be supported by a united East and a united West. I may say that I feel sure, although New England may be one thousand miles from this river she cannot go back upon her sons who are scattered throughout this great western valley, who went out into the wilderness braving the privations and dangers of a frontier life to bring it under cultivation and ultimately to find thrifty and happy homes, and who have made it "blossom as the rose," and who have brought prosperity not only to that country, but thrift and prosperity to New England as well.

I would like to speak of another matter if time would allow. As the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. McCrory] wishes me to go on, I will refer to it. I do not believe that transportation charges can be regulated by legislation. I believe the only thing which will do it is competition in the carrying trade. Now, sir, there is a demand for additional transportation facilities and for cheaper transportation. I do not believe the country can bring this additional and cheaper transportation facilities in any way so sure as by the adequate improvement of the Mississippi River and its tributaries, because the river runs from the southern to the northern extremity of the country, midway between the East and the West, cutting at right angles every railroad running from the East to the West or from the West to the East, aggregating a length of more than thirty thousand miles in the valley, making the railroads tributary to the river and the river tributary to the railroads, each serving as a check upon the other and as a competitor in the general carrying business; thereby giving additional and also cheaper transportation facilities, which the country to-day so much requires and so loudly demands.

Mr. Speaker, if this bill becomes a law, I have faith that this great work will be accomplished satisfactorily to the Government, because I have faith in Captain James B. Eads. He stands pre-eminent among the engineers of the country. We have a monument of his skill and engineering ability in a constructed bridge of wonderful size, strength, and symmetry at Saint Louis, as well as many other evidences of his ability. When the country was in the throes of rebellion he was called on by the Government to construct some thirteen or fourteen iron-clads, which he did in a remarkably short space of time and to the satisfaction of the Government; and in this connection I beg to read an extract from a letter from Hon. Gideon Welles, then Secretary of the Navy, to Captain Eads, under date of February 10, 1875, which has this afternoon been placed in my hands:

I notice in the papers you have a proposition of some importance before Congress relative to deepening the channel of the Mississippi. Of course I am no expert or judge of the best method of accomplishing this great and necessary work, but I have confidence that you, with your fertile and suggestive mind and your great practical experience on the "Father of Waters," whose navigation you so much improved, are better master of the subject than any mere speculative theorists. From the promptness and fidelity with which you executed your large contracts with myself and the Government during the war, I have faith that you would perform whatever you undertook. As I have said to you heretofore, and also publicly stated, your eminent services in that great emergency the country has never realized, but I shall never forget.

But I will not occupy more of the time of the House now, but after the previous question is seconded if there should be any questions propounded as to the workings of this bill and its provisions necessary for me to answer, I will then occupy enough of the time necessary to answer them if I have the ability to do so. I now propose to yield to other gentlemen. I yield first to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Williams] for fifteen minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I most heartily favor the passage of this bill, because I believe it is a step in the right direction—a move toward the practical solution of that all-important problem of cheap transportation which lies so near to the hearts of the people of the West and Northwest. However flippant the term may be on the tongue here, whether you denominate it the "grangers," the "hay-seed," or the plain "farmers' movement," or whatever gloe all this cheap wit may create, still the sober question remains to the people of the West, "How shall the cheap transportation of our surplus products from the interior to the sea-board be best secured?" And, for one, I rejoice that the opportunity is here given, in the closing hours of the Forty-third Congress, for the majority of this House to attest in a practical way its fidelity to principle in this regard. All my colleagues from the West will bear evidence that in the recent political canvasses there this was really the question of questions, second only to the peace and perpetuity of the country itself.

In all our newspapers and in almost every election precinct the record of yeas and nays of this and former Congresses was presented to our constituents; the yeas and nays on the former resolution of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Hawley], on the resolution of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Smith], and on the passage of the McCrory bill in the House were brought out and urged upon our constituencies to convince that portion of the country the party in power here was in favor of subordinating the great corporations in this country to the just, reasonable, and wholesome restraints of legislation. That record was contrasted with the record of our opponents and dwelt upon as an evidence of our fidelity to the principle it contained.

Sir, the people had looked, and I had begun to fear they had looked almost in vain, to the Forty-third Congress not for argument, not for theory, not for speculation, nor for the discussion of mere law power alone, but for some substantial and practical advance upon this question of cheap transportation. But whenever Congress has approached anything which looked like a practical solution of this question, they have found it hedged about with difficulties. True, we passed the McCrory bill by a small majority and sent it to the Senate; we fearlessly affirmed the principle upon which it is founded; but, like all other kindred legislation, there were complications and difficulties surrounding its practical application which caused doubt and hesitation. Not that the principle must not be applied in some form, but upon interests vast and extended, reaching over an entire continent, it should only be imposed after the most thorough study of its details and careful consideration of its practical effects.

A general system of internal improvements has been recommended by a committee of the Senate, and indorsed by the President in one of his annual messages; but no sooner do we approach this as a practical question than we stand confronted by an exhausted Treasury on the one hand, while the actual cost of these improvements towers away into the hundred millions on the other. Immediate relief does not lie that way. We have considered the question of subsidies to transcontinental railroads, but the experience of the Government has been such as not to warrant any further advance in that direction. The project of constructing road-beds, to be owned and controlled by Government, upon which individuals and corporations may place their engines and cars, under supervisory regulations and restriction as to rates and charges, has also been proposed, but found too complicated to be adopted except as a last resort.

The direct ownership and operation of railroads by the Government I believe would break down by its own weight, and could only end in failure and disaster. Competition by means of narrow-gauge roads may yet prove to be the practical way out of the difficulty, but these have not yet been sufficiently tested to demonstrate the fact. One thing is certain, water carriage on the inland lakes and rivers of America is not yet to be abandoned, and the plain practical question is, how shall this be brought into the most effectual competition with railroad transportation? That it is effectual in regulating rates and charges upon railroads has already been demonstrated by the report of the special committee of the Senate upon cheap transportation.

But it is said if you improve one of these water lines you must improve all, or sectional or local interests will defeat you. If every member of this House cannot secure Government aid to improve his own local river or creek, then in duty bound to his constituency he is expected to vote against the bill. But let us see if there is not some broader ground upon which we can all stand, and, without antagonizing any of these local enterprises, work to a common purpose. It is manifestly not advisable to add to the list of unfinished works an isolated improvement here and there. A few thousand dollars annually appropriated from the Treasury and sunk on works which will require years to realize practical results, is merely scratching the surface of things and trifling with the subject.

It seems to me, sir, that the plain, common-sense business proposition of to-day is not to attempt to construct canals over high mountain altitudes, however feasible or desirable, or to waste our strength upon improvements merely local in their character, but to select some general routes lying along the natural water-courses of the country, national in their character, and place those in the shortest possible time in the best possible condition, and thus to give the experiment a full, fair, and thorough trial; after which all these others may come in due time.

Where do we find these routes? The hand of nature has traced the one along the bed of the Mississippi River. The usages of commerce has established the other for nearly two centuries over the route by the northern lakes. The one leads to New Orleans, the commercial metropolis of the South, and the other to the city of New York, the commercial emporium of the continent and destined to be of the world.

Sir, it is as idle to attempt to determine arbitrarily by legislation what channels the currents of commerce should take as it would be to try by the same method to determine where great cities ought to be planted and grow. These things take to themselves laws of their own, and commercial centers once established are not easily changed. As the blood flows from and to the heart, so is commerce ever flowing from and to its own chosen centers, and over routes once established the channels were broad and deep.

New York sits like a queen by the sea, and her commercial wand rules the waves and rules the land; and she will hold her place while our country shall endure. Looking now away from any narrow ground of partisanship or sectional feeling, we see the Crescent City of the South built up by the commerce which shall flow across the western sea through the isthmus to pour its treasures at her feet, emulating in prosperity and thrift her more powerful rival at the North.

Here we have the two great routes. How shall we improve them, and what shall be the cost? I must hasten, for my time is passing rapidly. I find from estimates in the report of the special committee of the Senate on cheap transportation that the improvement of the Mississippi River below the falls of Saint Anthony would cost $8,000,000; the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, $3,000,000; the improvement, with the concurrence of the State of New York, either of the Erie Canal from Buffalo to Albany, or the improvement of the Oswego Canal to Albany, or the Champlain Canal from Lake Champlain to deep water on the Hudson, and including a connection between Lake Champlain and the Saint Lawrence, either one of these routes, $12,000,000.

Where would this money be expended? Eight millions would be expended in the South, as proposed by this bill; six millions in the Northwest, on the Mississippi, the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, and the chain of lakes; and $12,000,000 in the East on one of these proposed lines. You then have a circuit extending from New York by way of the Atlantic to New Orleans; from New Orleans to Saint Paul; from the Mississippi to the northern lakes and along the border; around again to New York in its return. You embrace within this circuit every variety of climate, soil, and production; you reach the terminal point of almost every stream east of the Rocky Mountains, and promote the interest of all the States—East, West, North, and South.

In Heaven's name, if we are ever to unite and push forward any one scheme for the improvement of our national water-ways, why not unite upon this one and hasten it to completion? It is estimated that some three years will be required to complete this work, when we are promised that the mouth of the Mississippi shall be unobstructed and the great river flow out to the Gulf through a channel eighteen hundred feet wide and thirty feet deep.

Would that this $26,000,000 might be appropriated so fast as needed for the work, and that the same day which witnesses the completion of the improvement proposed in the pending bill might see this great circuit of water communication completed from the sea-board to the interior and from the interior to the Gulf. And why not? Why does not every maxim of business prudence and economy not only sanction but demand this? For instance we have now invested from first to last some $800,000 in the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers. We have the further appropriation of $500,000 now pending in the river and harbor appropriation bill. We have placed this improvement upon the list of unfinished work. I take it we intend to complete this work some time; why not do it as speedily as possible and begin to realize from the investment?

I cannot stop to enumerate the advantages to come from this single improvement alone. I find in the report of the Senate Committee upon Transportation Routes that the average cost of transporting a bushel of wheat of sixty pounds from nine towns on the Mississippi, namely, Saint Paul, Winona, La Crosse, Prairie du Chien, Dubuque, Savannah, Fulton, Rock Island, and Burlington by rail to Chicago was 17.1 cents, while the estimated cost of transporting the same by water from these places over the Fox and Wisconsin improvement to Green Bay, the terminus on Lake Michigan, would be 7.4 cents, being a saving of 9.7 cents per bushel:

The surplus of wheat and corn in Iowa and Minnesota in 1873 being over 60,000,000 bushels, the annual saving to be effected by the proposed improvement will amount to an annual saving of $8,000,000.

And the surplus of corn and wheat of counties in Wisconsin bordering on the Mississippi and lower Wisconsin River, being in the same year 10,500,000 bushels, the annual sum goes up to over $7,000,000.

The question has been often asked here, Mr. Speaker, if such immense annual profits can be realized from each one of these preferred improvements, why cannot private capital be induced to undertake them? I think, sir, a fair answer to that is, that these savings flow not to the coffers of the few but are distributed among the many. They are to come, if at all, like a common blessing; they fall as the rain falls; and while we may not be able to gather the latter up into reservoirs or rivers in a day or a year, yet its coming fertilizes and brightens the earth. I would far sooner see this $7,000,000 distributed equitably among the honest producers of wealth than see it gathered into colossal fortunes to menace, if not to endanger, the very existence of free institutions.

This same committee upon reliable data show that these combined improvements once completed would result in an annual saving to the people of the Mississippi Valley and the Northwest of $42,000,000. There is no disguising the fact that there has been a lingering doubt in the minds of many whether water carriage will be able to so compete with railroad carriage as to regulate rates on the latter. The regularity and rapidity of transportation, the facilities for taking advantage of the markets, and the insuring of quick returns on investments afforded by railroad transportation, have been believed to be more in keeping with the commercial spirit of the age. But, sir, a revolution has just been effected in the application of steam to the navigation of canals which must bring them fully abreast the railroads for capacity in moving aggregate masses of freight.

I will detain the House only long enough to present the two following extracts. The first is from the speech of Mr. D. P. Dobbins, of Buffalo, made at the cheap transportation convention held at Richmond in December last. He says:

These Baxter steamers have repeatedly made the trip from Buffalo to New York in less than six days, as against fourteen days usually consumed by the horse-boats, and have done it at the rate of ten cents per mile for steam-power, as against thirty-five cents per mile, the usual cost of towing a boat by horse or mule power, and that the rate of freight has been reduced from twelve and fifteen cents per bushel to eight and ten cents per bushel. Here is cheap and rapid transportation in actual operation.

The second is from the report of Mr. H. S. Sweet, State engineer and surveyor of the State of New York, bearing date February 6, 1875, and is as follows:

Access has been had to the books of the general agent of the Baxter Steam Canal-boat Transportation Company, in the city of New York, and abstracts taken therefrom, at the request of this department, exhibit the following facts:

Number of round trips made.....	39
Number of tons carried east.....	7, 870
Number of tons carried west.....	2, 765

Freight receipts on down trips.....	$25, 732 47
Freight receipts on up trips.....	7, 319 73

Total.....	33, 052 20
------------	------------

Tolls paid on down cargoes.....	$8, 115 41
Tolls paid on up cargoes.....	1, 988 69

Total.....	10, 104 10
------------	------------

Average duration of round trip from New York to Buffalo and back, 15 days; average coal consumption per round trip, about 12 tons.

This time does not include detentions in New York, nor does it include very serious delays, due entirely to the absence of needed facilities for handling freight. The average duration of the trip of a horse-boat, from New York to Buffalo and back may be put at twenty-five days. With an established business, and with all needed facilities, the steamers of this line will make their round trips regularly in from fifteen to seventeen days, as against thirty-three days of the horse-boat; in other words, they will reduce the time one-half, under the best conditions.

As is generally well known, business upon the canals during the season of 1874 was exceedingly dull; and, it is scarcely necessary to add, that rates were unprecedentedly low. Considering also that the business of the Baxter Company was not thoroughly organized and established, that it was without the needed terminal facilities, and without facilities at various points along the canal, the necessity for which developed itself very early in the season, and that the number of boats was so limited and variable as to render it impossible to guarantee the regular departure of boats at stated times from each end of the line, it must be conceded that the results attained by this line of boats were very highly satisfactory. A careful investigation of these results develops the interesting and important fact that the Baxter boats have demonstrated, beyond reasonable doubt, their ability not only to equal, but to exceed, the estimates of the engineer of the commission both as to speed and economy of movement.

Already the reduced time and the certainty of prompt delivery is drawing merchandise to the canals beyond the ability of the present fleet of steamers to carry; and we are informed that, within a few weeks, contracts for the transportation of merchandise and other freight to the West have been offered to and declined by the Baxter Company on account of their limited facilities.

I am of the opinion that the question of economy and adaptability of steam as a motive power on the canals of this State is removed beyond the sphere of physical experiment, and that ultimate and complete success now depends upon capital alone.

The Senate committee, at page 52 of their report, in comparing the average rail and water rates per bushel from Chicago to New York during the months of June, July, and August, and the months of December, January, and February, of the year 1872, say:

The average all-rail rate during the three summer months just named was twenty-seven cents, and the average of the winter months was thirty-nine cents; the winter average being 44.4 per cent. higher than the summer average when the completion of water transport was in full force.

Now, if under the old order of things transportation by water was able to produce a reduction of 44.4 per cent. in competition with railroads, where shall there be left a chance for doubt of its effectiveness when the cost of towage shall be reduced over 53 per cent., the time 50 per cent., and the arrival and departure of boats shall be regulated as precisely as that of railroad trains?

Sir, I have thus tried to show that this proposed improvement at the mouth of the Mississippi is only a part of one grand system, in which we are all alike interested. As to this particular method of performing the work there would seem to be left no reasonable ground for doubt. At the last session of this Congress nearly if not all of the Government engineers were opposed to the plan proposed by Captain Eads of improving the mouth of the Mississippi by means of jetties.

The measure was defeated. During the recess a board of seven civil engineers, appointed by the President pursuant to a special act of Congress, visited Europe and there made special examination of the jetty system at the mouth of the Vistula, the Danube, and the Rhone, and returning spent three weeks in examining the mouths of the Mississippi; the result of all which is, that all but one of these engineers unite in recommending the jetty system for this improvement.

The jetty system cannot be better explained than by a few extracts from Captain Eads's pamphlet. He says:

Jetties are simply dikes or levees under water, and are intended to act as banks to the river, to prevent its expanding and diffusing itself as it enters the sea.

It is a notable fact that where the banks of a river extend boldly out into the sea, no bar is formed at the entrance. It is where the banks or faucis terre (jaws of earth) are absent, as is the case in delta-forming rivers, that the bar is an invariable feature.

The bar results from the diffusion of the stream, as it spreads out fan-like in entering the sea. The diffusion of the river being the cause, the remedy manifestly lies in contracting it or in preventing the diffusion.

A glance at the accompanying map of the Southwest Pass reveals the narrow and uniform width of the pass, until it is within about seven and one-third miles of the bar, which is about three miles beyond the land's end. In this seven and one-third miles the river is building up and extending its own banks into the sea at the rate of eight or nine inches per day. Above this seven and one-third miles its work is finished. Its jetties are completed by its own forces, and will probably never change their location, although every time the stream overflows them fresh deposit will raise them still higher. It is therefore evident that the river itself is continually employing the jetty system, and that nature makes parallel and not converging jetties.

Since the white man has known the river, this distance between the bar and the narrow and completed banks of the pass above has been the same, namely, seven and one-half miles.

Now, suppose that by artificial means these natural jetties could be suddenly extended seven and one-third miles out to the bar; the volume of water would be almost if not exactly the same, and so would be the current. Instead of passing over the bar as it now does, at three feet per second, it would pass out from between these artificial jetties at the rate of over four feet per second. This artificial and parallel construction would give the stream at the present bar the width, depth, velocity, and volume almost exactly which it has to-day seven and one-third miles above the bar. Could the bar again reform afterward nearer than seven and one-third miles from the end of these artificial jetties?

At the rate it has been going out for the last forty years it would take the river sixty-five thousand days or one hundred and seventy-eight years to extend its jetties from where they are finished out to the present crest of the bar. All these years will be required to build up its foundations in the Gulf before it can complete its jetties to the present bar. Is it not evident, then, that one hundred and seventy-eight years hence, if the river be left alone, the bar will then be seven and one-third miles in advance of its present location? Is it not equally evident, if man should do in three or four years what it will require the river one hundred and seventy-eight years to do, that when the bar reappears it will be after the lapse of centuries, because it must be located at least seven miles beyond the artificial jetties, and where the water is now several hundred feet deep? Even if there be no currents whatever to distribute the sediment into more profound and distant depths, we will have gotten so far in advance of the bar-forming power of the river that it will require centuries for it to overtake the work of man and again build up its bar, for this must be done in greatly increased depths.

Mr. Speaker, it now seems to be conceded on all sides that this Captain Eads has established the reputation of a genius in civil engineering. An eminent French writer tells us that "genius is the logic of common sense." When we see a man by persistent pluck and energy overcome the obstacles which this one has; when we see him acting upon nature's hints, and demonstrating apparently to the most common understanding, that the weight of a great river current can be so thrown as to plow its own way through to the Gulf and maintain itself permanently, shall we not give him the full scope of his plan and pay him the $8,000,000 when his work is accomplished and tested according to the provisions of this bill? He asked nothing before.

Sir, one word further upon the cost of these various improvements and I have done. Since 1854 we have expended $40,000,000 for the improvement of the rivers and harbors of this country; and according to the fact stated in a speech made by Mr. WELLS, in discussion here last session, three-fourths of that amount has been expended east of the Alleghany Mountains. Since the adoption of the Constitution I find from a report of the Senate committee that we have expended $62,000,000 on public buildings, while on twenty thousand miles of the rivers of the West we have expended only the sum of $11,438,300.

Now, sir, I do not especially complain of these expenditures for public buildings. Where necessary, they should be constructed in a substantial manner and upon a scale of liberality and style to correspond with the present and future wants of the country. But what would be thought of the farmer who should expend thousands of dollars in the erection of a house and the cultivation of his land but refused to invest anything for the purpose of transporting his products to the market town? Twenty-six million dollars is a large sum of money; but England invested $40,000,000 to develop the culture of cotton in India, and little Holland pays annually $4,000,000 to keep her 12,000 windmills revolving; and since the beginning she has expended $2,000,000,000 in the construction of dikes to keep out the great sea waves.

We appropriate nearly $300,000,000 annually for various governmental purposes, and yet doubt and hesitate about completing improvements which will return a tenfold profit upon the investment and stimulate industrial interests and enterprises all over the country.

If these jetties are constructed now and remain permanent, one authority says it will take one hundred and twenty years to form bars again; another that it will take one hundred and thirty-eight years; a third that it will take one hundred and seventy-eight years; and a fourth that it will take two hundred years. I only wish to say that if it takes even one hundred and twenty years' time, the Pinchback trouble will probably be over, Louisiana will be at peace, and our descendants can then judge whether the jetty system had better be continued or locks and dams substituted in their stead.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana, obtained the floor.

Mr. STANARD. Does the gentleman from Indiana desire to speak to the bill?

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I want to offer an amendment, which I ask to have read.

Mr. STANARD. I will yield for the purpose of having it read for information.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Add at the end of section 2 as follows:

That the Secretary of War shall appoint a commission, composed of three engineers of the Army, one of whom shall be chief engineer, who shall from time to time examine the manner of the construction of the work herein provided for, and no money shall be paid on account of said construction until said commission shall have reported to the Secretary of War that the work done is of a permanent character and of durable materials.

Mr. STANARD. I am of the opinion that the substance of the amendment which the gentleman proposes to offer he will find not in the printed bill but in the substitute which the committee reported. I will state further that I am not disposed to allow amendments of this kind to be brought in here and considered in the hasty manner in which they would necessarily have to be considered here, as they have been before our committee and have been thoroughly discussed. This bill must be left in such shape that it can be accepted by the gentleman with whom we expect to deal. If the Government is desirous of having this work accomplished they must not put such provisions in the bill as will preclude and deter him from entering upon the work. Results are what we want, and in the bill as we have prepared it and presented it here no money is to be paid unless there are practical results from the execution of the contract. But Mr. Eads must be left free and not trammelled by prejudice or interest or by the ipse dixit of any Government engineer who might be sent in that capacity. There is a further provision made that the Secretary of War shall state in his annual report to Congress the amount that has been expended on the work, the progress made on it, and the nature of the work that has been performed, &c.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. COTTON in the chair.) The gentleman's time is exhausted.

Mr. STANARD. I now ask that the Clerk read what has been prepared and discussed by the committee, night and day, to cover this very subject, and which I think will be satisfactory to the gentleman from Indiana himself.

The Clerk read as follows:

Payments shall be made on certified statements of an engineer officer, who shall be detailed by the Secretary of War, and whose duty it shall be to report the depth of water and width of channel secured and maintained from time to time in said channel, and such other information as the Secretary of War may direct. When a channel of twenty-two feet depth of water, and of not less than two hundred feet in width, shall have been obtained by the action of said jetties and auxiliary works, $500,000 shall be paid; and after said depth and width of channel shall have been maintained for twelve months consecutively, $500,000 shall be paid with interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date when said depth and width was first obtained.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, it has not been discussed day and night in the House but by the committee, and I think the House will see that it will not cover the point which I desire to reach by the amendment I have offered. I only desire to occupy the time of the House for a very few minutes, and then yield to such gentlemen as desire to speak either for or against the bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, some time ago it was my fortune to visit the mouth of the Mississippi at the point where this work is proposed to be constructed. I was most profoundly impressed with the importance of opening that channel, to the end that the vast commerce of the great Mississippi Valley should have an unobstructed outlet to the sea.

After having said this much, I hope my friend from Missouri [Mr. STANARD] will not consider that I am speaking to this proposition in any unfriendly spirit. He says that in the hasty manner in which this matter is to be considered the House cannot properly consider the amendment I have submitted. This bill now before the House is one of very great importance. It involves the expenditure of $8,000,000. It proposes to enter into a contract with Mr. Eads and his associates for the construction of this work, he obligating himself or the bill providing that certain depths of water to certain widths shall be maintained in this channel for certain periods of time. The importance of this measure cannot be overestimated. It is a matter of great importance to the people, especially of that valley. It is a matter of very great consequence to the Treasury of the United States, and we should take time to consider any amendment necessary to secure a contract fair to the Government.

In looking over this bill—and I did not read it until my friend began explaining its provisions—it occurred to me that there was nothing in it which afforded adequate protection to the Government, taking into consideration the large sum of money that is to be expended. If members of the House will examine the bill they will find that it nowhere makes any provision indicating the character of the material out of which this work is to be constructed nor the manner of construction; nor does it make any provision whatever with reference to protecting the Government as regards the permanency of the work to be constructed. I therefore thought it would be well enough to put into it a provision by virtue of which the Government could know that this work was being constructed out of proper material and in a permanent manner. Certainly in making this great expenditure of money it is not contemplated that this work shall be for one year or two years nor for twenty years, but it is to be a work that is to last for generations to come. For that reason and that alone I have offered this amendment.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I will.

Mr. PARSONS. I will say to the gentleman that the Committee on Commerce reported an amendment which I think covers the very point to which my friend is now speaking.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I am glad my friend from Ohio [Mr. PARSONS] has called my attention to that. That amendment of the committee is written, not printed, and I did not see it until about the moment I sent up my amendment to be read. Upon an examination of that amendment of the committee the House will find that it does not reach the point that is reached by the amendment I have offered, if I understand it. I ask the attention of the House to it when it shall be again read, and gentlemen will then see that there is a very great difference between the two propositions.

The amendment which I have offered simply provides that there shall be appointed a commission, to consist of three engineers of the Army, one of whom shall be the engineer in chief; and that no payment shall be made on account of this work until that commission or board shall certify to the Secretary of War that it is being constructed in a permanent manner and of durable materials. That is the point I am seeking to reach by my amendment. It seems to me to be a reasonable proposition.

I think that no man who has ever visited that point can be otherwise than impressed as I was with the great importance of opening the mouth of the Mississippi River. In offering this amendment I do not do it in any spirit of factions opposition to this bill. I think that something ought to be done; and if we undertake to do this work in this manner, making a contract with parties to do it, there should be some security to the Government, some provision in the contract that it shall be constructed of suitable material and substantially done.

Mr. THOMPSON. Will the gentleman allow me to offer an amendment to this bill?

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I will yield for an amendment.

Mr. CONGER. Does the gentleman have the floor so that he can yield?

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I was recognized as entitled to the floor in my own right; and after I have yielded for an amendment, I will yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. COTTON.) The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] would have been recognized if he had claimed the floor at the expiration of the time of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. STANARD.] Until four o'clock is allowed for debate.

Mr. STANARD. And the previous question is to be regarded as ordered at that time.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. And my amendment is pending.

Mr. THOMPSON. I move to amend the first section of the bill by striking out the following:

And in the event of the privileges and authority herein granted being thus forfeited by the default of said Eads to substantially commence said work and to diligently prosecute the same as above stated, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to cause plans and specifications for the said work to be made, and to commence the construction of the same under the direction of the Chief of United States Engineers without delay; and the funds herein provided to be paid to said Eads and associates shall be applied, under the Secretary of War, in the construction of said works.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STANARD] having charge of this bill has stated to this House that the strong inducement for its passage was that it contained a proposition to do this work at a large reduction, about 50 per cent. of what the board of engineers had estimated it could be done for. Now, in my judgment, the bill as it now stands is a perfect delusion. It would almost seem that the bill was for the very purpose of insinuating the Government into the making of this contract, and then binding it to do the work which the contractor would decline to do. The portion of the bill which I have moved to strike out makes it obligatory upon the Government to take charge of and perform this work, no matter at what expense, if Mr. Eads should decline to perform the work or accept the privileges which this bill proposes to give him. Now, if his offer or bid is 50 per cent. less than the Government can do the work for, and less than it will really cost, he has no intention of ever commencing this work. But if we pass the bill and he refuses to commence the work, the Government is bound to do it, cost what it may. I want, therefore, to test the sincerity of this bidder. If he intends to do this work, let him bind himself to do it; and let us strike out the clause which will shift the burden from his shoulders to the shoulders of the Government. If he intends to do the work, if he is able to do it and is acting in good faith, strike out this clause, and I will vote that he shall have the contract. But leave that clause in as a cover to compel the Government to assume the carrying on of this work, cost what it may, and I must vote against the bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. COTTON in the chair.) The gentleman has twenty-five minutes.

Mr. CONGER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL.]

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker, the exhaustive and able speech of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STANARD] renders it unnecessary, perhaps, that I should say very much upon this bill, or that any further discussion be had. It seems to me that this measure has been brought forward in such a manner that the House cannot fail at once to grasp it in all its magnitude and in all its beneficent results. I do not think a more important measure has been presented to this Congress than this, and I am glad thus far to discover the favorable spirit in which it has been received. No measure of the last session of this Congress was more cordially indorsed by the people of the Northwest than the measure that passed the House providing for the construction of the canal known as the Fort Saint Philip Canal.

Throughout the entire Northwest that proposition was gladly received and cordially indorsed; and those men of whatsoever party who voted for that project, now to culminate, I hope, in the passage of this bill, will be found, if the election returns are scanned and analyzed, to have been indorsed by the people in their ballots in the elections of November of last year.

I could (but it is entirely unnecessary) speak of the valley of the Mississippi River. To this great valley the Mississippi River is its only sea. With its obstructed mouth this river does not perform for this great section of the country what nature intended it should do. With the mouth improved and with a free passage from the Falls of Saint Anthony out into the Gulf, this river becomes to the great Northwest an inland sea, and the vast productions of the vast Northwest will find a ready outlet not simply to the markets of the New World but to those of the Old.

Mr. Speaker, the Mississippi Valley is to be in the future of this Republic the great grain-growing section. It must not, therefore, be disregarded in our legislation. It is in the interest of the Government and of the entire country that this river now be taken care of and permanently improved.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] this morning spoke about retrenchment, and stated that by cutting off the appropriations for the rivers and harbors we might appropriate a less sum of money to meet the current expenses of the Government. Let me say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that neither will his party nor any party sustain a policy that lets alone this grand Republic of ours and allows her to remain undeveloped. Strike down the appropriations for rivers and harbors, and you strike a solid blow at the inland-commerce of the country; you strike a blow at the industries of the country; and you still more completely bind the country in that sleep in which she now too soundly reposes.

Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that this Congress would close up with some legislation that would inspire the country. I do not ask that it be partisan; I do not ask that this side of the House simply inaugurate this kind of legislation; but I ask that this Congress inspire hope in the country by more liberal legislation. We need today a generous and liberal system of internal improvements; and those parties and those men are to receive indorsement that are willing to take hold of this question.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I hope that this improvement will now be carried on; and when other sections of the country come up expecting to receive recognition, I pledge every section my vote, whether it be an improvement North or West or South.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CONGER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. WHITTHORNE.]

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Mr. Speaker, thanking the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] for the courtesy which enables me to occupy the floor at this time, I have, in the brief space allotted me, hurriedly to give the reasons which induce me to give my support to the Eads proposition for the opening of the outlets of the Mississippi River.

At the last session of this Congress I voted for the ship-canal project, which bill now lies in the Senate unacted on. And I also voted for the organization of the commission under which a "survey of the mouth of the Mississippi River" was directed to be made with a view "to determine the best method of obtaining and maintaining a depth of water sufficient for the purposes of commerce, either by a canal from said river to the waters of the Gulf or by deepening one or more of the natural outlets of said river."

The report of that board of engineers has been made and now lies upon our table, and taken in connection with the report of the Committee on Transportation in the Senate, together with the non-action of the Senate upon the bill passed by this House, makes it morally certain that unless the jettee-system improvement is adopted nothing will be done to open this "mediterranean sea" of America to the commerce of the world.

A question has been raised whether the jettee system should be put through under the control of officers of the Government, or, in other words, by the Government, or shall it be put through under and by contract with Mr. Eads and his associates.

If the improvement, Mr. Speaker, of the mouth of the Mississippi is now to be made or inaugurated, then I am clear in the opinion it should be done under the contract with Captain Eads as proposed by the pending bill. What is the Eads proposition? It is in brief—

To build parallel jetties at the mouth of the Southwest Pass, reducing the width of the river from two miles to one-quarter of a mile, thus increasing the velocity of the current and enabling the great flood of western waters to do its own dredging, taking up and carrying forward the vast accumulation at the bar and casting it into the Gulf beyond. He proposes to achieve this mighty and most beneficent work at his own risk and cost, asking not one dollar in compensation or reimbursement until the enterprise is so far completed as to afford a good, safe, and permanent channel to the open sea. He proposes to finally deepen the channel to thirty feet, and after twenty years of trial and approval by a Government commission, to receive $3,000,000 for the whole undertaking. This sum is not more than one-fourth of what would be saved to the West and Southwest in a single year's transportation of our almost illimitable products.

It is a better one for the Treasury in its present crippled condition. It is not so full of risk. It has in substance the support of the board of engineers, to whom this whole matter was referred. It has received the encouragement of those commercial communities more immediately interested in this great work. In addition, allow me to say that

I prefer the "contract system" than for the Government to engage directly in works of any kind. It is better for the people in that it is more economic and less provocative of fraud and corruption.

Now, sir, the main question is, shall this work be done? And, first, is it within the power of Congress to direct it; and is it demanded by the public interests?

The constitutional question has been heretofore ably and in my opinion satisfactorily answered. Long years ago the strictest constructionists of the powers possessed by the Federal Congress conceded that the Mississippi was such a channel of commerce, confined to no section, traversing in its course States and dividing in its sweeping march commonwealths, gathering its power amid climes of snow and ice, and losing its strength under the influence of the tropics, that it was national in all of its relations. Upon its bosom is borne an annual commerce in excess of the entire foreign commerce of the United States, estimated to be in excess of $2,000,000,000. Duty to the States that are bordered by it and its navigable tributaries, and whose products are dependent upon it for their value in easy and cheap transportation to market—these considerations, which might be elaborated and amplified, clearly demonstrate that the improvement of the Mississippi River is not only within the power but within the line of positive duty upon the part of Congress.

Recently, sir, the Legislature of my State, the State of Tennessee, instructed her Senators and requested her Representatives in Congress to support the project now before one of our committees known as the Southern Pacific Railroad. While not now yielding assent to the particular measure to which they request my support, yet I am sufficiently acquainted with that honorable body to know that the motives that underlay their instructions and request were the development of the material and political prosperity of our common State, and with that the entire country. I may be permitted differentially to say here that in the improvement of the Mississippi River and its tributaries, more than the Pacific or any other railroad, there is wealth, prosperity, and commercial freedom to the people of Tennessee, the West, the South, and the entire country.

In the very nature of things it cannot be a monopoly; it must be an open highway, free to all who choose to avail themselves of its freedom, power, and privileges. It is one that cannot be controlled by a "favored few" in our own country or subjected to the death-grip of a foreign bondholder. Neither the superciliousness of office, the fraud of agents, or reckless issue of stocks can embarrass the free course of trade thereon.

In these and other aspects of the proposition it becomes more important than any pending measure before Congress. And why? The importance of the Mississippi Valley in its present resources and its capacity of production and support of population in the future can hardly be estimated. Says a recent writer:

This valley contains 768,000,000 acres of the finest lands on the face of the globe, enough to make more than one hundred and fifty States as large as Massachusetts; more territory than the area of Great Britain, France, Spain, Austria, Prussia, European Turkey, and the Italian peninsula combined. If peopled as Massachusetts is, it would contain five times the present population of the United States; and as France is, it would hold as many people as the whole area of Europe contains; and as Belgium and the Netherlands are, with not the same danger of famine, it would contain four hundred million souls, largely more than one-third of the entire population of the world.

Traversed by the important rivers of the Ohio, the Missouri, the Illinois, the Tennessee, the Cumberland, the Arkansas, the Red, and others, it presents a river navigation which years ago drew from that eminent statesman of the West, Hon. Thomas H. Benton, the following graphic words:

The river navigation of the great West is the most wonderful on the globe; and since the application of steam-power to the propulsion of vessels, possesses the essential qualities of open navigation, speed, distance, cheapness, magnitude of cargoes, are all these, and without the perils of the sea with storms and enemies. The steamboat is the ship of the river, and finds in the Mississippi and its tributaries the amplest theater for the diffusion and display of its power. Wonderful river! Connected with the seas by the head and the mouth; stretching its arms toward the Atlantic and the Pacific; lying in a valley, which is a valley from the Gulf of Mexico to Hudson's Bay; drawing its first waters not from the rugged mountains but from the plateau of the lakes, in the center of the continent, and in communication with the sources of the Saint Lawrence and the streams which take their course north to Hudson's Bay, draining the largest extent of the richest land; collecting the products of every clime, even the frigid, to bear the whole to markets in the South, there to meet the products of the entire world. Such is the Mississippi!

And adds:

Who can calculate the aggregate of its advantages and the magnitude of its future results!

Since these words were uttered by that great statesman, the progress of the States of the Mississippi Valley has been dazzling in its rapidity and wonderful in its results. May I not here appropriately call your attention to the details of the present wealth of these States. I quote from the recent estimates made by the able statistician of the Agricultural Bureau of the value of the products of the principal crops of these States, and they are as follows:

Value of products of principal crops.

Ohio	$106,423,700
West Virginia	14,187,511
Indiana	70,536,560
Illinois	117,998,170
Missouri	54,105,240
Kentucky	54,481,136
Tennessee	41,372,410
Iowa	83,102,210

Kansas	$28,311,200
Nebraska	6,848,882
Mississippi	17,064,320
Arkansas	15,510,090
Louisiana	8,528,750
Texas	23,057,970
Michigan	49,265,000
Wisconsin	58,814,400
Minnesota	37,198,350
Territories	2,000,000
Total	788,887,659
Add Pennsylvania	115,965,700
Total	904,853,359

If, then, to this you add the value of live stock, the value of their minerals, oils, and the manufactures of woolen and cotton goods, you will have a grand total approximating three billions per annum.

It is a safe and reliable estimate of the value of the commerce which is carried per annum on the waters of the Mississippi, when it is stated to be over $2,000,000,000; and when we pause to contemplate the magnitude of the future of these States, (that magnitude we can reasonably calculate when we turn to the census tables of 1860 and 1870, which show a rapid increase in population and wealth,) the importance and necessity of the improvement of this great and national channel of commerce cannot for one moment be denied. It is important and necessary to the cheap and successful transportation of the products of these States and their interchange in the markets of the world. It is an important check to the monopolies in transportation now controlling the commerce of these States. It is important as an aid in the development of the capacities of this great valley to the support of the millions who inhabit "the uttermost parts of the earth."

The people of Tennessee feel a deep interest in this proposed work, not only on account of the considerations already referred to, but from the fact that two of the important tributaries of the Mississippi River traverse the State of Tennessee and the Mississippi itself limits its western boundary. A large amount of its trade is done upon these waters, and with a free outlet to the seas a much larger amount will be done.

I trust, sir, before concluding, I may be allowed to mention another consideration which prompts me in my advocacy of this measure. I believe the hearty co-operation of Congress in the improvement of this river and its tributaries will be legislation healing and pacific in its political results. It will tend to bind together people but recently embittered toward each other. It will be accepted as a measure of love as well as justice by a people who feel that the General Government does not regard them with favor. It will bring into closer relations the people of the West and South. It is a measure that at once gives assurance to the people of all sections that it is the intention and purpose of the Government to unite by kindness and justice this people into one Union.

Mr. CONGER. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. SHELTON.]

Mr. SHELTON. Mr. Speaker, it is well known to the House that at the last session I opposed a bill for putting jetties at the mouth of the Mississippi River and favored the construction of a canal. I have never changed my views as to the proper method of improving navigation there. When the commission of engineers were appointed, there was a tacit agreement on both sides that they would abide the result. I propose to keep faith upon that question. Still, believing that the jetty system is only an experiment, I want that experiment tried at the expense of somebody else than the Government of the United States; for I am satisfied we cannot have a canal until this experiment has been tried and the plan exploded. If it shall be a success, we want nothing more; but if it shall prove to be a failure, then I think we can secure a method for the improvement of the navigation of the mouth of the Mississippi River in reference to which we can all agree. That is all I have to say.

Mr. CONGER. I now yield for three minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. SYPHER.]

Mr. SYPHER. It is a very short time to say anything on this subject. I will say that I have not changed my mind on this subject since last Congress, when I made a speech in favor of the canal. I still believe that is the best way to improve the mouth of the Mississippi River, but when I cannot get what I believe is right and what I want, I will take what I can get, and therefore will support this bill.

We had an investigation on this subject by seven engineers of the United States Army, six of whom reported in favor of a canal. We passed an act, however, allowing the President to appoint a commission of seven engineers, able in their profession, and they reported, six in favor of the jetty system, and one only in favor of the canal system. Here, then, is a pretty fair balance of the engineer talent of the country, and they have left us to decide, we who are not engineers, what we shall do on this subject of the improvement of the Mississippi River, and to make the necessary appropriation for it.

If this bill is properly guarded and the appropriation shall not be squandered in fruitless experiments, I am satisfied with it. I am in favor of an improvement whether by jetty or by canal, but give us something and as soon as possible.

I thank the gentleman for the courtesy of yielding to me even for such a brief time.

Mr. CONGER. I now yield for three minutes to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. PLATT.]

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield to no gentleman on the floor of this House in an earnest desire to see the mouth of the Mississippi River properly improved, and I think now the way to improve it, as I believed one year ago when the subject was before the House, is by the jetty system.

But I object to this bill because for the first time in the history of this country we attempt by Congress to make a contract with an individual—to make through Congress directly a contract with one individual to carry on a great work of internal improvement under appropriation of money from the Treasury. I object to it on that ground, believing that this work should be placed in the hands of the men belonging to the Engineer Corps of the Army, who have always justified the confidence reposed in them by Congress in carrying on this character of improvement under the Government. I believe in the whole history of the country there has not been an instance on record where the engineers of the United States Army have failed to carry out properly any work of this character intrusted to them by Congress, and certainly no one has ever been charged even by implication with spending one dollar of the public money except for the purpose for which it was appropriated by Congress, or of making anything for themselves in the way of speculation upon Government works.

I object therefore, Mr. Speaker, to that particular feature of the bill; and I hope if anything be done by the Government the work will be placed in the hands of the engineers of the Army, and not as it is proposed in this bill one individual shall be selected to whom a contract shall be given. Least of all, sir, am I in favor of giving this work to the gentleman named in this bill; for if his estimates in regard to this work are as much out of the way as his estimates for the great work upon which he bases his reputation as an engineer, where he calculated it would cost $4,000,000 and it in the end cost more than $15,000,000, I think for one he is too expensive an experiment for the Government of the United States to afford especially in the present condition of the Treasury. I therefore hope the gentleman having charge of the bill, while I shall vote cheerfully to aid all I can to give Government aid to improve the navigation of the mouth of the Mississippi River by means of the jetty system—I hope that gentlemen will not press the bill to its passage until it shall be so amended as to provide that the work shall be placed where it properly belongs, under the superintendence of the officers of the Engineer Corps of the United States Army.

I am sorry, in the few minutes allowed me, there is not time to do justice to this question.

Mr. CONGER. I now yield for two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. LEWIS.]

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Virginia thinks this work should go into the hands of the officers of the Army Engineer Corps. I do not agree with him. This is a project which for some reason that board of Army engineers has opposed, and it is something they will oppose unless they can have the whole control of it.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. The gentleman from Tennessee certainly does not desire to do injustice to the engineer officers of the United States Army when he knows that six of them out of seven on the commission reported in favor of this jetty system.

Mr. LEWIS. The gentleman does not know what he is talking about. The Chief of the Engineer Corps of the Army and nearly all of his subordinates have been opposed to this. It is a work which demands some genius, and they are not men of genius but men of routine. They are old fogies, although they may be useful and worthy men.

I wish, sir, to see this work put into the hands of a great engineer, who had sagacity enough to conceive the subject and present it to the world when these old fogies were all against it. It is like a thousand other things which have been done. Even this sleeping old board tells you it can be done. But it shall be done by other men, by men of genius, ability, and intellect. And then perhaps they will be ready to cry out that it is their work, and cackle over it as though they had laid the egg.

It was so in the improvement of the rivers of Europe. It was great minds like Sir Charles Hartley and others, not the sleepy boards of old fogies that have conceived the great improvements that have changed the whole face of Europe so far as the river system is concerned.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Will the gentleman name the men of genius he would substitute for the old fogies, that I may have them put in my amendment?

Mr. LEWIS. I cannot yield to the gentleman, because he is a little crazy on the subject. He has offered an amendment the result of which, although not so designed by him, would be to kill the bill. This cannot be fettered in the way he proposes. Let us have a fair, square thing of it.

Nor can I agree with another gentleman who has said he is opposed to jetties and regarded them as experiments. The experience of the engineering works of Europe has settled the question. For the last twenty-five years not a river has been improved there except by jetties, with the exception of the river Rhone, which was improved by a canal, and the head engineer, himself told the world that that was a land speculation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, I have not time now to enter at all into the merits of this bill, nor do I propose to do so. After the previous question is ordered I propose to address the House for a few moments.

I wish to say simply this, that this project, this plan which at the last session of Congress did not receive the entire approval of the Committee on Commerce or of the House, was referred by the unanimous consent almost of the House to a board of engineers, carefully selected, who should report on the jetty system of the whole world and the probabilities of its success at the mouth of the Mississippi. I was one of those who at that time had great doubts of the sufficiency of the jetty system to accomplish the object that all seemed to desire in opening the mouth of the Mississippi.

I am free to say—as I then agreed that my judgment in the matter should be controlled to a great extent by the conclusions of this able board—I am free to say that, having examined their report, having studied the analogies between the rivers that have been improved in the Old World by this system and the mouth of the Mississippi, I have come to the conclusion that the system of jetties is not only practicable, but may be considered safe in its application to the Mississippi.

The bill, which was before the last session of Congress, and which was then advocated and discussed very fully, has been amended now, with the concurrence of the Committee on Railroads and Canals and the Committee on Commerce, after many sittings and the most careful investigation; so that I think it will commend itself to the judgment of the House as being as nearly perfect perhaps as it is possible to make such a bill. There are some amendments, like that of my friend from Indiana, [Mr. WILSON,] which had the most careful consideration of the committee; and the portion of the tenth section of the substitute forming the written part of this bill was, I think, approved generally by all the members of the committee as the best substitute in that direction that could be adopted to guarantee to those who furnish the money to do this important work with that security which would enable them to bring capitalists into their scheme. There is another amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio to which the committee accede. It is to strike out on the third page, line 41, the words "without action by Congress." The committee also agree to the amendment to strike out the remaining words of that first section.

The SPEAKER. The House directed that at four o'clock the previous question should be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments. The first question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. THOMPSON,] to strike out all of the first section after the word "Congress," in the forty-first line.

Mr. CONGER. The committee recommend the acceptance of that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment offered by Mr. WILSON, of Indiana, as follows:

Add to section 2 these words:

Provided, That the Secretary of War shall appoint a commission, composed of three engineers of the Army, one of whom shall be the chief engineer, who shall from time to time examine the manner of construction of the work herein provided for; and no money shall be paid on account of such construction until said commission shall have reported to the Secretary of War that the work done is of a permanent character and of durable materials.

Mr. HURLBUT. Before this is voted on I desire to have read the part added in writing to section 10, beginning with the words "and it shall be the duty."

The latter part of section 10 was again read.

The question being put on the amendment of Mr. WILSON, of Indiana, there were ayes 44, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The question recurred upon ordering the bill, as amended, to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to make a verbal correction in line 2, of section 9, to change the word "may" to "shall;" so that it will read:

Sec. 9. That in case of death or other disability of said Eads before the completion of said works, the same shall be prosecuted and completed by his legal representatives and his associates aforesaid, with the same powers, rights, obligations, and compensations as if done by him in person.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question recurred on the passage of the bill, and being put, the bill was passed.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. Will it now be in order to move to limit debate on the third section of the tariff bill?

The SPEAKER. It will not. The Committee of the Whole rose by order of the House for the purpose of dispatching this business, and it having been disposed of, the committee must resume its session, and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] will take the Chair.

TAX AND TARIFF BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. HALE, of Maine, in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being House bill No. 4680, to further protect the sinking fund and provide for the exigencies of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose the Clerk had just finished reading the third section of the bill.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I move on behalf of the Committee on Ways and Means an amendment to the third section, to strike out at the end of line 5 the word "July" and insert in lieu thereof the word "May." That is a change in the time when the repeal of this tax shall take effect. I also move to amend the section by adding at the end thereof the following:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may, under such regulations as he may prescribe, pay to manufacturers of matches a sum of not less than $10 in any case for stamps and stamped paper unused or affixed to matches at the time this section shall take effect.

These amendments come from the Committee on Ways and Means. The first proposes that the tax shall be repealed from the 1st of May instead of the 1st of July. The second is a provision that is universally adopted in such cases, making provision for payment for stamps on hand and unused. The amendments are so simple that I know I need not take up the time of the committee in discussing them further.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I move to strike out the entire section, and I send to the Clerk's desk a communication from manufacturers of matches in various parts of the country, which I ask the Clerk to read, and after which I will say only a few words.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 17, 1875.

DEAR SIR: Respectfully referring you to your proposal to move an amendment to the tax bill, for the purpose of striking out the section which repeals the stamp tax on matches, we give the following reasons why the match manufacturers wish the tax retained:

First. It operates as a protection against imported matches, which are required by law to be stamped before they are sold in this country, the same as those of domestic manufacture, and the importers having no facilities for doing this work of stamping, which involves the opening of the packages and the cost of repacking, they are deterred from importing them, and few or none are imported. Should the tax be repealed, large quantities will be brought in from abroad, as they can be laid down in our markets and sold for less than the cost of production here.

Second. The stamp tax has been for eleven years so large an item in our business, which is adjusted and organized on that basis, that its repeal involves a complete revolution in our whole business arrangements, the result of which will we think affect us injuriously.

Third. The tax has not been complained of by the manufacturers as a body, nor by a majority of them, nor to any considerable extent by dealers and consumers; all are apparently satisfied with it, and it would be difficult to find another example of so heavy a tax being levied and collected with so little opposition and so few complaints.

Fourth. The tax yields to the Government a large sum at a merely nominal cost for collection, is fairly and honestly paid, is evenly distributed over the whole population, and its payment scarcely felt by the poorest consumer.

Fifth. The repeal of the tax will involve a temporary stoppage of business, lasting until the repeal takes effect, and while it lasts depriving our operatives of work at a time when they need it sorely.

Sixth. And finally, it seems useless to repeal a tax which works so well, is felt so little, and is paid so willingly, and at the same time impose heavier taxes upon other interests which are already complaining of their burdens, and the collection of which will be difficult and costly.

There are many other reasons for the opposition of the manufacturers to the repeal of this tax, but the foregoing cover the main ground and we hope will be of some use to you in presenting the case; and we will thank you for any effort you may make in that direction.

Very respectfully,

O. C. Barber, of the Barber Match Company, Akron, Ohio; James Eaton & Son, Utica, New York; Wm. Gates, by W. B. Gates, Frankfort, New York, representing F. Zaiss & Co. of Philadelphia, New York Match Company of New York, Wm. Roeber of New York, John Locher of New York, Clark Match Company of Connecticut, and Hotchkiss Match Company of Connecticut; Wm. H. Swift of the Swift & Courtney & Beecher Company; E. G. Byam, of Byam, Carlton & Co., also representing H. Stanton, Syracuse, New York, and Messenger & Sweet, Norton, Massachusetts.

Hon. J. D. WARD,

House of Representatives, Washington.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. That communication is signed by various manufacturers of matches in the East and it is also indorsed by some from the West. I desire to state further that from this source the revenue received during the last year was $1,326,755. Out of that the proportion paid by the men whose names are appended to this communication was $845,800, or more than half of the entire amount. I do not desire to debate the question further than to say that if there is any tax in the country which is fairly, widely, thoroughly distributed through the country it is the tax upon this article. It is an article of universal use, and the amount of revenue received from it is $2,800,000 a year. I do not think that there is a man in the whole country who feels the burden of this source of taxation; and therefore I hold that it is wrong in principle and unfair to strike this article from the list of taxable articles in a bill to raise internal revenue.

Mr. DAWES. I will just state the reasons which induced the committee to put this section in the bill. There has been for three years a very strong pressure from the western part of the country to have this tax on matches repealed. Ever since this bill was introduced parties have appeared before the committee from that section, from Detroit and from other portions of the western country, asking for a repeal of this tax.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order. It is impossible to hear what is going on in the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts will suspend his remarks until order is restored, and gentlemen who desire to converse will please retire to the cloak-room.

Mr. DAWES, (after a pause.) In addition to the fact that this is a burden upon the men who use matches, which are of universal consumption, there is this other fact to be considered. It requires a capital of $30,000 or $40,000 to be invested in the stamps used by these large manufacturers. You will see at once that no small manufacturer can carry that large amount of capital in stamps. The large manufacturers get a discount on their stamps provided they get a large amount of them, and the smaller manufacturers cannot invest enough money in stamps alone to obtain the advantage in this way resulting to the large manufacturer. The effect has been to break up all the smaller manufacturers of matches, and to concentrate the manufacture in the hands of several large establishments. In that way we have unwittingly made it a monopoly.

On the other hand, it is true, as has been stated in the communication which was read at the Clerk's desk, that the very tax itself is a protection to the American manufacturer of matches, because the foreign manufacturer, in addition to the duty which he has to pay when he gets here, is obliged to take his matches apart and put a revenue stamp on each hundred of them. In Sweden matches are made cheaper than they are anywhere else in the world. The Swedish match goes into the English market and drives out the English manufactured article, and it would come in here and drive out our manufacture if it was not for this protection.

I will state that all the opposition to the existing tax on matches comes from Detroit and in that vicinity; and all the desire to keep this tax and burden upon the people seems to come from the East. I believe I have stated this as clearly as if I was charging a jury. If you keep this tax on we shall save $2,500,000 of revenue. If you take it off you will expose the match manufacturer to competition with foreign producers, unless by enabling every man to set up his little shop you can in that way keep out the foreign manufactured article. You benefit persons of large capital by keeping the tax on, and you will encourage the small manufacturers by taking it off.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CESSNA. The gentleman's charge is so impartial that I wish he would tell us how he wants us to vote and how he intends himself to vote.

The question was upon striking out section 3 as amended; and upon a division there were—ayes 66, noes 53; no quorum voting.

Mr. FIELD. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. DAWES, and Mr. WARD of Illinois, were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were ayes 109.

Before the noes were counted,

Mr. DAWES (one of the tellers) said: I do not ask for any further count, as everybody seems to be in favor of striking out the section.

Accordingly the section was stricken out.

The Clerk read section 4 of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 4. That on all molasses (not including tank-bottoms, sirup of sugar-cane juice, melada, or concentrated melada) and on sugars, according to the Dutch standard in color, imported from foreign countries, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, in addition to the duties now imposed in Schedule G, section 2504 of the Revised Statutes, an amount equal to 25 per cent. of said duties as levied upon the several grades therein designated.

Mr. KASSON. By instruction of the Committee on Ways and Means, I move as a substitute for the section just read that which I send to the Clerk's desk:

The Clerk read as follows:

That on all molasses, concentrated molasses, tank-bottoms, sirup of sugar-cane juice, melada, and on sugar, according to the Dutch standard in color, imported from foreign countries, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, in addition to the duties now imposed in Schedule G, section 2504 of the Revised Statutes, an amount equal to 25 per cent. of said duties as levied upon the several articles and grades herein designated: Provided, That concentrated melada or concrete shall hereafter be classed as sugar dutiable according to color of the Dutch standard; and melada shall be known and defined as an article made in the process of sugar-making, being the cane-juice boiled down to the sugar point, and containing all the sugar and molasses resulting from the boiling process, without any process of purging or clarification; and any and all productions of the sugar-cane imported in bags, mats, baskets, or other than tight packages shall be considered sugar and dutiable as such; And provided further, That of the drawback on refined sugars exported allowed by section 3019 of the Revised Statutes of the United States only 1 per cent. of the amount so allowed shall be retained by the United States.

Mr. KASSON. I will say that this section, offered now as a substitute, is the result of a careful investigation of the subject, assisted by all those interested at home and the importing interest, and as such I suppose it will be satisfactory to the Committee of the Whole. I will answer any question any gentleman desires to ask.

Mr. EAMES. Were these different interests represented before the committee, the importers, the refiners, and also the producers?

Mr. KASSON. They were, and this is the result of that interview, and it is thought to be satisfactory to all interested. It differs from the section of the bill simply in including melada, which ought to be included and would have been included except for information from an official source, which was afterward found out not to be correct. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is it in order now to move to strike out the original section?

The CHAIRMAN. A substitute has been adopted for the section as reported.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the section as amended.

Mr. DAWES. Is that in order?

Mr. E. R. HOAR. Will it be in order to move to substitute for this section a provision imposing a duty on the importation of tea and coffee?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already ruled upon a similar question that such a motion would not be in order now, but that the object may be accomplished by introducing a provision at the end of the bill.

The Clerk read the next section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 5. That so much of section 2503 of the Revised Statutes as provides that only 90 per cent. of the several duties and rates of duty imposed on certain articles therein enumerated by section 2504 shall be levied, collected, and paid be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and the several duties and rates of duty prescribed in said section 2504 shall be and remain as by that section levied, without abatement of 10 per cent. as provided in section 2503.

Mr. HATHORN. I move to amend the section by adding the following:

That on all imported natural mineral waters there shall be collected and paid the following rates of duty, namely:

For each bottle or jug containing not more than one quart, 3 cents, and in addition thereto 25 per cent. ad valorem; containing more than one quart, 3 cents for each additional quart or fractional part thereof, and in addition thereto 25 per cent. ad valorem; otherwise than in bottles, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. DAWES. I rise to a point of order. I submit that the amendment is not germane. There is nothing about mineral waters in this section.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is nothing in section 5 in reference to the subject-matter of this amendment, the point of order is well taken.

Mr. BURCHARD. I move to amend by striking out section 5.

Mr. KELLOGG. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it not in order to offer amendments perfecting the section, before the motion to strike out?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] has made the motion to strike out the section, and is entitled to five minutes upon that motion. Afterward, it will be in order to move amendments perfecting the section.

Mr. BURCHARD. Mr. Chairman, the bill as reported from the Committee on Ways and Means, and as explained by the members of that committee, would raise from thirty-five to thirty-six million dollars additional revenue. No gentleman has claimed upon this floor that the Treasury needs even that much either for current expenditures or to make provision for the sinking fund. The Secretary of the Treasury tells us that in the next fiscal year he expects to need only $12,000,000 of additional revenue. He shows in his report that during the present fiscal year he will need only $20,000,000. For the last fiscal year there was a deficiency of only $16,000,000. We did not undertake to make that up; gentlemen even on our side of the House did not claim last year that we ought to make it up. We refused to adopt any measure of that kind in the then existing condition of the industries of the country. It is said that our industries are in no better condition now; that the situation of the country is such that we ought not to increase unnecessarily the burdens upon the people. The additions which have been made to the bill will give us $5,000,000 more than the amount that would have been obtained from the bill as first reported. The amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Cox,] imposing additional duty upon champagne, will give us an increased revenue of over $600,000. The amount of duty received last year upon the importation of champagne was $1,230,488, and an increase of 50 per cent. will yield in addition $615,244.

Cigars gave us nearly $10,000,000 of revenue during the last fiscal year; and an addition of 20 per cent. to the present duty will give us nearly $2,000,000 more. We have stricken from the bill the repeal of the tax on matches, so that our revenues in that respect will be about two and a half million dollars more than the estimate on which this bill was based.

The importations of champagne for the last four fiscal years, at $3 per dozen pints and $6 per dozen quarts, have been, in—

Year.	Value.	Duty.
1871.....	$1,957,935	$1,180,601
1872.....	2,426,619	1,437,060
1873.....	2,421,823	1,408,941
1874.....	2,244,420	1,230,488

At $4.50 and $9 rates the increased duties on last year's importations would have been $615,249. Cigars, at $5 per thousand, yielded an internal-revenue duty in the last fiscal year of $9,333,592. An increase of $1 per thousand would give an increased revenue from cigars manufactured in this country of $1,866,718.

The bill will give on consumption for last fiscal year of internal tax on duty-paying articles as follows:

Distilled spirits, on 61,814,878 gallons.....	$18,544,463
Tobacco, on 104,562,548 pounds.....	4,180,102
Sugar and molasses, 25 per cent. increase on $34,852,600.....	8,713,150
Champagne.....	615,240
Cigars.....	1,866,718
Total.....	33,919,677

The bill, as now amended by the committee, and striking out the fifth section, will give about $34,000,000. It will raise with the section remaining over $40,000,000, an amount almost double what the most gloomy estimates claim will be needed for the next fiscal year.

I submit, then, that we shall raise from this bill, without the adoption of the pending section, all and more than all that the Committee on Ways and Means believed to be necessary for the wants of the Government. For that reason alone, without urging other considerations, I submit that this section should be struck out.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment. I will say at the outset to my friend from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] that so far as I know the manufacturers in our section of the country have not asked for this restoration of duty. They were opposed to the reduction in the first instance; it cut down duties 10 per cent. without regard to whether the revenues demanded it or not; and it was an unfortunate measure; for instead of bringing in more revenue, as some gentlemen urged would be its effect, and especially my free-trade friend from New York, [Mr. COX,] we had actually less importations for the nine months following the adoption of the measure, and consequently a smaller amount of duties than we had received under the higher rate. A report from the Secretary of the Treasury, made in answer to a resolution I offered the first session of this Congress, discloses this fact: When you strike off a duty from articles produced in this country, and cripple our own manufacturers by it, you make them and their employes less able to buy foreign goods; and while you produce less at home, if business is dull and people are idle or out of employment, you will find they will buy a less amount of foreign goods, and your revenues are thus diminished.

But there is one class of materials and goods, wools and woollens, upon which I think the duty had better remain as it is rather than be restored to the former rate of duty, for I do not believe that the growers of wool or the manufacturers of woollen goods will be benefited by a disturbance of the present duty. The increase of duty on wools will more than offset any advantage our manufacturers can derive from the restoration of the 10 per cent. on their manufactures; and if our wool-growing friends could only see it, they would get a better market for their own wools by a lower duty on foreign wools. I say once for all that our people are not asking any change in the tariff on their manufactures. They did not call for this 10 per cent. reduction in the first place; they believed it was a mistake, and it has proved to be a mistake; and now they do not ask its repeal, unless so far as it may be necessary to give the Government more revenue. Do not say you put this back because our manufacturers ask it.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Is the gentleman opposed to the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction?

Mr. KELLOGG. No, sir; not if the revenues require it; but do not do it on our account and lay it to the manufacturers. I was opposed to the reduction; it cut down all our manufactures 10 per cent. in duty. We remember how that 10 per cent. reduction was brought about. We had discussed the tariff here for some two weeks and the Committee on Ways and Means were all at sea with their bill; and then my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] a member of the Ways and Means Committee, got up here one morning and moved to strike out the enacting clause. That motion was carried in Committee of the Whole by twenty or more majority; and the committee rose. The gentleman from Pennsylvania held the House as in the hollow of his hand. But he did not keep it; he did not call the previous question; his hand turned, his bill slopped over, and he with it. And then my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] saw his opportunity and succeeded in getting the floor, and was cunning enough to move an amendment to the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, striking down the duty on these various articles 10 per cent.—a proposition which had been sent down from the Senate and which he had opposed down to that time. He struck hands with my friend from New York [Mr. COX] and with the other gentleman from New York on my left [Mr. WOOD] and with every other free-trader in the House, for the purpose of regaining his lost leadership in the bill; and he recovered it in that way. The Senate had sent that 10 per cent. reduction scheme down to us, as a tail to some little bill repealing the duty on salt or coal, which we had sent to them; and the chairman of Ways and Means had opposed it. But to get back his leadership he put himself at the head of the free-trade element of the House, and carried the 10 per cent. reduction in that way.

We made a mistake when we struck down those duties 10 per cent. If the Government requires more duty from those articles, let it impose it; but let it not be said that the manufacturers of New England come here asking for it. I say once for all that our manufacturers do not ask for a high rate of tariff if you will give them their raw materials at a lower rate of duty and give them more stability in your tariff legislation, and not continually tinker with it, changing it year after year and sometimes twice in a Congress. They desire to know what they may depend on in their business when they begin the year, and they do not want these frequent changes in your tariffs. They want stability in your legislation and a settled policy. You struck off 10 per cent. from some articles that would bear it two years ago, and you crippled some industries by that reduction which would have flourished if you had let them alone.

Now, so far as wool and woollen goods are concerned, I believe the duty high enough, with this 10 per cent. reduction, if you will keep up the high duties on wool. I believe for the interest of the manufacturers they would rather have it as it is than to have added 10 per cent. additional on wool and woollens; and I believe the wool-growers better off without an increase of duty than with it.

So far as the interests of my friend from Pennsylvania are concerned, and so far as all of our other manufacturers are concerned, I would stand by this section; but I must say that in my own judgment this bill from beginning to end is a mistake on the part of the Committee on Ways and Means. If you will add 10 cents a gallon on whisky to be manufactured instead of 30, and put 10 cents a pound on tea, and 2 cents a pound on coffee, and strike out the first, second, and fourth sections, I do not know but the bill might then be in a shape to secure the necessary revenue and be satisfactory to the country.

Additional duty is imposed upon sugar. Now sugar is as much a necessity as tea and coffee, and there is already a very high duty on it. In my judgment the committee are making a mistake. They certainly did when they proposed to increase the duty on sugar 25 per cent. more, and except melada, and open a door for the enormous frauds that might be easy under that exception. I have a letter here from a firm of the highest respectability in my own district, who are familiar with the sugar trade, and whose opinion is worth more than my own in this matter. I will include the letter as part of my remarks. It is as follows:

NEW HAVEN, February 12, 1873.

DEAR SIR: * * * We much regret that any necessity should exist to enact any new tariff, as all such legislation is disturbing to business, and in the present instance seemingly hard; especially the proposed increase of duties on sugar, which already pays from 40 to 60 per cent. duties, and such an addition as 25 per cent. to present rates is very onerous. It would appear to be much better to put some of the burden upon tea and coffee, now free, and just as equally consumed. A peculiar feature in the proposed bill, to which permit us to call your attention, is the exemption of melada from the increase of duty, which is without any justification, and intended only to benefit a few refiners, who already are protected to an undue extent by the unequal operations of the present law, which admits low-grade sugars, such as they use at so much less duty than the higher grades; a difference which is further augmented for the refiner's interest by the proposed change, aside from the special and unjust exception in favor of melada. There is another fact connected with this last exemption which is, the greater inducement to fraud in importing sugars under the name of melada, a thing which can be done and is very likely to be attempted when such a marked difference exists in the duties.

We call your attention to these facts, and trust that this exemption in favor of melada will be eliminated from the bill; and it would be far better if the whole proposed change in the sugar duties should be abandoned, (the article being sufficiently taxed,) and the additional revenue needed be put upon tea and coffee.

With much respect, we remain yours, very truly,

L. W. & P. ARMSTRONG.

Hon. S. W. KELLOGG, M. C.,

Washington, District of Columbia.

When the time comes, for I do not wish now to cut off debate on it, I will move to strike out the enacting clause, unless some one else does it, for the purpose of instructing the Committee on Ways and Means to report a new bill, with a duty of 10 cents a pound on tea and 2 cents a pound on coffee, and 10 cents a gallon additional on whisky to be manufactured, which will be better than what is proposed in this bill for the revenues in my judgment, and which would be collected with much less danger of fraud than 30 cents a gallon; and then perhaps we could leave the rest of the bill as it is, with the exceptions I have named—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLEY. I move to strike out the last word, and I do so for the purpose of correcting a mistake into which my friend from Connecticut [Mr. KELLOGG] has fallen. It is true I moved to strike out the enacting clause of the tariff and tax bill referred to, but I never advocated this reduction and never consented to it.

Mr. KELLOGG. My friend from Pennsylvania moved an amendment, but did not call the previous question, and then the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means got up, moved his amendment, and called the previous question.

Mr. KELLEY. The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means of his own motion, without, so far as I know, the concurrence of any member of the committee, submitted that amendment.

Mr. DAWES. Without anybody knowing what he was going to do.

Mr. KELLEY. He moved a substitute embracing this 10 per cent. reduction, which I resisted. My object was to have the consideration of the subject of internal taxes before we reached the tariff question. I favored then, as gentlemen from the South and West know, a reduction of the tax on tobacco; for my theory is that we should relieve the productions of the country from internal taxation and protect ourselves against unequal foreign competition. And I believe now, sir, that the adoption of this section alone, without any of the other sections of the bill, would increase the revenue of the country, while the bill as it stands, including this section, would as a whole reduce the revenues. And from what I have heard on the floor to day I have reason to say, and I have also heard the fact elsewhere, that I express the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury when I say this bill, instead of giving us revenue, will diminish the revenues of the Government. I have a copy of the Chicago Inter-Ocean of yesterday giving a recital of the condition of those who would gladly be the working people of New York. The restoration of this 10 per cent. pure and simple would animate our manufacturing and mining industries—[Mr. DAWES, chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, made a remark which was not heard by the reporters,] under the tutelage of the chairman of my committee, who always takes charge of me to guard me against committing improprieties.

I will proceed to read the article referred to.

It is as follows:

Want and destitution prevail among the poorer classes of New York, and especially during the late intensely cold weather the applications for relief to the different charitable institutions appear to have been unprecedented. Among the multitude which last week besieged the doors of the "Saint John's Guild," at least 95 per cent. were women and children, many of them shoeless and with frozen feet. The terrible aggregate of human suffering in a great city can be appreciated only by understanding individual cases, and of these sad illustrations there are now so many that no one can plead ignorance of destitution as an excuse for withholding charity. Thousands of families are in absolute want. Their savings are long spent, their credit is exhausted, and work they find it impossible to procure. Some of the most pitiful tales reach us of poverty and hunger which are even beyond the reach of the resources of organized philanthropy. The cry for food, work, money, and clothes comes from every side. One meal, consisting of two apples, has sustained for thirty-six hours a man out of employment. Another is subsisting his family on the price of his wife's silk dress. An educated German, quoting Virgil and Aristophanes, begs for a few cents to secure a night's lodging. Even more sad than strong men thinly clad and weakened by long fasting is the spectacle of poor women, treading the icy pavements with slipped feet and keeping out the biting wind with only a summer shawl, and, more heart-rending still, suffering in obscurity in cold lodgings, without food or even sufficient clothing to make up for the absence of the costly luxury of a fire.

The dismal tramp through the streets from night to morning or the search for some sheltering porch or alley where uncomfortable rest may be found lead too often to the repose of the dark waters of the docks or the fatal oblivion of opium. It is a ghastly procession that moves on through the busy streets, staggering with faintness, and beseeching charity with voices many of which are unaccustomed to beg. "Accidental poverty" is the most painful to witness; and that it now exists in New York to an unusual extent the reports of the charitable relief associations abundantly attest. At one of these institutions no less than nine hundred persons applied for food and lodging one night last week, and more than four hundred were turned away for lack of accommodation. The station-houses are avoided by this class, and the consequence is that they are occasionally found exhausted by hunger and cold, preferring death to association with the professional mendicant.

This is the condition to which, by legislation against the laboring people of the country and imposing taxes upon domestic production, you have reduced them.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COX. If I understood the object of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] it was to put on this extra 10 per cent. to animate industries. They have had their percentages running from 50 to 600, and now they ask for war percentages in time of peace. The gentleman reads something from New York about charities established there by the benevolent people of that city.

Mr. PARKER, of New Hampshire. Chicago.

Mr. COX. Chicago, was it? It is the same thing; it was something read from the Inter-Ocean.

Now, I say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, with all earnestness, and to this House, that if there is one cause more than another, the cause of causes, for the impoverishment of the poor people of this country, it lies at the door of that gentleman more than of any other man in this House; but I suppose the gentleman thinks he is decorated by such an allusion.

Why, Mr. Chairman, you, sir, from Maine, know very well—you know it too well—that your commerce and your shipping were cut up by the roots because these cormorants clamored for more protection on iron and all the materials that enter into shipping. I cannot speak with the full volume of voice that belongs to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] but if my voice were ten times louder and stronger and more eloquent than his, I would have it reach the farmers of this country and let them know what it is that gentlemen propose to do when they add 10 per cent. more to the present high rate of taxation. I can give you items that come right home to the every-day business and convenience of our farmers and our poor people. Take hosiery, taxed at 96 per cent.; blankets, 106 per cent.; flannels, 113 per cent.; calicoes, 61 per cent.; thread, 75 per cent.; carpets, 54 per cent.; yarns, 94 per cent.; balmorals, 93 per cent.; delaines, 82 per cent.; poplins, 61 per cent.; wool hats, 101 per cent.; clothing, 45 per cent.; earthenware, 40 per cent.; pocket knives, 45 per cent.; soap, 46 per cent.; sugar, 88 per cent.; and now you are adding a little more to it, making it 99 per cent., if I understand the gentleman from Iowa; salt in bags, 43 per cent. And all these are articles in daily use. No wonder that the people have panics. No wonder that they are beginning to find out, as shown by the elections last fall, what a "revenue and protection tariff" means.

Protection! It is the protection, sir, which the lamb receives from the wolf. It is nothing more nor less than cheating by statute, or legalized robbery. Take the articles made out of iron, take every one of them—the spikes and nails, the hoes and shovels and plows, the fanning-mill, the thrashing-machine, the mowers and reapers—these are all made from iron; and the farmer pays the extra cost which is put upon those articles for your protection. It comes out of the grain produced by the farmer.

If it were only arranged that so many bushels of grain were paid over to the custom-house collector; if it were only understood that we were to send so many hundred bushels of wheat whenever we bought blankets, cutlery, woolen and cotton goods, iron, and paints and oils, there would be a sudden and stunning cry for reform on this subject, even louder than that of last fall. For the truth is that nine-tenths of this money, if not more, goes not to the Treasury but to those who despoil the people without regard to the Constitution of the United States. Whether you raise wheat, or oats, or potatoes, or pork, or beef, or make horses' shoes, or wear clothing, or make clothing—whether you are a farmer, painter, carpenter, blacksmith, shoemaker, or a day-laborer, you are despoiled by this protective system whenever you pay an excess of percentage above that which goes to the Treasury; and if protection does not do that who will care for it?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman from New York really believes what he has been saying. He won the approval of President Wayland when he made that speech on his graduation, for he was the valedictorian. We have been hearing it for the last fourteen years, until I know it as well as he does—that is, only by memory.

I desire, sir, to go to the farmers with him. Sir, the farmer pays on the tobacco he produces, and the grain he raises for distillation, taxes now ranging from 250 to 400 per cent., and the gentleman proposes to put these taxes up to from 400 to 500 per cent. Five hundred per cent. is not too high a direct tax for the grower of tobacco to pay; not too high for the western farmer, whose grain is distilled into spirits, to pay; but a tariff averaging 40 per cent., levied in protection of the right of the American laborer to employment in his own land, is regarded by the gentleman as a grievous burden!

Why make your internal taxes, which your own people must pay, a thousand per cent. more than the duties by which you protect their industries? O, go with me to the farmers, and you may make the farmers remember your valedictory address as well I do; but they will know the facts that lie behind, and will reject you and your theories.

Mr. COX. They have not done it yet. They did not do it last fall.

Mr. KELLEY. Why stands the machinery of this country idle? Why runs its water-power to waste?

A gentleman at my side suggests that the Ohio farmers drove the gentleman out of that State. I remembered that fact, but it was an indignity and I did not want to refer to it. The gentleman now represents the importers of New York, and he is not a carpet-bagger either.

I repeat the question, Why is your machinery idle? Why does your water-power run to waste? Why are your people unable to contribute to the public revenues? It is because the gentleman and men of his convictions labor to prostrate the laborers of this country, deprive them of employment and reduce their wages, and they have thus made many an honest, independent family familiar with the bitter bread of charity, for which they have gone, as the paper I read described it, with bleeding feet and slenderly covered bodies. Come, gentlemen, let us try whether the restoration of the 10 per cent. of duties will increase the prices of commodities. The repeal of this portion of then existing duties did not reduce them one cent in any market of the world, nor would the restoration enhance them.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I move to strike out the last word.

The committee is not considering any measure of protection, as I understand it. We are discussing a bill which comes before us primarily as a revenue bill; and it is in that aspect I choose to consider it. But I cannot help observing how differently it strikes different men according to the section from which they come. I noticed that the eloquent advocate of protection from Pennsylvania the other day was quite unwilling that the tax on alcohol should be increased. I did not understand it at first until I reflected that after all it was raw material of which a large number of manufacturers among the gentleman's constituents make use, and which stands to them precisely in the same relation that wool, iron, and steel stand to the manufacturers in my own district. We do not produce wool, iron, or steel to any extent in our part of the country; but we need great supplies of them to serve as the raw material of our manufactures.

Now, sir, it is proposed to amend section 2503 of the Statutes at Large so as to increase the duty on wools, alpaca, &c., and the manufactures from these articles. It is proposed to raise the duty on wool and woolen manufactures. I wish to correct the impression some gentlemen entertain, that it is a measure in the interest of the protection of New England manufacturers. You may say that though it increases the duty on imported wool, it increases the duty on manufactures of wool also sufficiently to counterbalance. Sir, we are perfectly willing to waive the proposed increase of the duty on manufactures of wool if you will let us get wool a little cheaper. The manufacturers can use all the wool raised in this country and a great deal more, and they desire to get that from abroad as cheaply as possible. We are not so much interested in protection against woolen manufactures from abroad as we are in the cost of wool. If you would reduce this duty on wool a little instead of raising it, I strongly surmise that you would get a greater revenue. There is not time for me to show how it would work, but it is perfectly clear, and I should make it perfectly clear if I had time by a letter from a large importer and manufacturer of wool and woollens who is making a fine article of woolen goods. He has to use chiefly foreign wool. He does not ask that you shall put a duty on woolen goods, but that you shall place the duty on wool at such rates that he can compete with better advantage with the foreign manufacturers in the purchase of wools in foreign markets. At present he is weighted down by remembering that when he gets his wool to New York he must add to the original cost of his wool duties ranging anywhere from 50 to 100 per cent. or more. He desires to get his raw materials more cheaply, that when the home market is glutted he may take his goods to foreign markets and there compete successfully with foreign manufacturers. That he cannot do while you so greatly add to the cost of his raw materials.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COTTON obtained the floor.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I move that the committee do now rise.

Many MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. COTTON.] Does he yield for the motion that the committee do now rise?

Mr. COTTON. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. Chairman, if the Government needs more revenue I am in favor of imposing duties for the benefit of the Government in preference to imposing those which would be for the benefit of individuals, and I therefore support the amendment to strike out that section of the bill which restores the 10 per cent. duty on cotton goods, woolen goods, iron, manufactures of iron, and other manufactured articles, and in lieu of that I would add a section imposing a duty on tea and coffee.

I am one of the illustrious forty-nine who voted in this House two years ago against placing tea and coffee on the free list. I prefer a duty which will give the Government all the money that may be paid in consequence of that duty rather than that which will give to individuals a portion of the money that must be paid as the result of the duty.

We need not discuss the question whether the restoration of the 10 per cent. on manufactured articles will increase the cost of those articles to the consumer to the full extent of the 10 per cent. We know that the effect will be to give increased profits to the manufacturers; that the design on the part of the protectionists is to give them an advance in prices, and whatever that advance may be it is to that extent a tax upon the consumer in favor of the manufacturer, while the Government will receive only the duties upon the imported portion of those classes of goods. The different effect of a duty on tea and coffee and of that upon manufactured articles is very plain. I have heard the argument made upon this floor that we should spare tea and coffee from taxation for the sake of the laborer and the poor man, they being, as it is claimed, so essential for his use. Any one can understand the sophistry of that argument. All the tea and coffee consumed are imported, and whatever increased price may be paid for these articles in consequence of a duty thereon goes into the Treasury of the United States. On the other hand cotton goods, woolen goods, iron, and the other commodities on which it is proposed to increase the duty 10 per cent., are partly imported and partly manufactured in this country, and therefore this additional duty would yield to the Government revenue on the imported part, and will enable manufacturers to advance the prices on like articles manufactured by them, and the people will have all to pay.

With a duty on tea and coffee the people pay no more as the result of the duty than is added to the revenues. The duty is simple, and accomplishes just what it professes to do; it takes only so much as goes into the public Treasury. But of the boots and shoes, blankets, cotton and woolen goods, hats, iron, coal, and salt which are sold in our markets, a portion being imported and a portion produced in this country, and all being sold in a common market, like articles of the same quality will bring the same price. Such of these articles as are imported pay the prescribed duty, and that the Government receives; but just as much as the price of the imported article is increased by the duty the manufacturer of a similar domestic article can add to the price of his goods, and that he takes. The wealthy manufacturer therefore has no interest in having a duty on articles which are wholly imported, such as tea and coffee, duties on which only benefit the Government, but he prefers a duty on those classes of articles which he makes, so that while the Government collects the duty on what pass through the custom-house, he collects for his own pocket an increase in price on similar articles manufactured by him. An American manufacturer sells his blankets for the same price at which are sold imported blankets, the duty on which averages when reduced to ad valorem from 60 to 100 per cent. according to the tables of the chief of the Bureau of Statistics. A poor man in need of a pair of blankets may chance to purchase those that have been imported, in which case the Government has had the benefit of the increased cost caused by the duty; but should he purchase another pair, these may have been made in this country, in which case whatever additional price the manufacturer can place thereon by reason of their being sold alongside of high-tariffed imported blankets is his gain. The result is the poor man in effect pays duty on two pairs of blankets—on one to the Government, and on the other to the manufacturer. The same is the case with other woolen and cotton goods, and many necessary articles required by all the people. Thus it will be seen that duties on tea and coffee take from the people only what is received by the Government, while duties on classes of goods which are imported only in part yield revenue to the Government on the imported portion and give the manufacturer the opportunity to add to his price and profits on similar goods not imported. The Government cannot obtain a given amount of revenue without it is once paid, and when a certain amount can be placed in the Treasury by paying it but once, as is done through duties on tea and coffee, the burden of the duties is as light as it possibly can be; but when the effect of the duties assumes a more complicated shape, as it does when they are on a class of goods some of which are imported and some not, and all sold for the same price, the Government secures some revenue and the manufacturers some additional profit and the people have both to pay. Again, if tea and coffee can be kept on the free list and the Government be deprived of the revenue from that source, this will make it necessary to maintain tariff rates proportionally higher on commodities which are produced in part in this country; and consequently a wider margin will be afforded for manufacturers' profits.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURCHARD obtained the floor.

Mr. COTTON. I would like a little longer time.

Mr. BURCHARD. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COTTON. In consequence of placing tea and coffee on the free list from and after the 1st day of August, 1872, the Government lost for the first eleven months $25,000,000, and for the twelve months ending June 30, 1874, it lost an additional sum of $16,000,000, making $41,000,000 virtually thrown away by reason of making tea and coffee free. In the report of the Secretary of the Treasury for the last year we have the statement made that there was nothing saved to the consumer in consequence of the abolition of that duty, while had it been retained $41,000,000 could have been added to the revenues of the Government. The statement of the Secretary is as follows:

The import statements for 1872-73 show how heavily the revenues from customs were depleted by the reduction of 1872, coffee alone having yielded $10,969,098.77 in 1871, and $7,192,074.91 in 1872. On the importations of coffee in 1873 the rate of 3 cents per pound would have yielded nearly $9,000,000, and 2 cents per pound almost $6,000,000.

The following table exhibits the annual imports of coffee and tea from 1871 to 1874, inclusive, with the total value thereof, and the average price per pound in the countries of their production:

Statement of imports of coffee and tea during the four fiscal years, (ending June 30,) 1871 to 1874, inclusive.

Fiscal years ending June 30.	Pounds.	Aggregate cost at place of shipment.	Average cost per pound at place of shipment.
COFFEE.
1871.....	317,992,048	$30,992,869	Cents. 9.74
1872.....	298,805,946	37,942,225	12.69
1873.....	293,297,271	44,109,671	15.00
1874.....	285,171,512	55,048,967	19.34
TEA.
1871.....	51,354,919	17,254,617	33.60
1872.....	63,811,003	22,943,575	36.00
1873.....	64,815,136	24,466,170	37.74
1874.....	55,811,605	21,112,234	37.82

This record of foreign prices for coffee tends strongly to the conclusion, making due allowance for the effect of short crops on prices, that the duty repealed by the act of 1872 was added to the selling price abroad, with no advantage to consumers here, while the country, as a whole, has paid more than before for the entire stock. The repeal of the duty on tea caused little or no reduction of prices to consumers here, but an increase of prices abroad.

Are tea and coffee necessities above all other articles? A child needs to be clad and shod years before the kind parents will indulge it with a cup of tea or coffee. From its advent into the world and the time it is wrapped in swaddling-clothes, cotton and flannel goods are essential to its very existence. Some persons never drink either tea or coffee. It is evident that as essentials to health and life tea and coffee are not to be compared with boots and shoes, cotton and woolen goods. Then why do we see such display of philanthropy over making tea and coffee free? It is rather remarkable that those who are so much concerned for the poor man in the matter of duties on tea and coffee feel no compassion for him when it is proposed to lay a duty on his hat, his coat, his shirt, and upon every article of clothing which are so essential for the use of himself and family.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DAWES. I now move the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and, the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HALE, of Maine, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, pursuant to the order of the House, had under consideration a bill (H. R. No. 4680) to further protect the sinking fund and provide for the exigencies of the Government, and had come to no resolution thereon.

OSGOOD B. WEBB.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask unanimous consent for an order of the House requesting the Senate to return to this House a bill passed on Tuesday last making appropriations to enable the Clerk of the House to pay certain employes of the House. I ask this in order that when the bill shall come back I can move to add to it the sum of $486 to be paid to the widow of Osgood B. Webb, deceased, late in the service of the Doorkeeper of the House, for pay and funeral expenses.

No objection was made, and it was so ordered.

SECURITY OF ELECTIONS.

Mr. COBURN. I rise to make a report, in part, from the select committee investigating affairs in Alabama. It is a partial report of the committee, privileged to report at any time.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The House has ordered that the session of this evening shall be given to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and the House will be presided over by Mr. CESSNA, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. COBURN. I desire to introduce this bill for printing and recommitting.

Mr. RANDALL. I will not object if the gentleman will consent that it shall not be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

Mr. COBURN. I will not do that.

Mr. RANDALL. That will reserve for the future the contest as to the right of the committee to report again at any time.

Mr. DAWES. The committee will have the right to report at any time.

Mr. RANDALL. I am willing to waive that question for the present, and consent that the bill may be introduced and recommitting, no advantage to be taken of the motion to reconsider; and the question of the right to report at any time to be reserved for future determination.

The bill (H. R. No. 4745) to provide against the invasion of States, to prevent the subversion of their authority, and to maintain the security of elections, was received, read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitting to the select committee on affairs in Alabama.

Mr. COBURN. I ask that the bill may be printed in the RECORD. No objection was made, and it was so ordered.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That if two or more persons within the jurisdiction of the United States shall invade any of the States of this Union for the purpose of forcibly overthrowing the existing government of said State, or any constituted authority of the same, or for the purpose of interfering in any forcible or unlawful manner with the due execution of the laws of said State or of the United States, or if two or more persons within the jurisdiction of the United States shall conspire with any other person or persons for any of the unlawful purposes hereinbefore recited with intent to commit the same, each person so offending shall be deemed guilty of felony, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by fine not exceeding $10,000 and by imprisonment and confinement to hard labor for a term not exceeding ten years, at the discretion of the court trying the same.

SEC. 2. That if two or more persons shall conspire together to overthrow by force or to usurp by violence the State government of any of the States of this Union, or any department thereof; or if any two or more persons shall in fact by force and violence attempt to subvert or usurp such State government, or any department thereof; or if any two or more persons shall by like force and violence actually overthrow the existing government of any State, or any department thereof, each person so offending shall be deemed guilty of a crime, and on conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and shall be imprisoned not less than one year and not more than twenty years, at the discretion of the court trying the same.

SEC. 3. That any person or persons using or proposing to use fire-arms or other deadly weapons against any peaceable individual or individuals, or assemblages of the same, at or near the place and on the day or days of registration or holding an election for Representatives or Delegates to Congress, for the purpose of intimidating or injuring such individual or individuals while such election is in progress and before the same shall have been completed, or before such election has commenced to be held, for the purpose of intimidating such individuals from coming to the same, shall be guilty of a crime, and on conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $2,000, and imprisoned not less than one year and not more than three years, at the discretion of the court trying the same: Provided, That in all prosecutions under this act the open or concealed carrying of fire-arms or other deadly weapons at such election or place of registration shall be taken as presumptive evidence of the intent to intimidate under this act.

SEC. 4. That in case the registration officers appointed under the laws of any State or Territory, whereby the laws of said State or Territory registration is required as a condition of voting at any election for Representatives in Congress, shall willfully or corruptly refuse or neglect to give any persons entitled to vote at any precinct or voting-place established under the provisions of the laws of Congress or of any State or Territory full and sufficient opportunities to register in the manner prescribed by law and within the time fixed by law, or shall by any device or subterfuge impose conditions or enforce discriminations upon voters or classes of voters not declared in such registration laws, or shall refuse or neglect, on request made by the voter or his agent, to furnish such voter with a certificate of registration or such other form of evidence of the same as may by law be required in such State or Territory, such officer shall be deemed guilty of a crime, and on conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $1,000, or imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years, or both, at the discretion of the court trying the same.

SEC. 5. That any person or persons who, at any election for a Representative to Congress, shall, by cunning or device, fraud or force, take or cause to be taken from the legal custodian or custodians of the same, or from any place where kept in deposit by any such custodian or custodians, the box or boxes of ballots or the poll-lists, or either of them, or shall carry away, conceal, scatter, deface, mutilate, or destroy said ballots or poll-lists, or any or either of them, before the final count and comparison of the same has been completed and the result of the election ascertained and publicly announced, or before the time has expired for which such ballots and poll-lists, or either of them, have to be preserved under the laws of the United States or of such State or Territory, every such person shall be deemed guilty of a crime, and on conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $3,000, and imprisoned not less than two years nor more than five years, at the discretion of the court trying the same.

SEC. 6. If in the prosecution of any of the undertakings hereinbefore declared unlawful, or in the commission of any of the offenses hereinbefore set forth, any person not participant in said offenses or unlawful undertakings shall be killed by any persons engaged in the same, or any of them, such killing shall constitute the crime of murder, and any person committing the same, or accessory before the fact to such commission, shall on conviction thereof suffer the penalty of death.

SEC. 7. That the district courts of the United States within their several districts shall have, exclusively of the courts of the several States, jurisdiction of all crimes and offenses against the provisions of this act, and also concurrently with the circuit courts of the United States of all causes, civil or criminal, arising under this act, except as herein otherwise provided; and the jurisdiction hereby conferred shall be exercised in conformity with the laws and practice governing United States courts, and all crimes and offenses committed against the provisions of this act may be prosecuted by the indictment of a grand jury, or, in cases of crimes and offenses not infamous, may be either by indictment or information filed by the district attorney in a court having jurisdiction.

SEC. 8. The supervisors of election hereafter appointed for any county, parish, or voting precinct in any congressional district, at the instance of ten citizens as provided in existing laws, shall exercise the same powers and perform the same duties as are now given to and required from supervisors in towns and cities of twenty thousand inhabitants or upward. All supervisors of elections within any congressional district may hereafter be appointed from the congressional district; and the judge of the circuit court of the United States within whose circuit such district may be situated shall appoint such supervisors on petition, as now provided by law, at least thirty days prior to the registration or election in which they are to act, and one of said supervisors so appointed by said judge shall be by him denominated as chief supervisor of said congressional district, and shall possess the powers and perform the duties now required by law of a chief supervisor.

SEC. 9. The provisions of existing laws as to the appointment, powers, and duties of special deputy marshals for cities and towns of twenty thousand inhabitants or upward in elections for Representatives to Congress are hereby extended to the several counties, parishes, and voting precincts in each congressional district, and such special deputies may be selected from any portion of such congressional district.

SEC. 10. At all elections for Representatives in Congress hereafter held the managers of such elections or board of officers charged with the conduct of the said election, by whatever title denominated, at the several polling places shall immediately after the closing of the polls, and before separating or adjourning to any other time or place, count and declare in the presence of the supervisor and deputy marshal, if any shall have been appointed and shall be present at said polling place, the result of the vote polled at said place of election, and shall thereupon immediately certify the same so far as relates to Representatives in Congress or presidential electors, if voted for in said election under the laws of the State, and shall deliver such certificate to said supervisor or deputy marshal, whichever may be present, and such supervisor or deputy marshal, as the case may be, shall at once transmit such certificate to the chief supervisor of the congressional district, who shall, as soon as practicable, forward the same to the Clerk of the House of Representatives. And the officer or officers charged with the canvassing or consolidation of the vote of any county, city, or parish shall in like manner perform such duty in the presence of such supervisor, if present, who shall, if appointed, attend in each, county, city, or parish at the time and place provided by law for such canvass and consolidation.

SEC. 11. No officer whose office is created by this act shall receive any compensation whatever from the United States for his services, nor shall the compensation heretofore allowed by law to any officer already existing be in any manner increased by reason of anything in this act contained.

SEC. 12. That the ballots, poll-lists, tally-sheets, or other papers which by the law of any State are evidence of an election, and which have been used in elections for Representatives to Congress, shall hereafter be preserved and safely kept by the custodian provided by the laws of the several States until the close of the first session of the Congress to be affected by such election. That either party to an election contest in the House of Representatives of the United States, in which contest an allegation of fraudulent count or change of ballots is made, may have a subpoena directed to said custodian, who shall, if so required by said subpoena, produce such original ballots, lists, and other papers connected with said election, and the same, after the usual notice to the contestant or contestee, may be examined and compared before any person in the county or parish authorized to take depositions in contested elections, and such person shall certify under his hand and seal and forward in the manner provided by law said examination and comparison to be used as evidence in the case. After said examination and comparison shall be completed said ballots, lists of voters, and other papers shall be returned to their lawful custodian in the same condition as when by him produced before said examining officer.

SEC. 13. That whenever, in any State, or part of a State, the unlawful combinations named in section 5299 of the Revised Statutes and in the first and second sections of this act shall be organized and armed and so numerous and powerful as to be able by violence to either overthrow or set at defiance the constituted authorities of said State and of the United States within said State, or when the constituted authorities are in complicity with, or shall connive at, the unlawful purposes of such powerful and armed combinations; and whenever by reason of either or all of the causes aforesaid the conviction of such offenders and the preservation of the public safety shall become in such district impracticable, in every such case such combinations shall be deemed a rebellion against the Government of the United States, and during the continuance of such rebellion, and within the limits of the district which shall be so under the sway thereof, such limits to be prescribed by proclamation, it shall be lawful for the President of the United States, when in his judgment the public safety shall require it to suspend the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, to the end that such rebellion may be overthrown: Provided, That all the provisions of the second section of an act entitled "An act relating to habeas corpus and regulating judicial proceeding in certain cases," approved March 3, 1863, which relate to the discharge of prisoners other than prisoners of war and to the penalty for refusing to obey the order of the court, shall be in full force so far as the same are applicable to the provisions of this section: And provided further, That the President shall first have made proclamation as provided by law commanding such insurgents to disperse.

CORRECTION OF ERROR IN ENROLLMENT.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia. I submit the following resolution from the Committee on Enrolled Bills:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That the Committee on Enrolled Bills be authorized, in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. No. 1938) to extend the provisions of an act approved March 3, 1871, entitled "An act to provide for the collection of debts due from Southern railroads, and for other purposes," to change the word "Linnville" to "Louisville," in the ninth line of the Senate substitute therefor; so that the line will read: "to Memphis, Clarkesville, and Louisville."

The SPEAKER. That is an error in enrollment to which the Chair supposes there will be no objection.

Mr. PELHAM. I object.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia. I think I can explain it so that there will be no objection.

Mr. PELHAM. The bill passed the House before I knew anything about it.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia. The bill went to the Senate, and in the Senate a substitute was offered. When it was sent to the printer a typographical error was made of "Linnville" for "Louisville."

Mr. PELHAM. It was very fortunate it was made.
 Mr. MAYNARD. It does not affect you at all.
 The SPEAKER. The only effect of the objection of the gentleman will be to have the bill go upon record enrolled with this erroneous spelling of the word.
 Mr. PELHAM. Well, let it go there.
 The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, by unanimous consent, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4747) supplemental to the several acts in relation to immigration; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

CHANGE OF NAME OF A NATIONAL BANK.

Mr. PLATT, of New York, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4746) authorizing the Second National Bank of Watkins to change its name; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

CLERK OF DISTRICT COURT, SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF ILLINOIS.

Mr. SENER. The Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, to whom was referred a resolution directing inquiry into the alleged delinquency of George P. Bowen, clerk of the United States district court for the southern district of Illinois, in filing semi-annual returns, have directed me to present a report which shows that this officer has paid the amount which was found due against him. I ask that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject, and that the report be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the motion was agreed to.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice respectfully report—

That in pursuance of the resolution of the House adopted March 26, 1874, directing them to inquire specially into the charge made in the Attorney-General's report for 1873 against "George P. Bowen, clerk for the southern district of Illinois, for continued violation of section 3 of the act of 1853, requiring clerks of the circuit and district courts of the United States to make semi-annual returns in writing, embracing all the fees and emoluments of their offices of every name and character," they summoned said George P. Bowen before them with as little delay as possible, and ascertained that he was delinquent in making his returns for eight or ten years past. Believing from their examinations of Mr. Bowen that his delinquency was not willful, but the result of inattention, he was permitted to return to Springfield, Illinois, for the purpose of making up his accounts and paying into the Treasury the amount due by him on account of fees earned in excess of the compensation allowed by law. During the recess of Congress the Attorney-General diligently pressed Mr. Bowen to a settlement of his accounts, and succeeded in obtaining on the 10th of November last the sum of $5,000, with the promise that the accounts still in arrears should be speedily made up. This was the position of affairs when the committee resumed its sessions in December. Finding on the 1st of February that there was still due from Mr. Bowen to the United States the sum of $6,184.98, the committee telegraphed him, requiring its payment on the 15th instant; and it gives them pleasure to report that they are informed by letter from W. Hemphill Jones, esq., acting Comptroller of the Treasury, that Mr. Bowen has deposited that amount to the credit of the United States in the State National Bank of Springfield, Illinois.

It is due to Mr. Bowen to say that from the correspondence with him by the committee and the Department of Justice, they believe he has been as diligent in settling up his accounts as his duties in court and his health would admit. His prompt payment of the balance found due by him, his willingness to waive the allowance and lose the benefit of fees due him by the United States in order to secure an immediate settlement of his accounts, and his relinquishment of all claim to mileage and fees as a witness before the committee, acquit him, in the judgment of the committee, of willful and intentional disregard of the requirements of the law.

The committee are of opinion that the enactment of the law proposed by them at the last session, (H. R. No. 3623,) with the amendments of the Senate which have since been concurred in by both Houses of Congress, will effectually prevent the recurrence of such delinquencies on the part of clerks of courts of the United States; and they therefore propose the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution of the House directing them to inquire specially into the violation of section 3 of the act of 1853 by George P. Bowen, clerk for the southern district of Illinois.

(Copies of letters from the Attorney-General and acting Comptroller showing the payments are appended to this report.)

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
 Washington, January 4, 1875.

SIR: Referring to your letter of the 19th ultimo, asking for any information in the possession of this Department relative to the accounts of George P. Bowen, clerk of the United States district court for the southern district of Illinois, and what action has been taken by this Department in relation to these accounts, the result thereof and their present condition, I have the honor to inclose copies of various telegrams and letters sent to and received from Mr. Bowen in relation to his accounts as clerk.

His emolument returns have been rendered to the 1st of January last and are now in this Department. His fee and per diem accounts have been rendered to the 31st of December, 1868, only. You will perceive from the inclosed copies what action has been taken by this Department to obtain all the accounts. Mr. Bowen has paid into the Treasury the sum of $5,000 on account of his indebtedness to the Government.

Very respectfully,

GEO. H. WILLIAMS,
 Attorney-General.

Hon. JAMES B. SENER,
 Chairman Committee on Expenditures in Department of Justice,
 House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
 Washington, D. C., February 15, 1875.

SIR: Referring to my letter addressed to you on the 2d instant, I now inclose a copy of one dated 10th instant, from George P. Bowen, clerk United States district court southern district of Illinois, showing that he has deposited to the credit of the United States Treasurer the balance due on account of surplus emoluments.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. HEMPHILL JONES,
 Acting Comptroller.

Hon. J. B. SENER,
 Chairman Committee on Expenditures in Department of Justice,
 House of Representatives.

NOTE:
 Amount paid as shown by letter of Attorney-General..... $5,000 00
 Amount paid as shown by letter of Acting Comptroller..... 6,184 98

Total amount paid by George P. Bowen in settlement of his account. 11,184 98

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS IN COLORADO.

Mr. PACKARD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4748) to provide for the settlement of certain private land claims in Colorado; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WISCONSIN CENTRAL RAILROAD.

Mr. McDILL, of Wisconsin, by unanimous consent, presented concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, asking Congress to authorize a change of the line of the Wisconsin Central Railroad, and requesting their Senators and Representatives in Congress to vote for such a measure; which were referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE A. ARMES.

Mr. CASON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4749) to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to restore George A. Armes to his former rank of captain in the Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LEGAL DEFENSE OF JUDICIARY COMMITTEE.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent for the introduction and adoption of a resolution to pay the expenses of the Judiciary Committee of the last House of Representatives, who were sued by a man in New York because we did not hear him so long as he thought we ought to, although we heard him three weeks.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of this House is hereby authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the House the sum of $600 to defray the expenses of the defense of members of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Forty-second Congress in an action brought by one Hastings in the circuit court of the United States for their conduct as members of that committee; $500 of the same to be paid to Messrs. Develin, Miller, and Trull, attorneys at New York, and $100 to James P. Lowrey, esq., which gentlemen were counsel respectively for members of the committee in said action in the circuit court of the United States, which has been dismissed in said court.

Mr. KASSON. What was the nature of that case?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. If the House will allow me a moment I will state the case. This man made a complaint against one of the justices of the Supreme Court and wanted him impeached. We heard him day after day, and day after day; and then we came to the conclusion to report that he had no case. He sued us for a false report and because we had not heard him clear through!

There being no objection, the resolution was considered adopted.

AMENDMENTS TO TAX AND TARIFF BILL.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD two amendments which I propose to offer to the tax and tariff bill now before the House in Committee of the Whole.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The amendments are as follows:

To be proposed as an independent section:

That on and after the 1st day of July next, there shall be levied and paid a tax on all sales of stocks, bonds, gold and silver bullion coin, and promissory notes, and other securities, at the rate of one-twentieth of 1 per cent. on the amount of the sale thereof; that every person, firm, or corporation engaged in the business of selling stocks, bonds, gold and silver bullion coin, either for their own account or on the account of others, shall keep a true and accurate record thereof, under oath, that the same is true and correct, to the collector of the district where such business is carried on, on or before the first and fifteenth day of each month, and the collector shall thereupon assess and collect a tax of one-twentieth of 1 per cent. on the gross amount of such sales. The said list or return shall be made in such form or manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

To be proposed as an independent section:

That there shall be levied, collected, and paid annually, upon the annual gains, profits, or income of every person residing in the United States, whether derived from any kind of property, rents, interest, dividends, salaries, or from any profession, trade, employment, or vocation carried on in the United States or elsewhere, or from any other source whatever, except as hereinafter mentioned, if such annual gains, profits, or income exceed the sum of $3,000 and do not exceed the sum of $10,000, a duty of 3 per cent. upon the amount thereof exceeding $3,000; and if said income exceeds the sum of $10,000, a duty of 5 per cent. upon the amount thereof exceeding $3,000. And upon the annual gains, profits, or income, rents, and dividends accruing upon any property, securities, and stocks owned in the United States by any citizen of the United States residing abroad, except as hereinafter mentioned, and not in the employ of the Government of the United States, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of 5 per cent.: Provided, That incomes derived from interest upon notes, bonds, and other securities of the United States, and also all premiums on gold and coupons, shall be included in estimating incomes under this act: And provided further, That the word person in this section shall be construed to include corporations.

FORTY-FIRST PARALLEL RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. MCCRARY, by unanimous consent, presented from the Committee on Railways and Canals a report on the bill (H. R. No. 4036) chartering the Forty-first Parallel Railroad Company of the United States of America from Lake Erie to the Missouri River, and to limit rates of freight thereon; which was ordered to be printed and re-committed.

TOBACCO TAX.

Mr. STOWELL, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial of tobacco manufacturers of Petersburg, Virginia, against any increase of the tax on tobacco; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

JAMES M. CUMMINGS.

Mr. NEGLEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4750) for the relief of James M. Cummings and others; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

COMMISSIONS OF POSTMASTERS.

Mr. PACKER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4751) to define the postal revenues upon which commissions to postmasters shall be allowed; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

MAIL TRANSPORTATION ON RAILROADS.

Mr. PACKER also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4752) prescribing conditions and fixing rates of compensation for the transportation of mails on railroad routes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

CAPTAIN C. H. WELLS, UNITED STATES NAVY.

Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported a joint resolution (H. R. No. 157) authorizing the acceptance by Captain C. H. Wells, of the United States Navy, of the cross of the Legion of Honor conferred upon him by the President of the French Republic; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution, which was read, authorizes the acceptance by Captain C. H. Wells, of the United States Navy, of the cross of the Legion of Honor conferred upon him by the President of the French Republic as evidence of his appreciation of that officer.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REMOVAL OF POLITICAL DISABILITIES.

Mr. LAMAR, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4753) to remove the political disabilities of Otho R. Singleton, of Mississippi; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, provides (two-thirds of each House concurring therein) that the political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution upon Otho R. Singleton, of Mississippi, be, and the same are thereby, removed.

The SPEAKER. Is there a petition accompanying the bill?

Mr. LAMAR. Yes, sir; the petition has been filed to-day.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed; two-thirds concurring therein.

Mr. LAMAR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

And then, on motion of Mr. SENNER, (at five o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.,) the House took a recess until seven o'clock p. m. this evening.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at half past seven o'clock, Mr. CESSNA in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. RANDALL. We may as well understand in the beginning that this evening's session is to be devoted exclusively to pension cases.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has been set apart for reports from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and no other business whatever is to be transacted.

Mr. RUSK. Do I understand that there is to be no other business than reports from the Committee on Invalid Pensions?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will be time enough to decide when the question is raised as to other business.

Mr. RANDALL. If we start with the understanding that no other business is to be transacted, then the Chair will be the guard and not the members.

Mr. HOLMAN. The order of the House is definite and there can be no misunderstanding.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no doubt in the mind of the Chair on that point that the order of the House confines this evening's session to pension cases.

BETSEY A. EATON.

Mr. RUSK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4734) granting a pension to Betsey A. Eaton; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Betsey A. Eaton, widow of Willard G. Eaton, late colonel Thirteenth Regiment Michigan Volunteers, and to pay her a pension at the rate of thirty dollars a month.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM LYON.

Mr. RUSK also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4755) granting a pension to William Lyon; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Lyon, late a private Company D, Fifty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EMMET LANGSTON.

Mr. RUSK also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4756) granting a pension to Emmet Langston; which was read a first and second time.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Emmet Langston, late a private in Company I, Fifty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FREEMORTON YOUNG.

Mr. RUSK also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4757) granting a pension to Freemorton Young; which was read a first and second time.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Freemorton Young, late captain of Company B, Fifth Regiment Tennessee Volunteers, and pay him a pension as a captain from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GEORGE W. LA POINTE.

Mr. RUSK also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4758) granting a pension to George W. La Pointe; which was read a first and second time.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George W. La Pointe, late a first lieutenant Seventh Regiment Michigan Volunteers, and pay him a pension as such from and after the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HERMAN NETTLEFIELD.

Mr. RUSK also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4759) granting a pension to Herman Nettlesfield; which was read a first and second time.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Herman Nettlesfield, late a member of General Canby's special scouts, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JAMES WILKINSON.

Mr. RUSK also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4760) granting a pension to James Wilkinson; which was read a first and second time.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James Wilkinson, late a private in Company G, One hundred and twenty-seventh Regiment New York Volunteers, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN C. COX.

Mr. RUSK also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4761) granting a pension to John C. Cox; which was read a first and second time.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John C. Cox, acting ensign United States steamer Weehawken, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. SIDNEY J. WOOD.

Mr. RUSK also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4762) granting a pension to Mrs. Sidney J. Wood; which was read a first and second time.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Sidney J. Wood, widow of Daniel B. Wood, late a private in the One hundred and fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LAFAYETTE BRIGGS.

Mr. RUSK also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4763) granting a pension to Lafayette Briggs; which was read a first and second time.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lafayette Briggs, late a private of First Battery Wisconsin Artillery, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SARAH A. WOODWORTH.

Mr. RUSK also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4764) granting a pension to Sarah A. Woodworth; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-rolls, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah A. Woodworth, widow of Joseph C. Woodworth, late a private in Company H, Sixty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EMILLIA O. BLACK.

Mr. RUSK also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4765) granting a pension to Emillia O. Black; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Emillia O. Black, widow of Willis H. Black, late deputy provost marshal for the eleventh district of Illinois, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. SENNER. I want at this point to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin a single question in the way of facilitating business. I desire to ask if it is not necessary that the counties and States from which the parties come should be named in these bills?

Mr. RUSK. The rank and regiment designates who they are, and nothing else is necessary.

Mr. SENNER. Is that sufficient?

Mr. RUSK. Yes, sir.

RUTH ISABELLA NAYLOR.

Mr. RUSK also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4766) granting a pension to Ruth Isabella Naylor; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ruth Isabella Naylor, widow of Charles Naylor, late captain Company F, Twenty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers in the war with Mexico, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FERDINAND MONTI.

Mr. RUSK also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4767) granting a pension to Ferdinand Monti; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ferdinand Monti, wagon-master in the quartermaster service, Mexican war, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ANNIE FARLEY.

Mr. RUSK also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4768) granting a pension to Annie Farley; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Annie Farley, widow of Peter M. Farley, late private Company M, Eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ABRAANNA L. DUNN.

Mr. RUSK also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4769) granting a pension to Abraanna L. Dunn; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Abraanna L. Dunn, widow of George B. Dunn, late captain Seventeenth Regiment Maine Volunteers, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. RUSK. I move that the reports in these various cases be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

J. W. CALDWELL.

Mr. RUSK also, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (S. No. 1080) granting a pension to J. W. Caldwell, of Marshall County, Indiana.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of J. W. Caldwell, late a private in Company E, Seventy-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATHAN UPHAM.

Mr. RUSK also, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (S. No. 1213) granting a pension to Nathan Upham.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Nathan Upham, corporal in Company G, Eighty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARGARET S. HASTINGS.

Mr. RUSK also, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (S. No. 862) granting a pension to Margaret S. Hastings.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Margaret S. Hastings, widow of Charles B. Hastings, late a private in Company E, Forty-fifth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, and pay her arrears of pension from the date of the death of her husband up to the time her present pension commenced.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN COLLAHAN.

Mr. RUSK also, from the same committee, reported adversely the bill (S. No. 874) granting a pension to John Collahan; and the same was laid upon the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. RUSK also, from the same committee, reported back the following; and the committee was discharged from their further consideration, and they were referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. No. 4607) for the benefit of Stokely Smith and Margaret B. Smith, of Kentucky, allowing them bounty for their son who died in the Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (H. R. No. 4415) for the relief of the officers of the Fourth and Fifth Indiana Regiments—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The petition of Charles James Gates—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

The petition of Mrs. Amanda Stokes—to the Committee on Claims.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. RUSK also, from the same committee, reported adversely upon the following; and the committee was discharged from their further consideration, and they were laid on the table:

The petition of Samuel and Mary F. Mercer;

The petition of Aaron Taylor;

The petition of Mary T. Morrison; and

The petition of Henry Hoyle.

Mr. RUSK. I move that the reports accompanying these various petitions and bills be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

SALLY P. LEE.

Mr. BARRY, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3660) granting a pension to Sally P. Lee; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sally P. Lee, widow of Thomas M. K. Lee, jr., late captain Company K, Sixth New Jersey Infantry Volunteers, and pay her a pension as the widow of a captain from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BARRY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SOPHIA GREEN.

Mr. BARRY also, from the same committee, reported back, with a recommendation that the same do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 2763) granting a pension to Mrs. Sophia Green.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sophia Green, widow of Harvey Green, late a private in Company C, Tenth Regiment Vermont Volunteers, and to pay her a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BARRY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WIDOWS AND CHILDREN OF INVALID PENSIONERS.

Mr. BARRY also, from the same committee, reported adversely the bill (H. R. No. 1612) to continue pensions to widows and children of invalid pensioners pensioned for total disabilities, without reference to cause of death; and the same was laid on the table.

Mr. BARRY. I move that the reports accompanying the bills which I have just reported be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BARRY. I move to reconsider the various votes upon the reports just made by me; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELIZABETH THOMAS.

Mr. YOUNG, of Kentucky, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4770) granting a pension to Elizabeth Thomas, of Philadelphia; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth Thomas, widow of Eli K. Thomas, private Company I, One hundred and thirty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. YOUNG, of Kentucky, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHARLES A. DRAHER.

Mr. YOUNG, of Kentucky, also, from the same committee, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 4771) granting a pension to Charles A. Draher; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles A. Draher, late private in Company H, One hundred and sixty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. YOUNG, of Kentucky, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RICHARD G. MOBLEY.

Mr. YOUNG, of Kentucky, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4772) granting a pension to Richard G. Mobley; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Richard G. Mobley, late a private in Company A, Twenty-fourth Kentucky Volunteers, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. YOUNG, of Kentucky, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DWIGHT A. BARRETT.

Mr. YOUNG, of Kentucky, also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4773) granting a pension to Dwight A. Barrett; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Dwight A. Barrett, late a private in Company E, Forty-sixth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. YOUNG, of Kentucky, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. YOUNG, of Kentucky, from the same committee, reported back adversely the following bill and petitions; which were laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 4221) granting a pension to Sarah Maynard;
The Petition of Mary Bailey;
The Petition of Elizabeth Hull;
The Petition of German Dettweiler;
The Petition of Susan Ross;
The Petition of Obadiah P. Reams; and
The Petition of Anderson Davis.

MARY ANN McDONALD.

Mr. CRITTENDEN, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4774) granting a pension to Mary Ann McDonald; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Ann McDonald, mother of William McDonald, late a sergeant in Company G, Thirty-first Ohio Infantry Volunteers, and pay her a pension as mother of such soldier from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRITTENDEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARGARET C. WELLS.

Mr. CRITTENDEN also, from the same committee, reported back, with a recommendation that it pass, the bill (S. No. 1070) granting a pension to Margaret C. Wells.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Margaret C. Wells, widow of James G. L. Wells, late of Company A, Eleventh Regiment (afterward Company A, Second Regiment) Missouri State Militia Cavalry, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of the act for herself and minor children under sixteen years of age.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRITTENDEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SARAH McADAMS.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3717) granting a pension to Sarah McAdams, have directed me to report back the same, with a recommendation that the House concur in the amendment of the Senate.

The amendment, which was read, was to add at the end of the bill the words "at the rate of eight dollars per month."

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. CRITTENDEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COLEMAN SIMS.

Mr. CRITTENDEN also, from the same committee, reported back adversely a bill (H. R. No. 2029) granting a pension to Coleman Sims, of Clarksburgh, West Virginia; and the same was laid on the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

MARGARET PATTISON.

Mr. MARTIN, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4775) granting a pension to Margaret Pattison; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Margaret Pattison, widow of William J. Pattison, late second lieutenant Ninth Regiment Michigan Cavalry, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MARTIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELIZABETH LANING.

Mr. MARTIN also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4776) granting a pension to Elizabeth Laning; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth Laning, widow of Richard Laning, late of Company H, Eightieth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, to date from the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MARTIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JAMES A. FORGEY.

Mr. MARTIN also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4777) granting a pension to James A. Forgey; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James A. Forgey, late a corporal in Company H, Twenty-ninth Regiment Iowa Volunteers, from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MARTIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HEILA A. COOKSEY.

Mr. MARTIN also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4778) granting a pension to Heila A. Cooksey; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Heila A. Cooksey, widow of James C. Cooksey, late a private Company C, Thirty-second Regiment Missouri Infantry, from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MARTIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RUTH ELLEN GRELAND.

Mr. MARTIN also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4779) granting a pension to Ruth Ellen Greland; which was read a first and second time.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ruth Ellen Greland, widow of John A. Greland, late captain, United States Army, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MARTIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EUNICE WILSON.

Mr. MARTIN also, from the same committee, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 3708) granting a pension to Eunice Wilson, mother of John C. Wilson, late private Company D, Forty-ninth Illinois Volunteers, with the recommendation that the Senate amendment be concurred in.

The amendment of the Senate was to strike out the words "death of her said son" and in lieu thereof insert "from and after the passage of the act."

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Mr. MARTIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. MARTIN also, from the same committee, submitted adverse reports in the following cases; which were laid upon the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed

The petition of Elvira Kidd;
The petition of Joseph L. Nealy;
The petition of Susan Giles; and
The petition of Harriet L. Bowman.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. SMALL. Before making the reports with which I am intrusted from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, I desire to make a personal explanation. My attention has been called to an error in the statement I made the other day to the House when the bounty bill was under consideration. I stated to the House that New Hampshire had paid bounties to her soldiers during the entire period of the war. I found on examination there was error in that statement, and that she did not pay bounties in the early part of the war. Consequently she has soldiers now who are entitled to bounty under the law.

WOODSON POWERS.

Mr. SMALL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 2586) granting a pension to Woodson Powers.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Woodson Powers, late captain of Company C, Fifth West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, on the evidence and papers on file in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PATRICK GLACKIN.

Mr. SMALL also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4780) granting a pension to Patrick Glackin; which was read a first and second time.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Patrick Glackin, late a private of Company G, Seventh Regiment Ohio Cavalry, and to pay him a pension, to take effect from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BARBARA PATTI.

Mr. SMALL also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4781) granting a pension to Barbara Patti; which was read a first and second time.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Barbara Patti, the widow of Gregory Patti, late a seaman in the United States Navy, and to pay her a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ANSEL THAYER.

Mr. SMALL also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4782) granting a pension to Ansel Thayer, of Braintree, Massachusetts; which was read a first and second time.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ansel Thayer, father of George Frederick Thayer, Company F, Second Regiment Massachusetts Cavalry; Loring W. Thayer, Company E, Thirty-second Massachusetts Volunteers; Charles C. Thayer, Company K, Third Massachusetts Cavalry; and Lucien M. Thayer, Company I, Forty-second Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, and pay him a pension, to take effect from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ROBERT CAVANAUGH.

Mr. SMALL also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4783) granting a pension to Robert Cavanaugh; which was read a first and second time.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Robert Cavanaugh, late a private in Company D, Ninety-eighth Regiment Ohio Infantry Volunteers, and pay him a pension, to take effect from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LYDIA A. CHURCH.

Mr. SMALL also, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (S. No. 1205) restoring to the pension-roll the name of Lydia A. Church, minor daughter of Nathaniel G. Church.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lydia A. Church, minor daughter of Nathaniel G. Church, late a private in Company E, Third Regiment Maine Volunteers, and pay her a pension from the time of its suspension, November 16, 1867, until she arrives at the age of sixteen years.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. SMALL also, from the same committee, reported adversely on the petition of Ruth B. Brown for a pension; and the same was laid on the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM H. MASSIE.

Mr. SMALL also, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do not pass, the bill (H. R. No. 3861) to pay William H. Massie $150 as a soldier in the late war, and to place his name upon the pension-roll; and the same was laid on the table.

SOLDIERS OF THE WAR WITH MEXICO.

Mr. SMALL also, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do not pass, the bill (H. R. No. 577) granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the war with Mexico, and the widows of deceased soldiers.

Mr. SENNER. Is it in order to have that bill put upon the Calendar?

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the bill be reported.

The Clerk commenced to read the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will not insist on the reading of the bill if it can be referred to the Private Calendar for further consideration.

Mr. SMALL. I withdraw the bill for the present.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Has the gentleman from New Hampshire the right to withdraw the bill? He was instructed to report it back to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has a right to withdraw it, and does withdraw it.

Mr. SENNER. I beg to ask respectfully in what condition the bill in relation to Mexican soldiers stands?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is now in the hands of the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. SENNER. The whole of it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The whole subject.

NANCY HAROLD BRANSON.

Mr. THOMAS, of Virginia, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported adversely on the petition of Nancy Harold Branson; and the same was laid on the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

ISAAC BEELER.

Mr. THOMAS, of Virginia, also, from the same committee, reported adversely on the petition of Isaac Beeler; and the same was laid on the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM IRA MAYFIELD.

Mr. THOMAS, of Virginia, also, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (S. No. 836) granting a pension to William Ira Mayfield.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Ira Mayfield, late a private in the Ninth Oregon Militia Volunteers, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THOMAS, of Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HENRY H. KAISER.

Mr. THOMAS, of Virginia, also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4784) granting a pension to Henry H. Kaiser; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry H. Kaiser, late a private in Company H, Eighth Regiment United States Veteran Volunteers, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THOMAS, of Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FANNIE M. HERRON.

Mr. THOMAS, of Virginia, also, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No.

3116) granting a pension to Fannie M. Herron, widow of James Herron, deceased.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Fannie M. Herron, widow of James Herron, late chief civil engineer of the Pensacola navy-yard, who died while on duty at said yard of disease contracted in discharge of his duty, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THOMAS, of Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ALVAH W. HICKS.

Mr. THOMAS, of Virginia, also, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 4785) granting a pension to Alvah W. Hicks, of Cincinnati, Ohio.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Alvah W. Hicks, late a private in Colonel Ellet's ram fleet, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THOMAS, of Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. SARAH B. HOWE AND MRS. MARY CRANSTON.

Mr. THOMAS, of Virginia, also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4786) granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah B. Howe and Mrs. Mary Cranston; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of Sarah B. Howe, widow of Albion Howe, late lieutenant Fourth United States Artillery, and Mary Cranston, widow of Arthur Cranston, late lieutenant in the Fourth United States Artillery, and pay them pensions at the rate of twenty-four dollars a month each from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the reading of the report in that case.

The report was read.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THOMAS, of Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GEORGIANA PARKER.

Mr. THOMAS, of Virginia, also, from the same committee, reported adversely on the petition of Georgiana Parker, minor child of George Parker, sailmaster on the United States steamer Powhatan; which was laid on the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM H. MASSIE.

Mr. BUNDY. I wish to move a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill for the relief of William H. Massie was laid upon the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was that report made by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. THOMAS?]

Mr. BUNDY. It was made by the gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. SMALL.] The bill was referred to an improper committee. It should have gone to the Committee on War Claims, and I ask that the bill should be referred to that committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the bill reported upon adversely?

Mr. SMALL. It was.

Mr. RUSK. I will say that there is no objection to allowing the bill to go to the Committee on War Claims.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As the motion to reconsider has been laid upon the table, it will require unanimous consent to take the bill from the table and refer it to the Committee on War Claims.

No objection was made, and it was so ordered.

CHARLES H. BUGBEE.

Mr. SMART, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with a recommendation that the same do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 4787) granting a pension to Charles H. Bugbee.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles H. Bugbee, late a private in Company A, Fourth Regiment Vermont Volunteers, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMART moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CATHARINE FERRY.

Mr. SMART also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4788) granting a pension to Catharine Ferry.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Catharine Ferry, mother of Sylvester Ferry, late a corporal in Company I, One hundred and forty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteers, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMART moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

KEZIA ZOLLER.

Mr. SMART also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4789) granting a pension to Kezia Zoller, of Little Falls, New York.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Kezia Zoller, mother of Norman Zoller, deceased, late a private in Company C, One hundred and twenty-first Regiment New York Volunteers, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMART moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DAVID SALSBUARY.

Mr. SMART also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4790) granting a pension to David Salsbury; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of David Salsbury, late a private in Company F, One hundred and sixtieth Regiment New York Volunteers, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMART moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SAMUEL SHEAFFER.

Mr. SMART also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4791) granting a pension to Samuel Sheaffer; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Samuel Sheaffer, late private in Battery F, Fifth United States Artillery, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMART moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELISHA B. KNAPP.

Mr. SMART also, from the same committee, reported back, with a recommendation that the same do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 4540) for the relief of Elisha B. Knapp, of Wellsburgh, New York.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elisha B. Knapp, of Wellsburgh, New York, and pay him such pension as he would have been entitled to under existing laws if he had been regularly mustered into the service of the United States during the war of the rebellion.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMART moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THOMAS ALLCOCK.

Mr. SMART also, from the same committee, reported back, with a recommendation that it pass, the bill (H. R. No. 518) granting a pension to Thomas Allcock, of Rochester, New York.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Thomas Allcock, a private in Company F, Third Artillery, during the Florida war, at the rate of eight dollars per month from the 1st day of July, 1852, and to continue during his natural life.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMART moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN H. BELL.

Mr. SMART also, from the same committee, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 2910) granting a pension to John H. Bell; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. SMART moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELIZABETH NEIBLING.

Mr. STRAWBRIDGE, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4792) granting a pension to Elizabeth Neibling; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth Neibling, widow of James Neibling, late colonel of the Twenty-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteers, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STRAWBRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MERCY E. SCATTERGOOD.

Mr. STRAWBRIDGE also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4793) granting a pension to Mercy E. Scattergood; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Mercy E. Scattergood, widow of Edward Scattergood, late a second assistant engineer in the United States Navy, and pay her two dollars a month in addition to her present pension until the child of said Edward Scattergood shall be sixteen years of age.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STRAWBRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN M'KINLEY.

Mr. STRAWBRIDGE also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4794) granting a pension to John McKinley; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John McKinley, father of Thomas H. McKinley, late a second lieutenant in Company B, Twenty-ninth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STRAWBRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ANN JONES.

Mr. STRAWBRIDGE also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4795) granting a pension to Ann Jones; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ann Jones, mother of John Jones, late a private in Company B, Fifty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STRAWBRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CATHARINE KNIERIM.

Mr. STRAWBRIDGE also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4796) granting a pension to Catharine Knierim; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Catharine Knierim, widow of Paul Knierim, late a sergeant of Company C, Ninety-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania

Volunteers, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STRAWBRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

J. LYLE M'CULLOUGH.

Mr. STRAWBRIDGE also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4797) granting a pension to J. Lyle McCullough; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of J. Lyle McCullough, father of Jacob L. Nelson, John and Joseph E. McCullough, late privates Company A, One hundredth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STRAWBRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARIA W. SANDERS.

Mr. STRAWBRIDGE also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4798) granting a pension to Maria W. Sanders; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Maria W. Sanders, widow of John Sanders, late brevet major United States Army, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STRAWBRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GEORGE W. LEAMY.

Mr. STRAWBRIDGE also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4799) granting a pension to George W. Leamy; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George W. Leamy, late second lieutenant Company B, Ninth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STRAWBRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TETER WOLFGONG.

Mr. STRAWBRIDGE also, from the same committee, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 3700) granting a pension to Teter Wolfgong, with the recommendation that the Senate amendment be concurred in.

The amendment of the Senate strikes out in line 4 "Wolfgong" and inserts "Wolfgong."

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Mr. STRAWBRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM WILLIAMS.

Mr. STRAWBRIDGE also, from the same committee, reported back a bill (S. No. 1154) granting a pension to William Williams, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Williams, late a captain Company A, First Battalion Cavalry Pennsylvania Volunteers, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STRAWBRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. STRAWBRIDGE also, from the same committee, reported adversely on the following cases; which were laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

The petition of Edward Hawley;

The petition of Candace McMelan;
 The petition of W. B. Harland;
 The petition of Josephine O. Likens;
 The petition of Anthony A. Laws;
 A bill (H. R. No. 2574) granting a pension to Wilhelmina Bossert;
 A bill (H. R. No. 2372) granting a pension to Col. James R. Porter; and
 A bill (H. R. No. 2573) granting a pension to William Brunt.

JOHN H. LOOBY.

Mr. WALLACE, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4890) granting a pension to John H. Looby; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John H. Looby, late captain Company D, Sixty-second Regiment United States Colored Troops, and pay him the pension allowed to totally disabled officers of that grade from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WALLACE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MICAJAH STOUT.

Mr. WALLACE also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4801) granting a pension to Micajah Stout; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Micajah Stout, of Company I, Forty-third Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WALLACE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SAMUEL PURCELL.

Mr. WALLACE also, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 965) granting a pension to Samuel Purcell.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension law, the name of Samuel Purcell, who was a private in Company A, First Indiana Volunteers, in the Mexican war, at the rate of eight dollars per month from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WALLACE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NANCY TIPTON.

Mr. WALLACE also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4802) granting a pension to Nancy Tipton; which was read a first and second time.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Nancy Tipton, widow of Samuel Tipton, late a private of Company H, Thirteenth Regiment Tennessee Cavalry, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WALLACE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUSAN C. CLARK.

Mr. WALLACE also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4803) granting a pension to Susan C. Clark; which was read a first and second time.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Susan C. Clark, widow of William D. Clark, who was killed by the confederate soldiers near Newmansville, Florida, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WALLACE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEVINA BERRALL.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. My colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. O'BRIEN,] is unavoidably absent. I desire to report three bills which the gentleman from Maryland would have reported if he had been here. The first is a bill granting a pension to Levina Berrall.

The bill (H. R. No. 4804) was received and read a first and second time.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Levina Berrall, widow of Renben Berrall, late a private in Company G, Fifty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and pay her a pension for herself and children under sixteen years of age from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRITTENDEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. ELLEN MORROW.

Mr. CRITTENDEN also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4805) granting a pension to Mrs. Ellen Morrow; which was read a first and second time.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Ellen Morrow, mother of John Morrow, late a private of Company H, First Potomac Home Brigade Maryland Volunteers, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRITTENDEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM C. EDMONDSON.

Mr. CRITTENDEN also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4806) granting a pension to William C. Edmondson; which was read a first and second time.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William C. Edmondson, late a private in Company I, Eighty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers, and to pay him a pension, to take effect from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRITTENDEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GEORGE W. TRUEHEART.

Mr. RUSK, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4807) granting a pension to George W. Trueheart; which was read a first and second time.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George W. Trueheart, late a private in Company F, Sixty-seventh Regiment New York Volunteers, and to pay him a pension at the rate of forty-two dollars per month from and after the passage of the act.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the report in that case may be read.

Mr. RUSK. I will state for the information of the gentleman from Indiana that there is no report accompanying this bill. I will explain the case in a single minute. This man has lost an arm and a leg—

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not waive the point of order while the gentleman is making his explanation.

Mr. RUSK. This man has lost an arm and a leg on the same side, but under existing laws he can draw a pension only for the loss of one limb. We passed at the last session of Congress a general bill, including this man and seventeen others. The Senate committee reported adversely on that general bill, but are willing to recommend a bill for this man. That is the whole of the case.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think such cases ought to be provided for by a general law; but as they are not, I have no objection to this bill. It is manifestly just.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FRANCISCO QUESADA.

Mr. THOMAS, of Virginia, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 4257) granting a pension to Francisco Quesada.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Francisco Quesada, late a private of Company C, Twenty-fifth Regiment, New York Volunteers, and pay him a pension, to take effect from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THOMAS, of Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. RUSK. I ask unanimous consent that the House proceed now to the consideration of the bills which have been referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar in the House, reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, beginning with bill No. 4325.

No objection was made, and the House proceeded to the consideration of the bills heretofore reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar; which was discharged from the further consideration of the same.

WILLIAM R. DUNCAN.

The first bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4325) granting a pension to William R. Duncan.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William R. Duncan, late a private in Company G, Thirteenth Regiment Tennessee Volunteers, and pay him a pension from June 4, 1873, up to the present time and hereafter.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SAMUEL P. EVANS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4326) granting a pension to Samuel P. Evans.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Samuel P. Evans, late lieutenant in Company A, Fifth Regiment Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension as captain of said company from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGET LEAFFY.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4327) granting a pension to Bridget Leaffy.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Bridget Leaffy, widow of Lawrence W. Leaffy, late a private in Company K, One hundred and ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

H. GODFREY HUNTER.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4328) granting a pension to H. Godfrey Hunter.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of H. Godfrey Hunter, late surgeon in the Twenty-fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM H. SMALL.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4329) granting a pension to William H. Small.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William H. Small, late a private in Companies E and K, Fifteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry, and pay him a pension as for the loss of a leg from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CYPHERT P. GILLET.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4330) granting a pension to Cyphert P. Gillett.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Cyphert P. Gillett, late a private in Company D, Eightieth Regiment Iowa Infantry Volunteers, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SARAH ANN CROSBY.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4331) granting a pension to Sarah Ann Crosby.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah Ann Crosby, mother of Robert D. Crosby, late first lieutenant in Company F, Forty-ninth Regiment United States Colored Troops, and pay her arrears of pension from the date of the death of her said son until the date of the commencement of her pension.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FANNIE E. RECORDS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4332) granting a pension to Fannie E. Records.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Fannie E. Records, widow of Albert B. Records, a private in Company G, Fifteenth Regiment Maine Volunteers, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JAMES ROUNSFELL.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4333) granting a pension to James Rounsfell, a private in Company K of the One hundredth New York Infantry.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James Rounsfell, a private in Company K, One hundredth Regiment New York Infantry Volunteers, in the army of the rebellion.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM T. SIMMS.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4334) granting a pension to William T. Simms.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William T. Simms, late first lieutenant of Company E, Eighty-second Regiment New York Volunteers, and pay him a pension for permanent and total disability of the first class from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARY C. TOY.

The last bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3884) granting a pension to Mary C. Toy.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary C. Toy, widow of John P. Toy, late private of Company A, Sixty-sixth Regiment Iowa Volunteers, and that she be paid a pension from the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PENSIONS TO SOLDIERS OF MEXICAN WAR.

Mr. SMALL. I now ask leave to report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, with a recommendation that the same do not pass, the bill (H. R. No. 577) granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the war with Mexico and the widows of deceased soldiers. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and that the report accompanying the same be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I ask permission on behalf of the minority of the committee to submit a minority report upon this bill. That report will be signed by the honorable chairman of the committee [Mr. RUSK] and by several other members of the committee. I ask that it be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

No objection was made, and it was so ordered.

ELVIRA KIDD.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask unanimous consent that the adverse report in the case of Elvira Kidd be taken from the table and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

No objection was made, and it was so ordered.

ARTIFICIAL LIMBS FOR DISABLED SOLDIERS.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions to which was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4385) to regulate the issue of artificial limbs to disabled soldiers, seamen, and others, reported the same with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The first section of the bill provides that every person who, in the line of duty in the military or naval service of the United States, shall have lost a limb or sustained bodily injuries depriving him of the use of any of his limbs, shall receive once every five years an artificial limb, or an appliance to support and strengthen his disabled limb, under such regulations as the Surgeon-General of the Army may prescribe; that such artificial limb or appliance shall be furnished only in kind and through the Medical Department of the Army, and that the period of five years shall be held to commence with the filing of the first application after the 7th day of June, in the year 1870.

The second section provides that every person entitled under the laws of the United States to a pension on account of a leg or arm which is wholly disabled, and cannot be rendered serviceable by any mechanical appliance, shall be entitled to receive the same pension as if said leg or arm had been amputated at or above the knee or elbow.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. With the consent of the chairman of the committee [Mr. RUSK] and the gentleman who reports this bill, [Mr. MARTIN,] I offer the following as an additional section:

That all laws prohibiting the payment of pensions to the soldiers of the revolutionary war and the war of 1812, and to their widows, on account of disloyalty, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. BANNING. I would inquire what change is made in the law already upon the statute-book by this bill?

Mr. MARTIN. The law as it now stands only provides for those who lost limbs in the war for the suppression of the rebellion. This bill extends the same provision to other wars.

Mr. THOMPSON. Is the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] germane to this bill?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I offer it as a separate section.

Mr. THOMPSON. I know that; but it is upon a different subject entirely.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That question has not been presented to the Chair.

Mr. THOMPSON. I raise it now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is compelled to sustain the point of order.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I appeal from the decision of the Chair. Gentlemen will see how far they will get along to-night if they choose to fight us upon this point.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to make a suggestion. It may be that there is not a quorum in the House.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I know there is not.

Mr. HOLMAN. This proposition contains two parts. In the first place it revives the law as to pensioners of the revolutionary war. My friend from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] is well aware of the fact that there is no such class of pensioners now in existence.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I will tell you about that presently.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, it is the fact, as I understand, that the pensioners of the revolutionary war have finally entirely disappeared by death; and I think my friend from Virginia is aware of the fact that none of them were affected by our legislation discontinuing pensioners in consequence of disloyalty.

The other provision I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. THOMPSON] will not object to, because it has already passed the House and is before the Senate in another bill. Its passage in this bill can do no possible harm.

There is at least one provision in this bill which certainly ought to become a law. The last section is a very valuable and important provision. Even if I should be mistaken in my understanding that there are now no surviving soldiers of the war of the Revolution, the proposition ought certainly not to excite objection, since none of us could desire to deprive the veterans of that war (if any should survive) of their pensions. I suggest to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. THOMPSON] that if any revolutionary pensioner was deprived of his pension by reason of disloyalty, and still survives, his pension should certainly be restored; for the venerable age, the vast years of any soldier of that war must have rendered it impossible that he should have participated actively in the late rebellion.

As to the other proposition, I again submit that it has already been incorporated in a bill passed by the House, so that the only effect of insisting on the point of order and having a division of the House will be to defeat the passage of the bill, which contains at any rate one section that is certainly proper and just.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman that one sailor of the Revolution, a resident of my district, still survives.

Mr. HOLMAN. That may be so. I am speaking of revolutionary soldiers upon the pension-list.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraw his point of order?

Mr. THOMPSON. No, sir. I think that my objection is entirely misapprehended. If I am understood as occupying the position of objecting to the granting or continuing of pensions to soldiers of the Revolution, then I am misunderstood and my purpose in raising the point is entirely misapprehended.

Here is a bill granting to wounded soldiers the right to be furnished with artificial limbs under certain restrictions, or enlarging the rights heretofore granted in that respect. That is right. But the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia does not propose to carry out that object, nor does it relate at all to the right granted by the bill. It proposes to incorporate in this bill a separate, distinct, and independent subject—a proposition entirely worthy of attention and one that would receive my approbation and support when presented in proper form. But what propriety is there in incorporating into the bill under consideration the repeal of another act in reference to the granting of pensions to soldiers of the revolutionary war? You might as well consolidate a mass of different measures into one bill—"omnibus" the whole thing, and pass (as used to be done in our State Legislatures) an act from the title of which one could ascertain nothing as to its character.

Now, here is a bill which by its title relates to the furnishing of artificial limbs to wounded soldiers; and it is proposed to inject into this measure another separate and independent subject—the repeal of a law in reference to disabilities of soldiers of the revolutionary war or other wars.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a parliamentary question. After the gentleman from Virginia offered this amendment the gentleman from Ohio arose and addressed the Chair; therefore I submit that the point of order came too late. The occupant of the Chair, who is a master of parliamentary law, is well aware of the fact that it has always been held that after there has been any discussion upon an amendment it is too late to raise a point of order upon it.

Mr. THOMPSON. The Chair has already sustained the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the fact.

Mr. THOMPSON. Whether the point of order came too late or too early, it has been sustained.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would have taken the position indicated by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] if he had understood the gentleman from Ohio as debating the proposition; but he understood the remark of the gentleman from Ohio as merely in the nature of an inquiry. The Chair has ruled the amendment out of order for two reasons. In the first place this is a bill to regulate the issue of artificial limbs to disabled soldiers, seamen, and others; and an amendment to repeal a law upon another subject, as proposed by the gentleman from Virginia, is not germane to the bill. It is not in order for another reason, which the Chair will state. The House assigned the session this evening for the consideration of reports from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and for those only. This is not a report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and therefore the Chair is constrained on that ground to sustain the point of order and to rule the amendment out.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. But, Mr. Speaker, when the Committee on Invalid Pensions makes a report to this House it is held by the Chair that the proposition which is before the House on its passage is not open to amendment by any member of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment itself is not germane to the proposition reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and it is beside a proposition which does not come from that committee. The Chair does not rule that a proposition before the House is not open to germane amendments.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I understood the Chair to rule in that way. I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia takes an appeal from the decision of the Chair, and the question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House? The gentleman will first, however, reduce his appeal to writing.

Mr. SENER. It is evident there is no quorum present, and, to save the House from a dead lock, I move we adjourn.

Mr. RUSK. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will withdraw that motion. This is the most important bill we have presented to-night, and it ought to be considered and acted on.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. By unanimous consent I hope I may be heard for a minute or two. I think this matter can be adjusted if gentlemen on both sides understand it fully.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. I hope it will be adjusted; but the Chair is of the opinion that he is right in the ruling which he has made.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I wish to be heard only for one moment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Early in the evening when I came here I consulted with the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions and with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARTIN] on my left, who reported this bill, and both consented this proposition of mine should be admitted as an amendment to come in as a separate section. They did so for the reason that the House had once before passed the same provision, but it passed in a bill revising the entire body of laws relating to pensions, giving pensions to all who served in the war, adding immensely to the expense of the Treasury. So objectionable indeed was the measure to the Senate that that body refused to act on it, and this clause which the House agreed should become a law, striking out of existing law the restriction because of the disloyalty of soldiers of the war of 1812 and of the widows of soldiers of the Revolutionary war. It has only failed to become a law because it was attached to a bill so objectionable to the Senate.

Let me add that the President of the United States, in his last annual message, recommended to Congress to strike out this disqualification in existing law. I have presented the proposition in deference to the opinion and recommendation of the President of the United States. My friends on the Committee on Invalid Pensions agreed that I should be allowed to offer it. I will not say it is ungracious on the part of my friend from Pennsylvania now to interpose his objection on a point of order; I will not say that it is ungracious in him now to come forward to-night, at this hour, to defeat a measure of importance as well to the district he represents as other districts throughout the country, after the promise made to me; but I will say that I sat here during the whole evening and saw bill after bill passed in favor of the soldiers of the North when I knew there was not a quorum present, when if I were disposed to be captious and punctilious in regard to constitutional law and the rules of the House, points of order in reference to which I never heard made by the gentleman before—I say I could have objected to the passage of each and every one of those bills because of the want of a quorum, but I did not do so, acting in obedience to that courtesy which should always obtain among members in this House. On the contrary, I permitted them all to pass without objection, without making the point of order there was not a quorum present; and now I appeal to my friend from Pennsylvania to reconsider the matter and not to insist on his point of order against my amendment, but to let it come in and go through, as it has the approval of the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me make a suggestion to the gentleman from Virginia. If I understand the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Virginia, it is presented with the approval of members of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. If, as has been stated, this Committee on Invalid Pensions has already reported a similar measure and that measure has passed the House and is now in the Senate, will not my friend from Virginia withdraw his amendment and let it be reported as an independent bill from the same committee for our action?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Before I take any further proceedings in the matter I wish to appeal courteously to my friend from Pennsylvania to withdraw his point of order. He says that he is not adverse to the amendment I have offered, and that his only objection is to the manner in which it is proposed to be passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to remind the gentleman from Virginia that his ruling is made from no feeling of hostility to the measure presented; but because the point of order being made and insisted on, he had no alternative but to decide in accordance with the rules.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withdraw his point of order.

Mr. THOMPSON. My friend from Virginia cannot outdo me in courtesy. He has now put me in a position where I cannot resist his appeal; and therefore, overlooking any irregularity in reference to his proposition, I withdraw my point of order now, once and forever.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order being withdrawn, the amendment is pending.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope I will have the attention of the gentleman reporting this bill as to the effect of this bill. I understand the pensioner is entitled to an artificial limb, but can take its equivalent in money.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I rise to a point of order. There is so much confusion in the House we cannot hear what is going on.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is a very important proposition, and the Chair asks the earnest attention of the House to it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand the law now to be that soldiers who have lost a limb and are entitled to an artificial limb may either receive an artificial limb or so much money in lieu of it from the Treasury. That is the law now. The present bill requires such a person to take the artificial limb without the exercise of the option of taking that or the money in lieu of it. As I understand it, that is the change made by the first section of this bill.

Mr. MARTIN. In the law passed last session to which the gentleman from Indiana alludes we provided for one class of persons entitled to artificial limbs. This bill provides for another class.

Mr. HOLMAN. The law of last session provided that if a soldier who lost an arm at or above the elbow, or a leg at or above the knee, thought it better not to use an artificial limb he might receive the money. Is it not better to leave that option with him?

Mr. SMALL. Such is not the law now. At the last session we passed a law providing that soldiers who had lost an arm at or above the elbow, or a leg at or above the knee, and should receive the pension of the second-class should not be entitled to these artificial limbs at all.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from New Hampshire misapprehended my statement. I know I am not mistaken, for I was very familiar with the enactment of that law. The soldier who lost an arm at or above the elbow, or a leg at or above the knee, was to receive the full pension; but if he could use the artificial limb he was still to have the right of receiving that artificial limb; or if he preferred it he could receive the money in lieu of it. Does the gentleman state that that is not the law?

Mr. SMALL. I say so distinctly that that is not the law. We provided that those men who received pensions at a rate of twenty-four dollars per month should not be entitled to artificial limbs.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not understand the gentleman to deny my proposition as to what is the law of the land. I was myself on the committee that framed that provision of the act of last session.

Mr. SMALL. This is the law:

That all persons who are now entitled to pensions under existing laws and who have lost either an arm at or above the elbow, or a leg at or above the knee, shall be rated in the second class, and shall receive twenty-four dollars per month: Provided, That no artificial limbs, or commutation therefor, shall be furnished to such persons as shall be entitled to pensions under this act.

Mr. HOLMAN. Exactly; that is the law.

Mr. SMALL. But no person is entitled to artificial limbs under that law.

Mr. HOLMAN. But where the loss of limb was such that an artificial limb could be used, the soldier was entitled to receive that limb. He could either receive the money or the artificial limb. But now the proposition is that he shall not exercise this option, but shall receive the artificial limb. It seems to me that the propriety of this legislation is very questionable.

Mr. MARTIN. The reason of it is simply this: that in all cases where artificial limbs cannot be worn the pensions have been increased, and this bill increases the pensions of a class unable to use these artificial limbs, who were left out of the previous act. It provides for the case where the leg or arm has been wholly disabled, but has not been amputated. In those cases the pensions are increased.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the second section of the bill; that is right.

Mr. MARTIN. All these have their pensions increased to twenty-four dollars per month.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to that. That is all right. Now, I wish the House to see the point exactly. The law as it stands gives the right of commuting. The person may take either the limb or the money. And the committee now proposes in this bill that the soldier who can use the artificial limb must take it and shall not receive the money. I desire now to move to strike out that first section, in order that that option may still be retained.

Mr. RUSK. If the gentleman who has charge of the bill will yield me five minutes, I think I can straighten this matter up.

Mr. MARTIN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. RUSK. The main objection to the law as it now stands, and which we desire to remedy in this first section, is that it does not extend to all who are entitled to pensions. As the law stands now it only applies to those who were in the war of the late rebellion. It does not apply to the Mexican soldiers, nor to any of those who were engaged in the Indian war or any other war. We desire to wipe out that distinction and extend the law to all who are entitled to pensions. That is the main object. The second object is to give a person an artificial limb where he is entitled to a limb, and where he does not take a limb, to give him the money to which in that case he is entitled. That is what we propose.

Now, I want to state further that we provide in the second section of the bill for everybody who cannot wear a limb. They go in the second class and draw twenty-four dollars a month under the law. The law as it now stands says that they may draw twenty-four dollars a month. If they decline to receive the artificial limb they go in the second class and do not receive any artificial limb.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now I wish to say that I think one object of the bill is right, and that is in preventing these soldiers from receiving pensions and at the same time artificial limbs. But is it right that a soldier who has lost his arm below the elbow and does not think proper to use an artificial limb shall lose the benefit of the act?

Mr. RUSK. If a soldier can use an artificial limb and if such is the report of the examining surgeon, then he is entitled to an artificial limb; but if the report of the examining surgeon is that he cannot use an artificial limb, then he is entitled to go into the second class and receive twenty-four dollars per month under the second section of this bill. The only question now before the House is whether a soldier shall be entitled to an artificial limb or to money in lieu of it.

Mr. COTTON. Why not leave it to the option of the soldier?

Mr. RUSK. Why not leave him the option of having a pair of pantaloons?

Mr. MARTIN. The object is to supply as far as possible that which he lost in the service of the Government and not furnish him with money. If he cannot wear an artificial limb he has the option of being paid in the second class, being twenty-four dollars a month.

Mr. HOLMAN. The question before the House is whether if the soldier could wear an artificial limb he should not receive the corresponding value if he prefers to do so, and to the proposition that he may not do so, I for one do not agree. If the soldier prefers to receive money rather than an artificial limb, why not give him the option to do so? Is there anything wrong in it? It is a question of the expenditure of so much money.

Mr. MARTIN. There is this reason: we have provided for men who cannot wear an artificial limb, increased pension. We provide that all those who are disabled by the loss of a limb shall be entitled to either an artificial limb or shall be placed in the second class, who receive twenty-four dollars a month.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to move an amendment to the first section of the bill, and I ask that it be again read.

The Clerk read the first section of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw the motion to strike out the entire section, and I move to strike out the words "only in kind." And I wish to say a single word as to the effect of that amendment. Under the existing law a soldier who has lost a limb can receive either an artificial limb or the value in money from the Treasury of the United States, and I wish to continue that law.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. The idea of the action of the Government, as I understand it, was that it would furnish the means of locomotion to its maimed soldiers, that it would furnish means by which the soldiers could assist themselves; that it would give them either a wooden leg or a cork leg, a wooden arm or a cork arm. I believe that the Government was right in its generosity in making this provision; and I think that the Committee on Invalid Pensions are right in requiring of the soldiers to take these artificial limbs. The very moment that we give them permission to take money instead of artificial limbs, that very moment we encourage them to take money from the Government and spend it in a manner unbecoming soldiers. I say that it would be saving the Government a great deal of money to compel the soldiers to take these artificial arms or legs. If they do not choose to accept them, then they are placed in the second class at twenty-four dollars a month.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am as anxious as is the gentleman from Missouri to prevent money from going out of the Treasury for improper uses; but gentlemen about this Hall whose integrity and character are above reproach state that they cannot use artificial limbs. They find it more convenient to receive the small compensation given by the Government rather than take these artificial limbs. There is more than one man upon this floor who has been in our employment for years and years upon whom the effect of this amendment would be to take away from him the little pittance to which he is now entitled from the Government.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. Does this involve an appropriation from the Treasury?

Mr. HOLMAN. Not at this time.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. Will it?

Mr. HOLMAN. It does require some appropriation of money out of the Treasury of the United States, or will do so at some time hereafter.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. It will require $200,000 of additional appropriation.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I was going to say that if it did take money out of the Treasury and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] supports it, it ought to pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me say to my friend from Missouri [Mr. CRITTENDEN] that it does not matter in what form you put it, it costs the Government exactly the same amount of money. My friend from Wisconsin [Mr. RUSK] will say so.

Mr. RUSK. I think that to pay them fifty dollars each, to which they would be entitled for a foot or a hand, would be a saving of money to the Government, for the reason that the Government would save the cost of transporting the men here to fit the artificial limbs to them.

Mr. HOLMAN. In common with every other gentleman on this floor, I have constituents who will be injuriously affected by this bill if it shall become a law. And I cannot consent, upon a question like this, that the just rights of the soldiers should be overlooked in the haste to get through this session. I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. TODD.]

Mr. SMALL. I would inquire what right the gentleman has to yield to anybody?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARTIN] reported the bill.

Mr. MARTIN. I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TODD] for three minutes.

Mr. TODD. I do not desire to discuss this question at large; but I have received a number of communications from maimed soldiers in my State protesting against the passage of this bill. They put their objection to it upon this ground: That the adjustment of an artificial arm or leg is a very delicate operation in order to enable the soldier to wear it with comfort and ease to himself; consequently, in order to have it rightly adapted to the wounded limb, a number of sittings and fittings must be had. Now, if the wounded soldiers and sailors can select the manufacturer of their artificial limbs to please themselves, they can perhaps have artificial limbs better adjusted than by accepting them from the Government.

There is all over the country much competition in the manufacture of these artificial legs and arms. And very frequently these maimed soldiers can select manufacturers who will furnish artificial limbs to them at less prices than the Government would charge for them. Now, if there be a desire to advance the interest, convenience, and comfort of the maimed soldier, we should leave to him the right to select the manufacturer of the artificial leg or arm he would choose to wear, instead of obliging him to receive one from the Surgeon-General, who selects his own manufacturer and makes it a monopoly and compels the soldier to accept the artificial limb of the person selected by the Surgeon-General.

Mr. MARTIN. I now yield to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SMALL] for three minutes.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I want to ask a question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. TODD.]

Mr. MARTIN. Very well.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Does not the gentleman from Pennsylvania think that the Surgeon-General of the United States Army is better qualified to make a proper selection of an artificial arm or leg to fit the soldiers than they themselves would be?

Mr. TODD. No, I do not; for this reason: If the Surgeon-General of the Army could personally attend to every individual case and ascertain the needs of each maimed soldier, he probably could give as good a judgment on the subject as any man could do. But we must remember that these maimed men are scattered all over the country at a distance from Washington, and cannot have access to the Surgeon-General, while they can have access to the manufacturers of artificial limbs in their several localities.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. The Surgeon-General convenes a board of Army surgeons, who attend to this business for him.

Mr. TODD. There is no man at a distance who can adjust an artificial limb to a maimed soldier with any certainty of fitting him, because the conformation of every man's limbs differs from that of every other man. There must be a particular adjustment to each limb, and no common form of artificial limb can be made that will suit different men. Each artificial leg or arm must be made to fit precisely the individual who has to wear it. A form of limb cannot be got up for the common use of all parties who may desire to use them.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Then he goes into the twenty-four dollar class if he cannot wear it.

Mr. TODD. Every man must be measured for the limb he desires to wear.

Mr. MARTIN. I now yield for three minutes to the gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. SMALL.]

Mr. SMALL. I agree entirely with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that this provision of the bill to compel every soldier to take the artificial limb from the Government is entirely unjust. It is entirely inconsistent with every provision of law that has been passed in regard to furnishing these artificial limbs and pensioning soldiers down to the present time. It is provided by general statute that maimed soldiers shall be furnished with artificial limbs at a fixed price. If they do not want to take them they can have the commutation price in money for the artificial arm or leg. It is provided, too, that certain persons who would be entitled to these limbs shall have an additional pension of six dollars a month. Now it is entirely plain that every time Congress has legislated upon this subject they have regarded that the soldier has not been fully compensated by a pension for the loss of his limb. Consequently they gave something more—an artificial limb. And now for the first time it is proposed by this bill to strike that provision from the statute-book—to say that the soldier shall take what he does not want, what is of no use to him, and at the same time that his pension shall not be increased. In all former cases when we have provided for furnishing artificial limbs it has been as an addition to the pension. If the soldier has not chosen to take the limb we have given him either commutation in money or additional pension. I hope, therefore, that the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, that the soldier must take the limb in kind, will be rejected; so that these soldiers may hereafter receive if they choose, as they have heretofore, commutation in money instead of artificial limbs.

Now, it is said that these artificial legs and arms are desired by all our wounded soldiers. That is not so, as I can say from my own knowledge. A great many of these soldiers tell me that they would not wear these artificial limbs except for the appearance of the thing; that when they get away from the crowd they go without them. But we propose to say to these soldiers, "You must either take what is of no use to you or you shall have nothing."

Now, Mr. Speaker, does the Government suffer at all by allowing money commutation instead of the artificial limb? No, sir; the cost to the Government by the commutation is not so much, because under the law when you have furnished the limb you must provide for having the soldier go to the place where it is to be furnished in order to have it fitted. You save this expense by allowing him a commutation in money.

I hope that this amendment will be rejected.

Mr. MARTIN. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. YOUNG.]

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this amendment. No man in this House can sympathize more than I do with the soldiers of this country, no matter what may have been the color of their uniform. No man on the other side of the House will go further than myself to do all that is possible for the soldiers of the Union Army, and especially those poor men who have been maimed for life. Upon that point it is not necessary for me to say anything further.

While upon the floor, I wish to remark that one thing which has amazed me very much is the magnanimity of my friend from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.] I can attribute it to but a single cause. I have investigated the matter since I came upon the floor this evening, and I am told that the softening of my friend's heart is connected with the tragedy which was enacted yesterday at this Capitol. I am glad that even this softened his heart. I am told that the man who yesterday leaped from the Dome was a Union soldier, and had a claim which had been referred to the Committee on War Claims, and by them referred to a sub-committee consisting of my friend from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] and my friend from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN;] that immediately upon the receipt of the intelligence that this disposition had been made of his claim, this man went up to the Dome and leaped off!

Mr. MARTIN. I move the previous question.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the previous question is called, I wish to modify my amendment by striking out the word "only" and inserting after the words "in kind" the words "or the value thereof in money."

Mr. MARTIN. I have no objection to that amendment. I now renew the call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment of Mr. HOLMAN was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MARTIN. I move to amend the title of the bill by adding the words "and for other purposes."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. DANFORD. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at ten o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. ALBRIGHT: The petition of Fenton G. Wells and 45 others, of Washington, District of Columbia, asking that provision be made for the payment of employes and laborers under contractors in said city, to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. ARMSTRONG: The petition of John L. Taylor, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CESSNA: The remonstrance of citizens of Franklin County, Pennsylvania, against the restoration of the duty on tea and coffee, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. KELLEY: The petition of citizens of Philadelphia, for the passage of the bill in aid of the Northern Pacific Railroad, to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

Also, the petition of citizens and corporations of Pennsylvania representing $30,000,000 of capital, praying for the extension of the national credit to aid the completion of a great southern railroad line to the Pacific, to the same committee.

By Mr. LAMAR: The petition of O. R. Singleton, of Mississippi, for the removal of his political disabilities, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LOWNDES: The petition of Daniel Weisel, of Hagerstown, Maryland, for relief, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MYERS: Resolutions of the Commercial Exchange Association of Philadelphia, against the imposition of duties or taxes on imports or manufactures which have once paid duties or taxes and have passed from the possession of the Government, also in opposition to the proposed increase of the tax on whisky, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MOORE: The petition of citizens of Washington County, Pennsylvania, for the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction of duties made in 1872 and against a duty on tea and coffee and revival of internal taxes, to the same committee.

By Mr. O'BRIEN: The petition of Lewis Jones, of Baltimore, for relief, to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. PACKARD: The petition of members of the Woman's National Christian Temperance Union, of Henry County, Indiana, for restrictive legislation in regard to alcoholic liquors, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PACKER: The petition of artisans, manufacturers, and workers in iron and coal, citizens of Harrisburgh, Pennsylvania, that the national credit be extended to aid in the completion of a great southern line of railroad to the Pacific, to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

Also, two other petitions of citizens of Harrisburgh, Pennsylvania, of similar import, to the same committee.

By Mr. PHILLIPS: The petition of the mayor and other citizens of Leavenworth, Kansas, for the passage of the bill to incorporate the Eastern and Western Transportation Company, to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

By Mr. PIERCE: The petition of William M. Barrett, of Boston, Massachusetts, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. POLAND: The petition of Wells Richardson and others, for the repeal of the stamp tax on drugs, perfumery, proprietary medicines, &c., to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana: The petition of 24 citizens of Saint Francis County, Arkansas, for the passage of a law to authorize the manufacture, use, and sale of patent-right articles by others than owners of patent-rights, upon payment of reasonable royalty thereon, to the Committee on Patents.

Also, the petition of 11 citizens of Saline County, Kansas, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 18 citizens of Orleans County, Vermont, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 23 citizens of Wisconsin, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 14 citizens of Grant County, Wisconsin, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 9 citizens of Lancaster County, Nebraska, of similar import, to the same committee.

By Mr. SHOEMAKER, of Pennsylvania: The petition of Calvin Pardee and 75 others, of Luzerne County, Pennsylvania, for the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction of duties made in 1872 and against a duty on tea and coffee and revival of internal taxes, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. STONE: Resolutions of the General Assembly of the State of Missouri, relative to the establishment of a branch mint in Saint Louis, to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. WELLS: Resolutions of the Saint Louis Board of Trade, approving the bill for the establishment of a branch mint at Saint Louis, to the same committee.

By Mr. WOODWORTH: The petition of 32 citizens of Youngstown, Ohio, for the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction of duties made in 1872 and against a duty on tea and coffee, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. —: Memorial of settlers on the military reservation at Camp Independence, California, that they be permitted to acquire title to their homes under the homestead and pre-emption laws, to the Committee on the Public Lands.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 19, 1875.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of Wednesday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, transmitting, in obedience to law, a copy of the report of Major F. U. Farquhar of the survey of a part of the subdivision of the Mississippi route; which was referred to the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Sea-board, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a report of the Acting Secretary of the Interior, in answer to a resolution of February 2, 1875, transmitting information in relation to services rendered by William P. Adair and C. N. Vann to the Osage Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CREDENTIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented the credentials of Hon. Angus Cameron, chosen by the Legislature of Wisconsin a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1875; which were read and ordered to be filed.

Mr. PRATT presented the credentials of Hon. Joseph E. McDonald, chosen by the Legislature of Indiana a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1875; which were read and ordered to be filed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of the Woman's Temperance Union of the city of Wilmington, Delaware, signed by a large number of the women of Wilmington, asking for such legislation as will prohibit the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAMERON. I present a resolution of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, in favor of an appropriation for the improvement of the harbor of Erie in that State; and as it is short I will ask the Clerk to read it.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in General Assembly met. That our Senators be instructed, and members of the House of Representatives in Congress be requested, to vote for and use all proper means of securing from Congress an appropriation for the improvement of the harbor of Erie in this Commonwealth, and that the governor be requested to transmit copies of this resolution to our Senators and Members of Congress.

Attest:

ELBRIDGE MCCONKEY,
Resident Clerk of the House of Representatives.
THOMAS B. COCHRAN,
Journal Clerk of the Senate.

Mr. SCOTT. I move that the resolution presented by my colleague—I see that he has left the Chamber—be referred to the Committee on Commerce and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, presented a memorial of the president and secretary of the Vermont State Medical Society, representing about five hundred physicians of the State of Vermont, praying for such legislation as will the better promote the efficiency of the Medical Corps of the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of W. C. A. Berkey, of Grand Rapids, Michigan, asking Congress to give each Union soldier, from a new issue, $200 in United States legal-tender notes, not bearing interest, coined by the Government, that will be equal to gold; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SCOTT. I present a memorial of merchants, ship-owners, and others interested in the commerce of the city of Philadelphia, protesting against the passage of the bill providing for a reorganization of the Light-House Board. I move its reference to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SARGENT. On the question of reference I wish to be heard one moment. By instruction of the Senate the Committee on Appropriations were required to examine into the expediency of a reorganization of the Light-House Board, whether the responsibility of the Secretary of the Treasury was sufficient for the interests of the public service in the operations of the board. A report of a sub-committee has been printed and sent back to the committee. This matter has been somewhat discussed in the papers and very much opposed by certain interests; I think, however, under great misapprehension. The report of the sub-committee shows clearly by figures that the present light-house system is costing about $400,000 more than it ought for unnecessary expenses; for instance, by keeping up several fleets to perform much the same service, when one single fleet well officered would perform the same thing. The report further showed that the improvements which are made in Europe, in France, England, and other leading countries, in this particular, are not adopted by the present Light-House Board. Some of them are of the most striking character, leading to economy and making still further improvement. The Committee on Commerce I believe to be a committee that can very well investigate these matters, and if they have a bill before them I will withdraw any objection to the reference of this memorial to them; but I call their attention to that report, and I also call the attention of newspapers and others disposed to treat this subject fairly to the important considerations which are laid down in that report, and to the fact that the recommendations spring entirely from a regard for the interest of the public service and are not in the interest of the Navy, of the Army, of the Engineer Corps, or of any other corps whatever.

Mr. SCOTT. I observe that the petition refers to a House bill by number, and I would ask the Senator from California whether that bill is now before the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. SARGENT. I am not aware of any House bill of that number, but I introduced a bill myself some months ago which was sent to the Committee on Commerce and they are considering it, and in connection therewith the memorial may go to that committee.

Mr. SCOTT. I only desire that the memorial shall have the proper reference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Commerce, if there be no objection.

Mr. SCOTT presented a resolution of the Commercial Exchange Association of Philadelphia, protesting against the proposed increase of tax on whisky from fifty cents to one dollar per gallon, and against the imposition of duties or taxation upon property which has already been subject to duty or taxation; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of members of the Soldiers and Sailors' Union of Philadelphia, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 3341) giving bounty to all soldiers, sailors, and marines who served in the war of 1861; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented five petitions of citizens of Montour County, Allegheny County, and Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying that the aid of the national credit be extended to the completion of a great southern line of railroad to the Pacific; which were referred to the Committee on Railroads.

He also presented two memorials of citizens of Franklin County and Luzerne County, Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the restoration of the duty on tea and coffee or any revival of internal taxes and praying for the repeal of the 10 per cent. tariff reduction of 1872; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAMERON presented petitions of citizens of Raven Run and Saint Nicholas, Schuylkill County, and two petitions of citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying that the aid of the national credit be extended to the completion of a great southern line to the Pacific; which were referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. PATTERSON presented a memorial of physicians of South Carolina, praying for such legislation as will the better promote the efficiency of the Medical Corps of the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of South Carolina, instructing the Senators and Representatives from that State to give earnest and united support to any measure that seeks to extend aid to the Texas Pacific Railway; which was referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. DAVIS presented a memorial of citizens of Brooke County, West Virginia, remonstrating against the restoration of duties on tea and coffee and praying the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction of duties on foreign goods made by the act of 1872; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LEWIS presented a petition of James A. J. Waites and other invalid pensioners, praying the passage of such a bill that their pension may date from their discharge from the United States service; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, presented the petition of Alvan N. Sabin, late second lieutenant of the Fifth Michigan Cavalry, praying to be allowed arrearages of pay; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of A. W. Leggett, of Michigan, father of Percy S. Leggett, who was killed in the late war, praying that the arrearages of pay due his son may be paid to him; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BOGY presented a resolution of the Legislature of Missouri, in favor of the establishment of a branch mint at Saint Louis; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPENCER presented a memorial of Mrs. Lavinia Mize, widow of James R. Mize, late private Company E, First Regiment Alabama Cavalry Volunteers, praying to be allowed arrearages of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of Louisa Kitchens, praying a pension for the service of her husband in the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of Lavinia Mize, widow of James R. Mize, praying that the bounty due her husband may be paid her; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. STEVENSON presented the petition of R. W. Johnson, of Arkansas, praying the removal of his political disabilities; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JOHNSTON presented a resolution adopted at a meeting of the tobacco association at Richmond, protesting against any increase of the tax on manufactured tobacco; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the Cotton Exchange of Norfolk and Portsmouth, Virginia, in favor of Government aid to the inland navigation opened up by the Dismal Swamp Canal and Albemarle and Chesapeake Canal Companies from Chesapeake Bay to Albemarle and Pamlico Sounds, North Carolina; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HAMLIN presented a petition of Asa Cushman and other citizens of Auburn, Maine, praying for the prohibition of the manufacture, importation, and sale of all alcoholic beverages in the Territories of the United States and in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HARVEY presented several memorials of physicians of Kansas, praying for such legislation as will the better promote the efficiency of the Medical Corps of the Army; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CONOVER presented two memorials of physicians of Florida, praying for such legislation as will the better promote the efficiency of the Medical Corps of the Army; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ANTHONY presented a memorial of members of the Medical Society of Rhode Island, praying for such legislation as will the better promote the efficiency of the Medical Corps of the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MITCHELL. I present a petition of citizens of Oregon, praying the passage of an act providing for a scientific survey of Eastern Oregon, and of portions of the Territory of Idaho and State of Nevada; and as it is very brief, I will ask permission to read it:

The undersigned, citizens of Oregon, most respectfully represent that a great extent of territory in Oregon, Idaho, and Nevada—rich in auriferous deposits and in pastoral and agricultural resources—is destitute of the necessary water for the various wants of man; that the water of Snake River, from its high elevation, can be carried through canals at reasonable expense to supply this vast region in question, and for this purpose we ask that an act may be passed decreeing that a scientific survey may be made of this country referred to, to determine the feasibility of this object, and also to ascertain the richness of an "extinct river," supposed to run southerly through Eastern Oregon, Western Nevada, and Eastern California—believed to be the ancient channel of the Columbia; and if the "gravel lead" in Eastern Oregon and the "Big Blue River lead" in California are one and the same river channel. For which we will ever pray.

This petition is numerously signed. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, presented a petition of citizens of Fairfield, Maine, praying for the prohibition of the manufacture, importation, and sale of all alcoholic beverages in the Territories of the United States and in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALCORN presented the memorial of John Cleary, of Hinds County, Mississippi, praying for compensation for certain of his goods, wares, and merchandise taken from him for the use of the United States Government, and for a store-house destroyed by the military forces of the United States, under Major-General W. T. Sherman, during the war of the rebellion; or that his claim for said taking and destruction be referred to the commissioners of claims, or the Court of Claims; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BOUTWELL presented a petition of the Methodist Episcopal church of Ballardale, Massachusetts, praying for the prohibition of the manufacture, importation, and sale of all alcoholic beverages in the Territories of the United States and in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Lucius R. Eastman, a citizen of Massachusetts, and a loyal subject of the American Union, in favor of universal peace; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Massachusetts, in favor of the admission of P. B. S. Pinchback, Senator-elect from the State of Louisiana, to a seat in the Senate; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GOLDTHWAITE presented two memorials of physicians of Florida, praying for such legislation as will the better promote the efficiency of the Medical Corps of the Army; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of James R. Porter, praying remuneration for the value of one hundred and twenty-two oxen and two mules captured and driven away by hostile Indians while he was engaged in the performance of a contract to furnish cattle to the Government; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FLANAGAN presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Texas, instructing and requesting the congressional delegation from that State to urge upon Congress the early and favorable consideration of the claims upon the people's gratitude of those who rendered service in the Army and Navy of the United States in the late war with Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FENTON presented a petition of John Mills and other citizens of Warren County, New York, praying for the prohibition of the manufacture, importation, and sale of all alcoholic beverages in the Territories of the United States and in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented memorials of soldiers in the volunteer forces of the United States of Livingston and Ontario Counties, New York; of New York City; of Schenectady County, New York; of Otsego County, New York; of Orange County, New York; of Ulster County, New York; and of Allegany County, New York, praying the passage of the bill now pending before Congress for granting bounties to disabled soldiers; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a resolution of the Legislature of New York, in favor of the improvement of East River from the southern end of Blackwell's Island to a point off Corlear's Hook; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FENTON. I present a memorial of the New York Board of Trade, remonstrating against the cancellation of the contract for the China mail service, and a like memorial of New York merchants and manufacturers, quite extensively signed, opposing the withdrawal of the China mail service. My colleague, who is not now in his seat, presented a like memorial from the importers and merchants engaged in the China trade and bankers in the city of New York yesterday, and supposing that the subject to which it referred had been reported by a committee to the Senate, he asked that the memorial might be laid on the table and printed. I now move that that memorial, together with these which I now present, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLAYTON presented a memorial of citizens of Arkansas, settlers on the Hot Springs reservation in that State, praying for such legislation as will secure them in their rights and quiet the titles to certain claims thereon; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PRATT presented the petition of the Universalist church congregation, of Auburn, Maine, praying for the prohibition of the manufacture, importation, and sale of all alcoholic beverages in the Territories of the United States and in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOWE presented a memorial of physicians of Wisconsin, praying for such legislation as will the better promote the efficiency of the Medical Corps of the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WRIGHT presented a memorial of late soldiers of the United States residing in Ringgold County, Iowa, and a memorial of late soldiers of the United States residing in Marion County, Iowa, praying for bounty to disabled soldiers; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. NORWOOD, it was Ordered, That Charles L. Bradwell have leave to withdraw his petition and papers from the files of the Senate.

W. G. FORD.

On motion of Mr. GOLDTHWAITE, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of W. G. Ford, of Memphis, Tennessee, for cotton taken and sold by the United States Government during the war, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. LEWIS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1181) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide a government for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," reported it with amendments.

Mr. KELLY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1310) providing for the extension of the time for completing the survey and location of the Portland, Dalles and Salt Lake Railroad, reported it without amendment.

Mr. THURMAN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1186) for the relief of S. P. Jackson and others, submitted a report thereon, and asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. THURMAN also, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred a resolution of the Legislature of California, in favor of the formation of a commission to adjust losses sustained by A. P. Jackson and others by being ejected from certain lands covered by a Mexican grant, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands; which was agreed to.

Mr. ALCORN. When the committees were called, the Committee on Mines and Mining was informally passed over. I hold in my hand a bill that was reported at the last session of Congress, which proposes to grant a charter to a company to construct a tunnel through the White Pine Mountain. That mountain is in the State of Nevada, and lies in its vast proportions, not having been worked at all, nor is there any probability that it will be worked. This company propose an experiment in the way of constructing a tunnel. I have not seen any one who has any direct opposition to the bill. I consulted with the Senator from Nevada not now in his seat, [Mr. JONES,] and he says that he has no objection to it whatever. From the fact that it has been so long in my hands and that on account of the modesty that is a part of my nature I have refrained up to this time from troubling the Senate to consider this bill, I ask that it may be now taken up and passed upon. If there is objection to it, let the bill be defeated; if there is no objection, I ask that the Senate will permit the parties to construct this tunnel. I think they are entitled to it. The committee were unanimously of the opinion that no harm could ensue from it and that great good might be the result. I ask the Senate to pass upon it. It is the bill (S. No. 720) conferring the right to construct a tunnel through the White Pine Mountain, State of Nevada, and to purchase public lands contiguous thereto.

Mr. WRIGHT. I have a report from the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment that I desire to submit at this time.

Mr. ALCORN. Do I understand the Senator to object to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. WRIGHT. I do not object to the bill, but I ask to present a report at this time. I believe reports are in order.

Mr. ALCORN. Very well.

REORGANIZATION OF THE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. WRIGHT. There was referred on the 17th of this month to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment a bill (H. R. No. 2978) to provide for the reorganization of the Treasury Department of the United States, and for other purposes. The committee have had this bill under consideration and have been unable to agree in a recommendation that the bill shall pass. They have made several amendments to the bill, however, and instruct me to report it back with amendments. I ask that the bill may go upon the Calendar with a view to have it considered to-morrow, if the Senate may deem it advisable to do so. I may be pardoned for saying, in this connection, that one thing which controlled the committee not a little was the fact that this bill proposed a reorganization of the Treasury Department alone, whereas the committee were of opinion that if reorganization was entered upon at all it ought to be of the several branches of the civil service, and that at this time it was hardly advisable that we should enter upon the reorganization of this Department alone. This and other considerations influenced us in the recommendation that we make upon this bill at this time. I report the bill back therefore, as instructed by the committee, without a recommendation, and ask that it go upon the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. WRIGHT. In this same connection I am instructed by the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment to report a resolution which I ask may be read; and I will say now to the Senate that I shall ask the consideration of the resolution to-morrow morning in connection with the bill which I have just reported, if the preference is to take up this resolution with the view indicated in the resolution. I ask that the resolution may be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of five members of the Senate be appointed, whose duty it shall be to examine and thoroughly investigate the several branches of the civil service with a view to the reorganization of the several Departments thereof, the reduction of expenditures, and to promote the efficiency of such service, and to report thereon at the next session of Congress by bill or otherwise.

Mr. WRIGHT. I ask that this resolution may be printed, and to-morrow morning when the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment is called I shall call up the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The order to print will be made.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DENNIS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1327) to incorporate the Butchers' Drove-yard Company of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAMERON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1328) to amend sections 1675, 1676, 1681, and 1682, of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JOHNSTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1329) to make West Point, in the State of Virginia, a port of entry; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEWART asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1330) to establish a post-route in California; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEVENSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1331) to remove the political disabilities of Robert W. Johnson, formerly of Arkansas; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

RAILROADS IN THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. STEWART. I am instructed by the Committee on Railroads to ask for a conference committee on the bill (S. No. 378) to provide for the incorporation and regulation of railroad companies in the Territories of the United States, and granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands. The House passed a substitute simply granting the right of way, which requires some modifications. The gentlemen who secured its passage now desire and the committee have instructed me to report it back and ask for a conference with the House. I move that the Senate non-concur in the amendment of the House and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT was authorized by unanimous consent to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Messrs. STEWART, HOWE, and HAGER were appointed.

BUSINESS OF COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. LOGAN. Some time ago, under the order of the Senate, there was an hour given to each one of the committees to consider and pass upon such bills as they wished to have considered. At the time when this Military Committee should have occupied the floor it lacked but fifteen minutes of one o'clock, and we occupied the floor but fifteen or twenty minutes. Probably the time was extended five minutes; it was, however, a very short time, and the committee disposed of but one bill. There is quite a number of bills on the Calendar of military character that are of considerable importance, which I should like to have disposed of, and I ask the Senate that a day next week be agreed upon to be given to that committee. We should only occupy a portion of the day. I give notice at the same time that one of the reasons why we desire the time given to us is for the purpose of considering the bill for the equalization of bounties. That bill has passed the House of Representatives four different times. For the last six years I believe it has been before Congress and has four times passed the House; but it has never been considered by the Senate. It has been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs favorably some two or three times, and it was reported at the last session of Congress. A bill of the same character has also passed the House at this session and been referred to the Military Committee, and is now before it. I desire that that question shall be disposed of, and I hope that no Senator will object to it. I will ask that Wednesday of next week, if there is no objection on the part of any Senator, be set apart for the consideration of that and other bills reported from the Military Committee. If the Senate shall be of the opinion that we have occupied too much time when that bill has been considered, we will then give way; but I want that bill considered—either voted for or against.

Mr. SARGENT. Will my friend from Illinois allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. SARGENT. Is not this the bill of which an allegation is made that it will cost the Government $180,000,000—at any rate a great many millions?

Mr. LOGAN. I do not understand the Senator.

Mr. SARGENT. Is not this bill for the equalization of bounties the bill which it is alleged will cost the Government $180,000,000? I wish to identify the bill. That allegation is made. It may be an exaggeration; it may be merely $100,000,000; but I inquire if this is not the bill of which this remark has been made?

Mr. LOGAN. I will say to the Senator from California that that is rather a strange way of identification; but I will answer his proposition. If his desire is to get it before the country that the bill is objected to because it will cost a great amount of money, I will say this: If any parties allege it will cost $180,000,000, they do not know anything about it. I know there has been an attempt by a certain gentleman—I do not mean any gentleman on the floor of the Senate, but a gentleman connected with the Army, not mentioning his name—to defeat this bill for several years by representing its immense cost. The bill that passed the House the other day, in my judgment, would require the Auditors six or seven years to go through with and dispose of the various claims, and when they should be fully disposed of I do not believe the cost would be $20,000,000. I think I can demonstrate that there is no reason for apprehension as to the cost of this measure.

I will say further, in answer to the Senator, that when claims are being passed through Congress of doubtful character, taking money out of the Treasury every day, it is a very poor answer to a bill for the equalization of bounties to poor soldiers who deserve it to say that it is going to cost a great deal of money. It is their due; it is just to them; it is that money which they have been deprived of, while they served in the Army, by unfairness; and I will state what the unfairness is. When bounties were allowed by law, for instance, that two-years volunteers should be allowed so much, three-years volunteers so much, or veterans, as they may be termed—many of them were mustered out perhaps one day before the two or three years expired, perhaps a week, and advantage was taken of these soldiers by their muster-out just a short time before the time expired to prevent them from obtaining the bounty. They are entitled to it. The law authorized it, contemplated they should receive it, and their deprivation of it is an outrage upon their rights, in my judgment. I think it is about time this matter should be considered by the Senate of the United States; and if the Senate will give me—I do not say give me, but give the committee—an opportunity, I will try to demonstrate not only the justice of this bill, but that it is not going to plunder the Treasury of the United States. All I ask is a fair consideration of the measure. We have been attempting for six years to have it considered. I think it about time at least that the Senate should give an hour to it any how. I ask for next Wednesday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois asks that the Senate assign Wednesday next for the consideration of the bill for the equalization of bounties and other bills from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SARGENT. Does that require unanimous consent, or can a majority assign a special order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It requires a two-thirds vote to make a special order.

Mr. SHERMAN. It can be done only by unanimous consent. By the rule under which we are acting some committee has the floor this morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No committee has the floor at this time.

Mr. SHERMAN. Some committee is entitled to the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that it is in the keeping of the Senate to direct its own business. At the time the motion was made there was no one on the floor, and no one had any special business to present.

Mr. SCOTT. I shall make no objection to the request which the Senator from Illinois has made. That objection shall not come from me unless it comes from other quarters, but I have been patiently waiting for the call of committees in the morning hour under the order which we have made, hoping we would have another hour during the session for the consideration of bills from the Committee on Claims. I only wish to say that if we cannot do that I shall ask to have equal consideration for that committee which shall be accorded to any other committee in fixing a special day, and I shall deem it my duty as chairman of that committee to ask that time be allowed for the consideration of bills from the Committee on Claims. I shall not object to the request of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LOGAN. I stated when I rose first that the hour which was allotted to the Committee on Military Affairs was taken up with other business and we really had no time. The Senator will remember the only bill that was acted upon from the Military Committee was a bill in reference to one of his constituents in which he felt an interest. I took that bill up out of its course to accommodate the Senator. That was the only bill acted on by the Senate coming from the Military Committee. I only ask for some time to be fixed for the consideration of this question. I do not care whether it is night, morning, or noon, or any time; it does not make much difference. I will come here at twelve o'clock at night if that is satisfactory to Senators. I only want to have it considered. I know we have had petitions before our committee counting up to hundreds of thousands really, on this very question, and I have never been able to get it considered in the Senate since I have been here. When I was in the House I had it considered, and it was passed twice there while I was a member of the House. I have tried to get a consideration of it in the Senate, and now all I ask is that the Senate may consider it and dispose of it. I think it is deserving at least of consideration, and I am willing that the Senate may fix the hour; whether in the morning, or afternoon, or at night, is immaterial to me.

Mr. WRIGHT. I suggest to the Senator from Illinois that the Senator from Maine having the appropriation bills in charge is probably opposed to fixing any time in view of his bills in a day session. I suggest that he ask for the evening of Wednesday next, beginning at half past seven o'clock.

Mr. LOGAN. I am willing to do that.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. What was the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That the evening of Wednesday next be set apart for the consideration of bills reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. A session for the consideration of such a bill as has been indicated, a bill that asks $100,000,000 if not $150,000,000, when the people are clamoring about taxes! I am opposed to it night or day, but I am opposed particularly to our sitting on a bill of so much importance as that after night.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. What is the motion?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion before the Senate is that Wednesday evening of next week be specially assigned for the consideration of bills reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, and the Chair is of opinion that it requires a two-thirds vote.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. At this late period in the session to make a special assignment for any committee is not usual. Under the circumstances in which we find ourselves to-day I suggest to my honorable friend that it would be really a great peril to that part of the public business which I know he regards and which we all regard as a matter of necessity, that is the appropriation bills, to make such an order as he proposes.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will allow me, I will relieve him. I have not been very persistent in thrusting business from the committee of which I am chairman before the Senate, as everybody will bear witness. At the last session many of our bills went over because I did not wish to crowd out other business on their account. I will say to the Senator from Maine that if appropriation bills or matters more important than this are before the Senate at the time named I will give way and take another time.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Will it not answer the Senator's purpose if he gives notice that he will seek an opportunity to call up the business in his charge when appropriation bills are not engrossing the attention of the Senate?

Mr. LOGAN. I would rather not do that, but I will give way for the appropriation bills. I say to the Senator, in the presence of the Senate, that I will give way to them, so that there may be no collision.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have no especial relation to anything of importance except the appropriation bills.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not propose to interfere with action on any appropriation bill. I only ask that a time be fixed, so that then I can have a right for the Committee on Military Affairs to be heard.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that some days since the Judiciary Committee reported the House civil-rights bill, which has been in its substance thoroughly discussed in this body already, and therefore it probably need not, so far as any fair debate is concerned, take more than a very short time to dispose of it. I feel it to be my duty to say that as soon as the appropriation bill which is now pending is disposed of, I must move to take it up; and I hope my friend from Illinois will not insist upon any special order which may jeopardize the opportunity of the Senate to dispose of the civil-rights bill.

Mr. LOGAN. I will not jeopardize the civil-rights bill, I will say to the Senator, for I am as much in favor of that bill as he is or any other Senator, and a good deal more in favor of it than some Senators here; but I desire at least to have consideration given to the committee that I represent, because I think it is due to them. They have had no consideration this session. I will get out of the way for anything more important. Senators need not fear that.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator from Illinois in reply to a question of mine stated that there were claims passing every day, and he implied by the word "claims" that they were improper claims. I will go with him and as far as any Senator in resisting all improper claims, and the bias of my mind is rather against claims anyhow, and in nine cases out of ten I vote against them. I do it in every case where I have not the clearest proof to satisfy me that it ought to pass. This Congress has been peculiarly free from the passage of claims. We have passed very few claims. We have passed no subsidies, and I hope we shall pass none.

So far as the soldiers are concerned, I believe for the last twelve years whenever I have had a seat in Congress I have been in favor of doing them justice, and I have that disposition at the present time; but when a bill is brought forward that I am assured at the Treasury Department will cost $500,000 to go over all the work in the Second Auditor's Office since the war closed, and that after that labor shall be completed under it at least $100,000,000 will be taken out of the Treasury—for I have had that information direct from the Treasury Department—I want a great deal of time to consider it.

I would further make the suggestion that these things are pressed on the attention of Congress not so much by soldiers, though they feel an interest in them, as they are by claim agents all over the country, men who examine the legislation of Congress and all the circumstances to see if there is not something which can be got for the class whom they represent, and they have very powerful influence in such legislation in Congress and make an appearance of a public sentiment which I think is often delusive.

But there are matters as important as this bill. For instance, I should like to have my friend from Indiana call up again the question of the admission of Mr. Pinchback. I think the question of war or peace, the future safety of the country, depends upon the settlement of that matter at this session of Congress. I will say, in fact, that I think it is better to decide the question wrong than not to do it at all. I cannot anticipate what the decision of the Senate will be, but after thirty hours of continuous debate on it so recently, it seems to me that debate must be nearly exhausted, and I feel that our democratic friends as well as our own friends are prepared to decide that question one way or the other. But to make special orders destroys any opportunity of taking up the civil-rights bill or the resolution for the admission of Mr. Pinchback, or any remedial legislation which the wisdom of Congress might devise in order to produce tranquillity in the South. For these reasons I shall most strenuously object to making a special order for any purpose.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I desire to give notice that so soon as the Indian appropriation bill is disposed of I shall feel it my duty to call up the bill to enable the people of Colorado to form a State government and shall antagonize that bill against any other bill, except appropriation bills, until action shall have been had.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour having expired, the Chair calls up the unfinished business of yesterday, being the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. HOWE. I ask to what committee the morning hour this morning was due?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Committee on Printing.

Mr. ANTHONY. Then that committee goes over to the next morning hour, I suppose Monday, to-morrow having been given to the committee of which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WRIGHT] is chairman.

Mr. HOWE. It has been usual when the morning hour was frittered away to extend the hour so that some committee might come in and be disposed of. I have been waiting very patiently for the Committee on the Library to be called. That committee has reported a bill which should be considered, and there is an immense public interest requiring it to be considered and acted upon. I believe that committee will be called when the Committee on Printing is disposed of, and I ask the Senator from Maine if he cannot yield an hour this morning? We have spent half an hour here in discussing what we will do next Wednesday.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator had simply insisted on the enforcement of the rule he could have accomplished his purpose.

Mr. HOWE. I suppose if any Senator had done that the debate would have had to stop, but I never did insist on a rule in my life.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Indian appropriation bill is before the Senate unless a motion is made to postpone it.

Mr. HOWE. I ask the Senator from Maine if he will consent to do what has been done heretofore, postpone this subject an hour to allow the committees to be called.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Under similar circumstances to those where it has been done before I certainly would give unanimous consent to do that thing, but under the circumstances in which I brought this bill to the attention of the Senate yesterday I feel extremely reluctant to allow any delay. The Senator from Illinois is also pressing.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine declines to yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I merely wish to reply to one remark of the Senator from California. When he speaks of claim agents, I think it is a very unfair thing to say here in the Senate when a Senator is asking to have a bill taken up by the Senate. I am no claim agent and these petitioners are no claim agents. They are soldiers, honorable and honest men, only asking for their just rights that the law gave them when they were serving their country and of which they have been deprived, I will not say by trick but by an unfair muster out of the service.

Now, I give notice to the Senate that I will during the next week, without mentioning the day, for I may commence on Monday, persist in pressing this bill to which I have referred before the Senate until I get a vote on it in some way.

Mr. LEWIS. I appeal to the Senate—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. All this debate is out of order; and unless a motion is made to postpone the Indian appropriation bill and take up other matters, the Chair will direct the Secretary to proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. ANTHONY. I suppose the Senator having charge of the bill will give way for strictly morning business, which has not been completed.

Mr. WINDOM. With the consent of the Senate, I will yield to strictly morning business.

Mr. ANTHONY. I desire to make a report.

Mr. LOGAN. I object. I call for the regular order.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

- A bill (S. No. 625) for the relief of Lemuel D. Evans, late collector of internal revenue for the fourth district of Texas;
- A bill (S. No. 836) granting a pension to William Ira Mayfield;
- A bill (S. No. 862) granting a pension to Margaret S. Hastings;
- A bill (S. No. 1070) granting a pension to Margaret C. Wells;
- A bill (S. No. 1080) granting a pension to J. W. Caldwell, of Marshall County, Indiana;
- A bill (S. No. 1154) granting a pension to William Williams;
- A bill (S. No. 1205) restoring to the pension-roll the name of Lydia A. Church, minor daughter of Nathaniel G. Church; and
- A bill (S. No. 1213) granting a pension to Nathan Upham.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

- A bill (H. R. No. 4714) for the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4753) removing the political disabilities of O. R. Singleton, of Mississippi; and
- A joint resolution (H. R. No. 157) authorizing the acceptance by Captain C. H. Wells, of the United States Navy, of the cross of the Legion of Honor, conferred upon him by the President of the French Republic.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

- A bill (H. R. No. 3700) granting a pension to Teter Wolfgong;
- A bill (H. R. No. 3708) granting a pension to Eunice Wilson, mother of John C. Wilson, late a private in Company D, Forty-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteers; and
- A bill (H. R. No. 3717) granting a pension to Sarah McAdams.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. R. No. 135) appointing managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. E. BABCOCK, his Secretary, announced that the President had, on the 18th instant, approved and signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution:

- An act (S. No. 1012) for the relief of the district judge of Vermont; and
- A joint resolution (S. R. No. 15) authorizing Thomas W. Fitch, engineer United States Navy, to accept a wedding present to his wife, Mrs. Minnie Sherman Fitch.

PENSION BILLS.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; and they were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

- A bill (H. R. No. 518) granting a pension to Thomas Allcock, of Rochester, New York;
- A bill (H. R. No. 965) granting a pension to Samuel Purcell;
- A bill (H. R. No. 2586) granting a pension to Woodson Powers;
- A bill (H. R. No. 2763) granting a pension to Mrs. Sophia Green;
- A bill (H. R. No. 3116) granting a pension to Fannie M. Herron, widow of James Herron, deceased;
- A bill (H. R. No. 3660) granting a pension to Sallie T. Lee;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4257) granting a pension to Francisco Quesada, of New York;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4540) for the relief of Elisha B. Knapp, of Wellsburgh, New York;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4754) granting a pension to Betsey A. Eaton;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4755) granting a pension to William Lyon;

- A bill (H. R. No. 4756) granting a pension to Emmet Langston;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4757) granting a pension to Freemorton Young;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4758) granting a pension to George W. La Pointe;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4759) granting a pension to Herman Nettlefield;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4760) granting a pension to James Wilkinson;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4761) granting a pension to John C. Cox, acting ensign United States steamer Weehawken;

- A bill (H. R. No. 4762) granting a pension to Mrs. Sidney J. Wood;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4763) granting a pension to Lafayette Briggs;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4764) granting a pension to Sarah A. Woodworth;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4765) granting a pension to Emilia O. Black;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4766) granting a pension to Ruth Isabella Naylor;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4767) granting a pension to Ferdinand Monti;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4768) granting a pension to Annie Farley;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4769) granting a pension to Abraanna L. Dunn;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4770) granting a pension to Elizabeth Thomas;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4771) granting a pension to Charles A. Draher;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4772) granting a pension to Richard G. Mobley;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4773) granting a pension to Dwight A. Barrett;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4774) granting a pension to Mary Ann McDonald;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4775) granting a pension to Margaret Pattison;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4776) granting a pension to Elizabeth Lanning;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4777) granting a pension to James A. Forgey;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4778) granting a pension to Heila A. Cooksey;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4779) granting a pension to Ruth Ellen Greland;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4780) granting a pension to Patrick Glackin;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4781) granting a pension to Barbara Patti;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4782) granting a pension to Ansel Thayer, of Braintree, Massachusetts;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4783) granting a pension to Robert Cavanaugh;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4784) granting a pension to Henry H. Kaiser, late private in Company H of Eighth Regiment United States Veteran Volunteers;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4785) granting a pension to Alva W. Hicks, of Cincinnati, Ohio;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4786) granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah B. Howe and Mrs. Mary Cranston;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4787) granting a pension to Charles H. Bugbee;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4792) granting a pension to Elizabeth A. Neibling;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4793) granting a pension to Mercy E. Scattergood;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4794) granting a pension to John McKinley;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4795) granting a pension to Ann Jones;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4796) granting a pension to Catherine Knierim;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4797) granting a pension to J. Lyle McCullough;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4798) granting a pension to Mariah W. Sanders;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4799) granting a pension to George W. Leamy, late second lieutenant Company B, Ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4800) granting a pension to John H. Loby;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4801) granting a pension to Micajah Stout;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4802) granting a pension to Nancy Tipton;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4806) granting a pension to William C. Edmondson;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4807) granting a pension to George W. Trueheart;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4791) granting a pension to Samuel Sheaffer;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4790) granting a pension to David Salsbury;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4788) granting a pension to Catherine Ferry;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4789) granting a pension to Kezia Zoller;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4804) granting a pension to Levina Berrall;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4805) granting a pension to Mrs. Ellen Morrow;
- A bill (H. R. No. 3884) granting a pension to Mary C. Toy;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4332) granting a pension to Fannie E. Records, widow of Albert B. Records;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4334) granting a pension to William T. Simms;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4325) granting a pension to William R. Duncan;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4326) granting a pension to Samuel P. Evans;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4327) granting a pension to Bridget Leafy;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4329) granting a pension to William H. Small;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4330) granting a pension to Cyphert P. Gillett;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4331) granting a pension to Sarah Ann Crosby;
- A bill (H. R. No. 4333) granting a pension to James Rounsell, a private in Company K of the One hundredth New York Infantry Volunteers; and
- A bill (H. R. No. 4803) granting a pension to Susan C. Clark.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3821) making appropriation for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes; the pending question being on the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, after the word "dollars," in line 191, in the appropriation for the Arickarees, Gros Ventres, and Mandans, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That $10,000 of said amount be available immediately: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to use so much of this appropriation, not exceeding $775, as he shall deem just and proper, to reimburse L. B. Sperry and William Courtenay for the losses sustained by them by the destruction of certain personal property by fire at the Fort Berthold agency, Dakota, on the 12th day of October, 1874.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. I think the objection raised to this appropriation yesterday ought to be considered by the Senate. Here is an appropriation of $10,000 in addition to what the Department thought was necessary, the greater portion or all of it to meet a claim set up by traders out there on the ground that they lost their property by fire. Suppose they did lose it by fire. I do not suppose there is a man in business on the plains anywhere in any Territory of the United States, or a man driving teams across the plains to feed those Indians, that does not make his calculation to lose once in awhile. Their profits allow for a very large margin of loss.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] stated yesterday that he thought it was a very meritorious claim; that these men had abandoned their own property in order to take care of the public property, and saved a very large amount of public property by letting their own go to destruction. I have great respect for the Senator from Minnesota and for any statement he may make; but I beg to say that if these men did neglect and abandon their own property for the purpose of protecting the public property, they are the first men in the history of this country that ever did such a thing. I never heard of such a case before, and I do not believe a word of it. I believe that they make such a showing here, and I do not doubt but that claimants can make a showing in any case.

I recollect a few years ago, when I was on the Indian Committee myself, a claim coming in of about $90,000 for buildings which had become useless to the owner because the post had been abandoned and the owner conceived the notion of turning the buildings over to the Government of the United States, and had very strong indorsers. He had the governor of the Territory and a number of men who insisted that it was a necessary thing, and I believe afterward, perhaps a year or two afterward, he got his bill through and got the money. I have a case in my drawer now where another appropriation of about $10,000 is asked from the Government of the United States to pay men for buildings because one of the agencies in one of the Territories had been removed; the buildings had become useless, they were no longer of any account to these merchants, and they wanted pay for them out of the Treasury of the United States. If the Government undertakes to pay all these claims, in other words, to insure the men against loss in any contingency, I do not know what is going to become of the Treasury. This bill to which I now refer provides:

That there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $6,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to purchase, in his official capacity, for the use and benefit of the Nez Percé tribe of Indians, with their consent, certain improvements within the limits of the Nez Percé reservation in the Territory of Idaho, made by or belonging to D. B. Randall and W. A. Caldwell respectively: Provided, That the sum herein appropriated shall be reimbursed to the United States from the amount of the last of twenty installments to be appropriated in fulfillment of the provisions of the fifth article of the treaty with the Nez Percés, concluded June 11, 1855, &c.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. SCOTT. My attention is arrested by this provision. I supposed upon first reading it that the $775 was the only amount appropriated to pay persons for property destroyed by fire; but if I gather correctly the statement made by the Senator who has the bill in charge, the whole of this $10,000 is intended for that purpose. Even as to the smaller amount I say my attention is arrested for the reason that this does involve a very important inquiry as to the circumstances which ought to take it out of the general rule. The Committee on Claims have had before them claims for reimbursement of losses by fire, cases in which soldiers had their property in forts that were burned, where it was alleged the fires originated from carelessness upon the part of the officers of the Government. We have rejected such claims upon the ground that the Government was not an insurer. We have now pending before us the case of the widow of one of the generals of the Army, who claimed $12,000 for property destroyed on a steamer going from New York to San Francisco, on the ground that the Government was negligent in supplying that steamer, and that it was in consequence of that negligence that the household furniture and other property of that officer was lost. I do not know wherein these Indian agents differ from the other employés of the Government; and before I should be willing to recognize the principle which would bind the Government to pay for these losses, I should be glad to hear from the Senator having the bill in charge some explanation of the circumstances which justify this appropriation.

Mr. WINDOM. This amendment is misunderstood, I observe, by several Senators who have spoken of it, apparently with the understanding that $10,000 was added over and above the amounts required by the treaties or recommended by the Department. I am not now alluding to the Senator from Pennsylvania, but to a Senator sitting behind me, [Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas.] The fact is the amount appropriated for these Indians—Arikarees, Gros Ventres, and Mandans—is a discretionary amount, and it is appropriated under the general idea on which we appropriate money to a large number of Indian tribes; that is, to feed them, take care of them, and keep the peace in that way. Instead of adding anything to the recommendations of the Department, the amount desired was $125,000; the amount appropriated last year was $85,000. The House committee made it $75,000 this year, and the Appropriation Committee of the Senate merely raised the amount to what it was last year, thus making it $85,000 instead of $75,000; and one reason for increasing the amount $10,000 was that the Indians had suffered the loss of their buildings and a considerable amount of supplies by fire, and we thought the amount ought to be the same as it was last year.

The Indians to whom this appropriation relates are our friends in that country; they are the neighbors of the Sioux Indians. The Sioux Indians occasionally, under a sort of limited treaty of peace, come into the camps of these Indians and tell them, "You see how much better we are treated than you are; you furnish men to help fight the battles of the white men, and we demand food from them and fight them if they do not give it, and we get appropriations by the million and you are starved." And yet these Indians have maintained the peace; they have sent fifty to one hundred soldiers to our forts to help maintain the peace in that country; they are the hereditary enemies of the Sioux, and I do think that we ought to make reasonable appropriations for them. The amount ought to be doubled instead of being what is proposed, only $85,000.

Now, a single word as to this claim. I myself am opposed to any claims upon this bill or any other appropriation bill except under peculiar circumstances. I think this is intimately connected with the bill and belongs here, for the reason that it is to be taken out of this appropriation, which is made on account of that fire. These men saved the Government, as the Commissioner of Indian Affairs tells us, a great many thousand dollars by neglecting their own property to take care of and save the property of the Government.

I have no feeling about this matter. If the Senate prefer not to encourage that sort of action on the part of agents who have control of Government property; if they prefer to say to them, "Save your own property, $100 or $200 or $500 or $700, and let thousands of dollars worth of Government property go to ruin because we will not reimburse you," then I say advertise it to the country by striking out this provision.

In addition to that, this man Sperry, as we are informed by the Department, is the best agent now in charge of Indians in any part of the country, and the Commissioner says that through his good management we have been able to cut down the appropriation to these Indians, and yet to keep the peace among them, some fifty to seventy-five thousand dollars below what we ever did until this agent went there. I am in favor of encouraging such an agent as that. You pay him $1,500 to go out upon the frontier with his family. He stays there and takes good care of the Indians, and hence his reputation for honesty and good management. He takes care of the Government property to the loss of his own, and then we propose to turn around and advertise him, "We will not reimburse you; hereafter save your own property and let the Government property go to ruin."

With that submission of the question, I am willing that the Senate shall vote as they like.

Mr. INGALLS. It is unmistakably true, Mr. President, that this is a private claim. It is the individual claim of L. B. Sperry and William Courtenay, who are not described in the bill as Indian agents, but who are named as such by the Senator from Minnesota in his remarks. This being a case where the parties are private citizens, and this being a private claim, against whom does the obligation to pay it subsist? Against the United States? Certainly not. There can be no principle of law upon which the United States can be called upon to pay this claim. Are the Indians then liable, or are the Indian funds of the Government liable? Nothing can be clearer under the statement of the Senator from Minnesota than the fact that in no sense whatever is this or can this be a claim on the Indian funds or the Indian Department of this Government.

The only argument made by the Senator from Minnesota is that Mr. Sperry was a good Indian agent, and that therefore his claim should be paid. If that is to be acknowledged in making appropriations as an argument or as a ground upon which money should be taken from the Treasury, then our whole system of appropriations had better be changed at once.

This is a vicious proviso. It is wrong in principle; it is wrong as a matter of fact. I desire to call the attention of the President to the fact that it is also directly in violation of one of the standing rules of the Senate and cannot be entertained. Rule 30, referring to amendments to appropriation bills, declares in the first place—

No amendment proposing additional appropriations shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or some act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session, or moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or in pursuance of an estimate from the head of some of the Departments—and no amendment shall be received whose object is to provide for a private claim, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation.

And the rule goes on—

This is confessedly a private claim. The amendment is not to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation. I therefore make the point of order that under the rules of the Senate it cannot be received, whether reported from a committee or not.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask the Chair whether it is not moved by a standing committee of the Senate?

Mr. INGALLS. That is very true. If the Chair will allow me one moment further, I will say that the provision in the rule that no amendment shall be received whose object is to provide for a private claim, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or treaty stipulation, is entirely independent of the provision of the rule in regard to recommendations made or reports made by a standing committee. It is an express provision that no amendment, whether reported by a committee or not, shall be received for the payment of a private claim, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or treaty stipulations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas raises a point of order. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken, and he will so decide, but will submit the question to the Senate if that be desired.

Mr. ALLISON. That relates to the second proviso.

Mr. INGALLS. The second proviso.

Mr. WINDOM. I shall not appeal from the decision of the Chair. I ask, however, to what portion of the amendment the point of order relates? I suppose only to the second proviso.

Mr. INGALLS. I only raised the point of order with reference to the appropriation for the payment of Sperry and Courtenay.

Mr. WINDOM. I shall not appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. SCOTT. Let me make an inquiry. Under this provision can any portion of the $10,000 be applied to other parties who have suffered as they did by the fire?

Mr. WINDOM. No, sir. It simply makes $10,000 of the whole amount appropriated available immediately, in order that out of the general fund of the Indians the Department can go to work and replace their losses. It does not apply to anybody else. We simply make the amount what it was last year and make $10,000 of it available immediately on account of these losses.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment as modified by the ruling of the Chair will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment as it stands now is to insert the first proviso:

Provided, That $10,000 of said amount be available immediately.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in lines 204 and 205, to increase the appropriation to subsist and properly care for the Apaches of Arizona, from $200,000 to $375,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know upon what basis the Committee on Appropriations offer amendments of this character to increase a definite appropriation. It is almost impossible for the Committee on Appropriations or any committee to estimate the amount of money that should be expended in the way money is now expended in the Indian service. Therefore in my judgment the Committee on Appropriations, unless they have a clear, satisfactory showing that an amount greater than is proposed by the House of Representatives ought to be expended for a given purpose of this kind, ought not to propose it, and we ought not to agree to it. I ask the Senator having charge of this bill upon what basis they propose to increase by these very large sums appropriations of a specific character for the Indian service?

Mr. WINDOM. It is one of the most difficult branches of the public service to know precisely what is the right thing to do. There is no question about that. This appropriation is made for the purpose of carrying out what is denominated the peace policy with the Indians; that is, that it is much cheaper to feed them than fight them. The amount recommended by the House committee for these Indians in Arizona is too small to enable the Government to carry out that policy with them. The recommendations of the Department were $750,000 as the amount necessary to keep the peace with these Indians in Arizona and New Mexico. We appropriated last year $500,000, and it has been with the utmost difficulty they have been able to carry on the service with that amount. The House cut that down to $400,000. Acting upon their discretion and carefully investigating this subject as to the number of Indians, as to the amount required to feed them, as to the difficulties encountered in supplying them, our committee believed that $500,000 was the very smallest amount with which the Department could possibly get along and carry out this policy. It may be that we could save $100,000 now by voting only $400,000 for these Indians; but possibly instead of saving $100,000 we might be required to send a regiment there which would cost perhaps two millions a year.

Thus far I believe the peace policy has worked well; but if we are to maintain it we must exercise the best judgment we can upon the amount necessary to feed these Indians. We have cut down wherever we could. The Indian bill is $1,700,000 less than it was last year; and the committee honestly believe, after a full, careful, and thorough investigation of this question, that we cannot go below what we have done and carry out this policy. I have no mathematical calculations to submit, no reasons perhaps that will be entirely conclusive upon this point; but I submit to the Senator and to the Senate whether it is not better to make appropriations large enough to maintain our policy with the Indians rather than to risk a war with them. That is the only reason I have to give. The Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] is better acquainted with the details of this matter than I am, and will submit any further suggestions that may be needed.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator has said enough to answer my purpose. He can give no reason for the increase, and I can give no reason why the appropriation should not be increased. In other words, in appropriating money for what is called the peace policy with the Indians, we are doing it as blindly as bats in the brightness of day.

The Senator cannot give us a computation, or the mathematical reasons, as he would call them, for increasing the amounts in this paragraph of the bill $75,000 in one case and $25,000 in another. I cannot answer the argument of course without having all the facts.

Mr. President, it seems to me that a policy of this kind, which absorbs three-fourths of the whole of our appropriations in the expense of transportation, agencies, and expenditures of that kind which neither reach the backs nor mouths of the Indians, is an ill-defined policy which ought not to be carried out. These Indians ought to live by work, just as other people do, or they ought to be gathered where they could be compelled to earn their own living. I always supposed our Indian policy was to gather the Indians in reservations and require them to work; to expend our money, not in feeding them, but in enabling them to feed themselves; to buy them implements, build them school-houses, furnish them blacksmith-shops, furnish them mills. I thought this was the peace policy; in other words, to compel them to earn their living, just as the white people or black people do. But a policy which gives to these Indians food and clothing and does not require them to work never will redeem them into civilization, in my judgment. I do not believe in it. For the last seven or eight years I have voted steadily against every Indian appropriation bill. If I had the power I would defeat this bill now and compel the adoption by Congress of some other policy; but I have not. I simply call the attention of the Senate to it. I do not find fault with the Committee on Appropriations, because once when I served in the same capacity and had charge of Indian appropriation bills, I was filled with the most profound disgust; I could not answer a plain question, because I had not the materials with which to answer it. The Indian appropriation bills have swollen from about two and a half million dollars, which I believe was the amount of the last one I had charge of, until they have reached seven millions a year, and this bill has been reduced to between five and six million dollars.

Mr. WINDOM. A single word in reply to the Senator from Ohio. I said I could not make a mathematical computation of the amount necessary. Perhaps I stated that a little too broadly. We have not guessed at this matter wholly. We know the number of Indians there; we know what is the smallest amount that rations can be furnished for, and I have made a sort of mathematical calculation, which is before me. The cost of a hundred rations, exclusive of transportation, in that country is $15.48 by the estimate of the Department. One hundred rations, costing $15.48, for seventy-two hundred and seventy-six Indians—and by the way the number is known—2,655,740 rations will be required for a year, and the cost amounts to $411,108.55 exclusive of transportation, and for transportation to Arizona the amount in the bill will not more than leave enough to cover the deficiency.

The Senator says he would defeat this bill entirely; that when he was a member of the Committee on Appropriations he always looked on Indian appropriation bills with disgust. I think that the committee fully sympathize with the Senator from Ohio on that subject. He speaks of the large increase of the Indian appropriation bills, but I will say to him that the expenses of wars with the Indians have largely decreased. Some years ago I had occasion to make an examination and received a report from the War Department as to the cost of fighting one single band of Indians during the two years, 1862 and 1863, and it came to over $30,000,000, and the report was that there were not over five or six Indians killed in the expedition. So that in that case it cost about $6,000,000 each to kill those Indians. I believe a recent report of General Sheridan or General Sherman—I have forgotten which it is—shows that it costs on an average a million dollars to kill an Indian on the plains by the military.

The Senator from Ohio proposes to throw away this Indian bill with which he feels disgust because of its uncertainty, and put the Indians on reservations. That sounds very well here in the Senate. In the cool deliberations of this body it has a very pleasant sound; but when you come to catch these Indians at the rate of a million dollars apiece—and it is just as hard to catch them as to shoot them; for if you can get the military near enough to catch them, you can get them near enough to shoot them—it will not be very strictly in the line of economy for which I know the Senator is an earnest and honest advocate.

I wish we could adopt some policy which would enable us to get along better with our Indian affairs; but until we can devise some policy better than the old one of fighting them, I say let us stick to the present one of feeding them; and if we do that, let us honestly feed those that we agreed to feed and keep them upon the reservations rather than take the risk of fighting them and killing them at the cost of a million a head.

Mr. STEWART. It is a mistake to say that anybody who wants to regulate this matter is in favor of fighting the Indians. We have had the experience of one Army officer who has done more good in settling the Indian question and wasted less money, I venture to say, than all other men in the United States during the same period of time, and accomplished more good with less money. That was General Crook. He was first sent to Idaho, to Indians there whom it was said nothing could be done with unless they were bought off at great expense. They were raiding into Nevada and nearly up to Oregon. There was a large region of country there which was being devastated by Indians. He was sent there, and it was but a year or two before he established peace. He caught the ringleaders and punished them. There was less cruelty in it than in any other course. He did it vigorously, in person, and he got peace. He was then sent up to Oregon and from there sent down to Arizona, and in Arizona he has secured peace. He is a strong executive officer. Where it was said it was hopeless, where it was said you had to buy off the Indians, he has secured peace without any great slaughter or without any great violation of humanity. He has only punished the wicked, the notorious murderers. He has taken the trouble to catch them and punish them; he has the others on reservations, and he is so careful in his management that the Indians know him and they believe he can see through them and understand them, and they respect him; and he can do more with ten dollars than any Indian agent you have can do with ten hundred.

If you had a few more men like General Crook you need not be afraid of Indian wars, because they would know how to manage Indians. It is necessary that a person should know something about them in order to manage them. I believe that more can be done through the Army officers without the shedding of blood, because it has not been shed in Arizona, and those were the worst Indians of the country. For two hundred years they had robbed and murdered in all directions, and it was said nothing could be done with them. We have them now on reservations, and they think General Crook sees through them, and we have peace. You can travel all over that country. That shows what may be done by a man of war who has a little judgment in his management.

Mr. SARGENT. I do full justice to the merits of General Crook in Arizona. It is unquestionable that his vigilance and activity assembled the Indians on reservations, and the Indians were induced to go there without very much bloodshed, by the promise that they going upon those reservations, the Government would fulfill what was called the peace policy, and furnish them, until they could maintain themselves, with the means of staying there. The Government keeping that promise has made a state of peace there the last two years, a state of peace so refreshing to the people there that their papers come to me loaded with thanks to the Government and congratulations to themselves that no longer there are two murders a day on the average in the Territory; the people can go to work on their farms, they can drive their herds without danger of losing their scalps. The Territory has been redeemed from a most horrible barbarism, largely redeemed through the energy of General Crook, but just as largely through the appropriations year by year by which the Indians going on barren reservations (and no other kind can be found there) are fed and kept in a comparative state of contentment.

Now withdraw your appropriations, and General Crook's promise cannot be kept. Withdraw your appropriations, and you have men upon desert tracts who must starve or break out and go upon the highways, who must rob, who will murder. That is the alternative. That is the complement of the speech of my friend from Nevada.

Now these Indians are made to work. There is not a ration issued to feed an Indian who is able to work, that is to say who is not sick, or an infant; or who is able to work. He is required to make in return an equivalent in his labor, which is used in digging ditches from the accessible rivers or streams on to the reservation to prepare the way by which irrigation can be supplied to those desert lands. I admit that the labor is not always valuable or efficient; but nevertheless it teaches the Indian to labor; nevertheless it redeems him so far from his barbarous habits and makes it easier hereafter to maintain him.

Year by year the appropriations have decreased. Last year we appropriated this amount and there was a large deficiency; the year before a larger amount and a deficiency still larger. This year the deficiency will be quite small; and the Commissioner assured the Committee on Appropriations that if the amount was appropriated this year which was appropriated last year he believed he could bring the service within the amount; and why? Because there is a possibility now for the people to raise cattle, because there is an opportunity for them to cultivate their lands, to raise wheat, and by this means instead of long transportation in passing across the articles which the Government needs to feed the Indians they may be bought more and more in the country itself.

We have reversed the old policy. Not only is it cheaper to feed Indians than to fight them in point of money, but it is cheaper on the ground of humanity to our own people. Do you want these harrowing accounts, these wails coming up from the Indian frontier? Do you want the news to come here, flashed by the telegraph, that this day this citizen was killed on his way from Tucson to Prescott, or that citizen and his wife were killed on the way to the Pima reservation? Nevertheless this is what you had three years ago. Senators' ears ought not to be dulled to cries like these; and I predict, as I predicted last year when I stood on the floor of the Senate and insisted that these appropriations should be made and the Senate made the appropriations, that if you withdraw the appropriations or cut them down so that the Indians cannot be kept contented during the year, the result will be an Indian war in that Territory, by which our people will lose their lives and the business interests of the Territory will be destroyed. For such a purpose what is $500,000? If you talk about the comparative cost of feeding and fighting them, then I cite the report made by the brother of the eminent Senator from Ohio, wherein in an elaborate report on this very question he said the Government had expended $30,000,000 on the plains to fight the Sioux and the result was that the troops had killed thirty Indians; that is to say, at a cost of $1,000,000 apiece. Although an Army man and well versed in all these matters and illustrations in the military service, he said in most pregnant language, italicizing it in his report, that it was cheaper as well as more humane for the Government to feed the Indians rather than fight them. Acting on that advice, we have appropriated since that time from a million to a million and a half annually for rations, and we have had to keep no military force and there have been no more such ravages as there were in the State of the Senator who has charge of this bill, where men, women, and children were murdered, where women were ravished, and where scenes were enacted as if the devils in hell had broke loose and come down upon Minnesota. Those scenes stopped. This has cost a million and a quarter a year. Adopt the other policy and the cost is $30,000,000 a year, and still your people are not protected. Therefore I insist that it is the part of wisdom and the part of humanity toward our own people to adhere to this policy.

The Senator from Ohio says years ago when he had charge of Indian appropriation bills we used to appropriate two and a half millions a year. At that time we did not have to deal with the Sioux. At that time we did not deal with the Apaches or with the Cheyennes or the Arapahoes, and with few except a few civilized Indians within the Indian Territory. Our people had not pressed out into all these different Territories. We did not have railroad communication across the continent enticing emigrants to spread out through the mountain valleys. We were not reaching out our fingers of civilization, sensitive with nerves to the lip, in every direction where mischief and murder might assail American citizens and destroy their interests. We could let the Indians roam at large upon the plains and chase their buffaloes, because they did not come in contact with civilization. But since the time the Senator had charge of Indian appropriation bills civilization has been extended over this region, and this is the cheapest and best and most humane mode of protecting them.

Mr. STEWART. It would be a great deal cheaper to carry out the Indian policy if you had honesty rather than dishonesty. I have no doubt that in Arizona, if General Crook and the Army had had the disbursement of the money, it would not have taken more than 50 per cent. of it to accomplish the result. I have seen something of these agents and something of their performances, and if those who have been sent into my State are specimens, at least three-fourths of your money is stolen.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator knows the Utes, the Diggers, are not the Comanches, and the Apaches? They are simply low, degraded creatures. The question is whether anything can be done for them. They are not quarrelsome. Some of them of the better class do a little work; but what will become of our people in Arizona and that vicinity if something is not done for these Indians. There has been only $15,000 appropriated to the Senator's State, and he was not in favor of that.

Mr. STEWART. I prevented that because it would be stolen.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not know that it would be safe to send any money to the Senator's State. I am not insisting that any should be sent there; it might be stolen. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEWART. The people there would take care of it; but if you send thieves to steal it, it will be of no use to send it. I will tell you what they did in my State as a specimen of the Indian policy. There were a few Indians scattered in the southern part of the State. They lived in the little places where there were water and grass. When people came there they would work for them and herd stock. They were a peaceful, docile set of Indians. The Indian Department set apart a section of country about the size of Connecticut to make up a grand reservation. They came in here with a proposition to buy out all the settlers there were around there for thirty or forty thousand dollars and to appropriate fifty or sixty thousand dollars to get the Indians to go on that reservation, a thing that anybody knowing anything of that country would laugh at. I opposed any such appropriation; and when I did I was told "O, you want to kill the Indians." I am a friend of these Indians. The Indians heard that they were going to be brought on this reservation, and they sent word to me and I saw some of them. They protested against it. They want to stay about their homes; they are quiet and willing to work. Here was a grand scheme got up. The character of it did not appear to excite any indignation in the Interior Department. When I told them of it, they rather justified it. It was a mining country with patches of arable land here and there, and we wanted settlers to go there so that they could give the Indians something to do. The Indians wanted white people to come in. I have always said get the Indians together that are willing to go upon a particular place and have a few farms; that would be well enough. But the idea of setting apart nearly one-third of that State for an Indian reservation and having a large appropriation and a great parade was properly resisted. It could not possibly benefit the Indians or anybody else. I opposed it because it was nonsense from beginning to end. If that is a specimen of the want of intelligence, not to say want of honesty, which guides the Indian policy, what must be the Indian service elsewhere?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, in the chair.) The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, one of the cheapest and commonest catch-words of the present philanthropic Indian policy of the Administration is that it is cheaper to feed Indians than it is to fight them. That sounds very well and perhaps might be useful as an argument were it not for the fact that the Government not only fights Indians but feeds them also.

In regard to these Apaches of Arizona and New Mexico, there was an appropriation last year made to feed them, including original and deficiency, of $969,000—very nearly a million; and in addition to that there were kept in those two Territories two regiments of infantry and two of cavalry to fight them at an expense of nearly four millions more. They are driven as far as possible on to their reservations in the winter and fattened up at the expense of the Government to enable them during the summer to carry on their depredations against the white settlers; and then the military is called in to drive them back again upon their reservations during the winter.

I protest, sir, against this method of treating the Indian question as being not only in violation of sense and in violation of the first principle of government, but as being criminally extravagant and profligate. The great trouble about these Apaches of Arizona and New Mexico lies in this, that, as the Senator from Ohio has well said, there are no data upon which we can vote these appropriations. It rests entirely in the caprice or the cupidity, if you please to call it so, of the Indian commissioners. They come in here and recommend an appropriation of hundreds of thousands of dollars for the purpose of feeding and subsisting the Apaches of Arizona and New Mexico, and then, regardless of the amount appropriated, they proceed to expend whatever they see fit to expend and come in at the commencement of the next session with an appropriation for a deficiency reaching to the amount of hundreds of thousands of dollars. It is the most amazing, the most astonishing instance of profligacy in civil expenditure that this Government affords. It is entirely immaterial whether one single dollar is appropriated in this Indian appropriation bill at this season, for the authorities will proceed to make whatever expenditures they see fit to make and come in at the close of the year or the commencement of the next fiscal year for a deficiency appropriation that will cover the whole amount. Therefore, sir, unless the Senator from Minnesota having this bill in charge can furnish to the Senate some authentic data upon which to base this most extraordinary amount that is here asked for these Indians, I trust at least the item will be kept down to the amount originally named in the bill as it came from the House of Representatives.

Mr. WINDOM. I think the Senator from Kansas could not have been in his seat when I did furnish some data a few moments ago. It is not entirely guess-work as to the amount required. There is a roll kept of the Indians that are fed, and the number is reported to us from the Department. When up before the whole number was seventy-two hundred and twenty-six, according to the account, in Arizona and New Mexico, I was understood to state, but I should have stated in Arizona alone. It is well known what rations cost in that country. Footing up the total cost of these rations for the number of Indians which are reasonably known to exist there—I take the authority of the Department for this as all other questions when I have no other—it amounts to $411,185.55 for the Indians in Arizona alone; and yet the bill which we report even with the amendment appropriates but $375,000 for them, without the transportation. We fall far below the amount that is required absolutely to feed these Indians even with the amendment which we have offered.

But the Senator from Kansas arraigns the Indian Department for exceeding the appropriation. To some extent I presume that criticism may be justified. I think that if I had control of Indian affairs myself, if Congress appropriated $100,000 for the Indian service, I would use that and not another dollar more even if I had asked for more and even if a war came; and I know they do try to avoid it. They do sometimes exceed the appropriations in order to save us from much greater expenses. If it were true that Congress appropriated the amount which the Department upon full investigation decided to be necessary, and then they exceeded it, there would be more ground for criticism; but we never do that. In this bill they asked for $750,000 as the amount which is really necessary for this particular service. We have cut it down to $500,000, and we hope to be able to get along with that amount. The Senator would have some ground for his criticism if we appropriated the whole amount and then they did not keep within it; but I think the Senator himself will admit that it is better that a little discretion should be exercised by the Secretary of the Interior where greater expense can be avoided and greater trouble, even if occasionally there is a little excess. I hope, however, in view of the criticisms which are always made in reference to this bill, that hereafter the Department will not expend one dollar more than is appropriated, come what will, no matter if the whole western plains become involved in an Indian war. I would not if I had charge of that Department, for I would not take the responsibility.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would like to ask my friend a question. I wish to know how they get money except in pursuance of an appropriation. I have always wondered how it was possible for them to get the money to expend.

Mr. WINDOM. They do not get it, but sometimes they make contracts, as I understand, in order to supply the Indians, trusting that the amount will be furnished by Congress; and those contracts always cost a great deal more than if the money were originally appropriated. Of course they cannot use money without an appropriation.

Mr. SHERMAN. I want to know by what authority any officer of the Government contracts for the expenditure of money in advance of an appropriation.

Mr. WINDOM. I presume there is authority—

Mr. SARGENT. I will answer the question, if I may be allowed to do so. We appropriated less than the estimates last year. The Indian Commissioner informed the Committee on Appropriations that his money lasts up to this time and will last until after the adjournment of Congress, but that it is not sufficient to go through the year. Warning of this was made on the floor of the Senate at the time. Now he says, "I have not exceeded my appropriations; I do not intend to exceed them; I intend that Congress shall understand just what the results will be provided a sufficient deficiency is not appropriated; if the deficiency appropriation is not made, I have no authority to spend money; and if war comes my hands are clear." This is the position of the Commissioner at this very moment. He says, however, in reference to this appropriation, "I can get through, I think, the coming fiscal year without the necessity for a deficiency; things are getting into better shape by the existence of this policy; I can get supplies cheaper; the Indians are beginning to help themselves by bringing in water by irrigation; I will try to get through with this amount, and I think I can." Last year he said he could not get through. He has not yet violated any law, and does not intend to do so, even if war comes.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is right. I have always wondered how they got money beyond the appropriation, if they did. The Constitution of the United States, which we generally swear to support, declares that no money shall be drawn from the Treasury except in pursuance of an appropriation made by law; and the law is equally definite that an officer of the Government cannot contract so as to bind the Government in anticipation of appropriations; otherwise any officer of the Government might defeat the Constitutional provision. I say that if there is any deficiency here the appeal ought to be to Congress, and no executive officer in the Interior Department or any other ought to make a contract involving this Government except in pursuance of an appropriation made by law.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Ohio will turn to page 80 of this bill he will find a section which is intended to avoid deficiencies in the future with reference to Indian appropriations. It provides that all contracts be made so as to distribute the supplies over the entire year.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is right.

Mr. DAVIS. The provision here called for has been in each appropriation bill for a number of years. The fault is I think that the Indian Department as well as many other Departments of the Government commence too early to spend the money. When they know that they have to run over twelve months, they should divide their appropriation into twelve parts, and distribute it over the months; but they commence perhaps on a scale which disposes of it all in six months, depending on making it up when Congress meets. That has been the case more than once. I think the practice ought to be broken up; it ought not to continue. I think the sooner the Departments understand that their appropriations are to go over twelve months and not six months, the better. I believe the present Commissioner is trying to do his duty toward the Indians and toward the people and the Government. I see no fault in him. He has been before the Committee on Appropriations and explained everything asked of him by the committee. It is true, in many instances, I cannot agree with what he has done nor can I with all that the committee thought it was best to do. It was probably owing to my short service on the committee and not knowing as much about the Indian service as the other members do. I would state, however, that when I went on the Committee on Appropriations only a year ago my prejudice was very much against this Indian Department. I believed and think now the country believes generally that half the money which is appropriated for this Department by Congress is stolen or used in such a way that it never gets to its legitimate objects—the Indians. My mind has somewhat undergone a change by inquiry. I have given two days' continuous study to this question within the last thirty days, hoping to find something wrong and to be able to put my finger on somebody who had cheated the Government.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Not "hoping" but "expecting."

Mr. DAVIS. No, I was hoping to find the man who had been doing it. I believe it has been done and I believe in this Department there is each day that passes before us a robbery of the Government. I mean just what I say; I believe it to-day; and I hope to find the man. I went to the Department and talked with the Indian Commissioner. He believes himself that there is money stolen which does not get to its legitimate object, but he cannot find the person who does it. It cannot all pass through his hands. It has to be sent to agents. This bill provides for seventy agents. Some of them disburse one-half the money that others do, and we have in some cases the least difficulty as to those who disburse the least. Take the very man who was named here this morning, and a provision for whom was struck out. The Indian Department says that he is feeding and controlling his Indians for one-half what it cost last year and one-half what it costs other Indian agents surrounding him now. This shows that the money goes not to the proper destination in many instances. I believe that the remedy is that the Indian Department should divide its money into twelve parts and not into six parts as has been done in many cases, depending on Congress to supply the deficiency. It should remember that there are twelve months in the year.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to ask one question, because I do not want to interfere with anything that is necessary for the peace of the Indians. I ask if this becomes necessary under the promise made by General Crook to these Indians? If that is a fact ascertained, there is a basis which would justify action.

Mr. WINDOM. I am not aware that it is under any promises of General Crook. It is under the general policy; it is to carry out the promises of the Government; I do not know whether General Crook made them or somebody else. As General Crook's name has been mentioned, I wish to say that General Crook has been more successful in driving a portion of these Indians in reservations than some others, but he has not gone with the sword alone; he has gone with the sword and beef and bread together.

Mr. STEWART. He has gone with brains and honesty.

Mr. WINDOM. He has had all of them, I have no doubt. It is the easiest thing in the world to get up and say one-half the money appropriated for the Indian service is stolen. My honorable friend from Nevada has gone beyond that. I think usually he has confined himself to halving it, but to-day he thinks 75 per cent. is stolen. If he continues to improve in his estimates, at the next Congress the whole amount appropriated in the Indian bill will be stolen. Now, for gentlemen to charge that a certain percentage, as if there was some investigation from which they knew the fact, had been stolen from the Indians, with perhaps not one single fact before them to justify it, is, it seems to me, hardly fair treatment of the Department or of the Government. My honorable friend from West Virginia says he wanted to find somebody who had been guilty of rascality and he hunted for him, but he has not been able to find him and he is on this committee. I have no doubt money is stolen that is appropriated in the Indian bill, but I do not think it is nearly in such proportion as is named, and I do not believe you can carry on any great service of the Government or any great business scattered over such a vast extent of Territory, paying such salaries as you pay the men who do it, and have every dollar honestly administered.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. STEWART. I want to have my question answered if anybody knows—

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Nevada has expired, and so has the time of the Senator from California.

Mr. STEWART. Let him answer the question I asked.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Let anybody answer the question who has time.

Mr. SARGENT. Allow me?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes, sir. I will yield to my friend from California.

Mr. SARGENT. I say the promises made by the Government through General Crook to these Indians were that they should be treated in the manner we have been treating them for the past two years. The Indians have behaved well because these promises have been made. They will be under no obligations to keep them if the promises be violated.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not rise to discuss this proposition, but to say to Senators that there is nothing new in it. It follows as a necessity from the Indian system within which we are working. These Indians were forced upon these reservations and are there now. We have refused to allow them to roam and hunt and plunder and feed themselves, have confined them on these reservations. Now it is as well an ascertained fact as anything can be that it costs the Department so many hundreds of thousands of dollars annually to feed these Indians. That is known as well as anything can be in this service, and ascertained by actual experience. That is precisely this proposition. Unless you choose to change the entire Indian service, and allow these Indians to roam and hunt and plunder and murder and support themselves in that way, you must keep them where they are and you must feed them. That is the upshot of the whole thing, and that is exactly this proposition. It is not new and not peculiar to this year. We had it last year and the year before, and it will continue to be until you change the policy, and you cannot change the policy and go back to the old policy without its costing you more than four times what it costs now. From a very careful examination of this whole subject I am satisfied that we have saved more than $3,000,000 in the last four years by our change to the present policy. I think there ought to be no question about this.

Mr. HAGER. Mr. President, it seems to me a question of policy how the Indians should be managed; that is to say, the proposition contained in this bill is the pursuit of a policy inaugurated heretofore which is a departure from what had been hitherto the policy of the country in regard to the Indians. Hitherto we have had wars with the Indians; and in that respect it looks like extermination. The other policy is to put them upon reservations and take care of them at Government expense by feeding them there. If the money is expended through the Army, in behalf of the Army, for the support of the Army, we understand it; but if appropriations are made here of money to be distributed through agents for the benefit of the Indians, it is a very difficult matter for the Senate or any person to understand where that finally lodges. It is a well-ascertained fact, I believe, that it becomes dissolved or melts away before it ever reaches the Indians, through the hands of those who may manipulate it or otherwise.

Now, sir, I am disposed to do what is just to the Indian and what is best for the Indian, but I am not disposed to increase this appropriation beyond the amount contained in the House bill, and therefore shall not support the amendments that have been offered by the committee, for the reason that I have no confidence in the policy which it is intended to inaugurate. I do not believe that this money will go to the benefit of the Indians. We may pen them up in reservations, but if you do not feed them there will be starvation there; and between the two—extermination by war or starvation upon reservations—I do not care to discuss the question which is preferable; and that is really what is upon us. I have heard it said, as the Senator from Kansas has intimated, that the policy amounts to this, that you fatten the Indians during the winter in order that they may be better prepared to slay during the summer; but from what I have heard on the other side in regard to these reservations I do not believe there is much fattening of the Indians. It is rather starvation in consequence of a deficiency of food, and they break out in search of the necessities of life from these reservations in consequence of the inefficiency of the supply. That has been the history.

Mr. SARGENT. Will my colleague—

Mr. HAGER. I will be through in a moment.

Sir, we had a policy once. We had Indian commissioners appointed to whom was intrusted the care of the Indians, so far as they were an advisory board; they have resigned, and I had a conversation with one of these commissioners some time ago, a very intelligent gentleman, in which he said that they had no authority to inaugurate reforms and no power to correct abuses, and for that reason they gave up what to them was a fruitless task. Sir, it is the policy of the Government, the error in the administration of these Indian affairs, the plunder of the money on the way, that is mostly complained of; and I am not prepared to vote appropriations in this way unless I have some satisfactory guarantee that the money will reach the purpose and the object for which it is designed.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. SARGENT. I move to amend the amendment.

Mr. WEST. I should like to have the amendment reported that we may understand what it is. I want to know what the pending question is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is the amendment of the committee in print, and the Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] moves an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SARGENT. I move to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "eighty," and I do it for the purpose of making some remarks on this question.

Mr. President, I desire conscientiously to avoid the difficulty pointed out by my colleague. He says that the Indians are nearly starved on reservations. Is that a reason for making a less appropriation? He knows as well as I do—

Mr. HAGER. I want to correct a mistake.

Mr. SARGENT. "I will be through in a moment."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California declines to yield.

Mr. SARGENT. My honorable colleague made that remark to me when I asked him to yield.

Mr. HAGER. I said I would give you the floor in a minute as I had but a word more to say.

Mr. SARGENT. My colleague, as well as I, knows that two or three years ago Arizona was a scene of blood from one end to the other; that there was a terrible condition of things there, and the papers of San Francisco day by day dinned in his ears as they did in mine that the Government should do something to remedy that condition of things. I have no more interest in Arizona than he has. I was never within its boundaries. I do not know one hundred people in it. I do not know that I know ten. I only know by these very San Francisco papers and by other sources of information that that condition of things has ended. I know the policy which ended that condition of things. Here comes a proposition from the House of Representatives which starves that policy, breaks it up because the Indians cannot be kept on the reservations and cannot be kept in peace. If one year from now, with this meager appropriation and with a stringent provision of law accompanying it that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall not expend a dollar more than the amount we give him, war breaks loose in that country and American citizens are killed, women are ravished, and children's brains are dashed out against the rocks, I call the attention of the people of San Francisco and of Arizona and of the State of California and of these newspapers that I am not responsible. I wash my hands of it. I predict it as inevitably the result; and I say that here is a measure of peace necessary for that coast, and let my colleague vote it down if he desires.

Mr. HAGER. My colleague misunderstood me in declining to yield him the floor. It was not through discourtesy at all, but merely to say that I intended to say only a very few words more and that then I would yield. It was not with the intention of depriving him of the privilege of being heard. That did not occur to me at all. I had no such intention.

I merely wish now to correct a mistake that my colleague has made, that I undertook to say of my own knowledge that these Indians were starving. I meant to represent what I had heard on the other side by some person's remarks that the policy was to fatten them during the winter that they might be enabled to slay during the summer. Others told me that they were kept there in a starving condition for want of supplies, kept penned in by the Army. I did not say this of my own knowledge, but such information as came to me was what I wished to present. At the same time I have no intention at all to reflect on the action of this committee. I have no doubt they did what they thought was best for the country. I am speaking to the question, not as to the committee.

Mr. INGALLS. Is the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] withdrawn?

Mr. SARGENT. I withdraw it. As my colleague would not allow me to speak in his time, and as I had none of my own, I was forced to take that expedient to say a word. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. I move to postpone the consideration of the amendment until to-morrow at twelve o'clock; and upon that motion I will remark, in response to the Senator from Minnesota, that his estimate of the number of the Apaches is entirely erroneous; it is absolutely incorrect. If I understood him, he declared that the Apaches of New Mexico alone were about seven thousand. I have before me the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and upon pages 106 and 107 he will find an estimate of the entire number of Indians of all tribes in the Territories both of Arizona and New Mexico. I have taken the trouble to add the numbers both of males and females, adults and children, and the entire number of Apaches in both these Territories, including infants and adults, is seventy-seven hundred and eighty-four. Of those it is estimated that not more than one-half are at the present time upon reservations. The Senator makes his estimate of the amount necessary for the support of the Indians upon the entire number, men, women, and children, at fifteen cents per day, which is the amount that is allowed for a soldier's ration. He computes in that estimate the entire number of Indians at seven thousand; then at fifteen cents per day, or fifteen dollars per hundred rations, an amount exceeding $400,000 would be required to feed them alone. That is based upon an entire inaccuracy. It includes double the number of Indians that are upon the reservations and it estimates a full adult ration to every child among those tribes. It is grossly extravagant; it is grossly incorrect; and I for one desire some further information as to what is done with this extraordinary amount of money that is expended in Arizona and New Mexico. I say, sir, it is entirely incomprehensible upon any theory that is given us here either by the Committee on Appropriations or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. There is no estimate whatever either as to the number of these Indians upon the reservations or the amount required to subsist them that will account for one-half of the money that is here named in this bill; and I trust that the Senator from Minnesota before we are called upon to vote on this proposition will explain the inaccuracy he has made in his statement; and if that is the ground upon which this appropriation is asked, that then he will amend his request and reduce it to correspond with the figures contained in the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I now withdraw my motion.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President—

Mr. SHERMAN. I trust my friend will give way to me for a moment. At the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. FERRY] who is not now in his seat, I wish to make an announcement. It was understood that to-morrow he would make the formal announcement of the death of his late colleague. He now says that the condition of his health is not such as to allow him to make the announcement to-morrow.

Mr. INGALLS. At what hour to-morrow?

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. FERRY sends me word that he will not be able on account of his health to make the announcement to-morrow, but he will take occasion to do it on some other day at the convenience of the Senate. He wished me to make this statement to the Senate so that it might arrange its business without reference to the announcement which it was understood would be made to-morrow.

Mr. WASHBURN. While what the Senator from Ohio has stated is true, I wish to inform the Senate that announcements will come from the House to-morrow of the deaths of members of that body.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; I understand several announcements will come to us from the House of Representatives at a very late hour probably, so as not to interfere with our session to-morrow.

Mr. WASHBURN. They may be late, but they will be announced to the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. They will come before the adjournment. I have done all I desired in making the announcement.

Mr. HAMLIN. Let me say a word. I think the understanding in the House is that the announcement of the deaths there will commence at three o'clock, and it is apprehended that that will give ample time for the messages to be sent here and the appropriate attention paid here.

Mr. WINDOM. In view of the announcements that have been made and of the pressing business before the Senate, I want to give notice now that I will request the Senate to remain in session until we complete this bill to-day; and having given that notice, I want to say in answer to my friend from Kansas, who suggests that there has been a great inaccuracy in my statement of the number of Indians, that my statement was that which was furnished me by the Commissioner on Indian Affairs; and since he commenced his remarks I have sent for the book containing the estimates, and they will be presented by my friend and colleague on the committee, the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. WEST.] I have not the book before me, but I have no doubt the number is correctly stated as I reported it before.

Mr. INGALLS. I can furnish the Senator with the book.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator from Louisiana has the figures.

Mr. SAULSBURY. In reference to the amendment of the committee, I have been listening with some attention to learn from gentlemen familiar with this question whether it is a proper amendment or not, and I confess now, after the debate has been had, I am unable to determine the necessity of the amendment. I am prepared to vote for any amendment to the House bill which, in the judgment of gentlemen familiar with the subject, is necessary for the Indian service; but after listening to this debate I confess that I am unable to say whether this amendment is necessary or not.

In reference to the general expenditure for Indian purposes, my impression is that until within a very few years, perhaps ten or twelve, the appropriations for Indian expenditures have not exceeded about $3,000,000. This bill I believe appropriates over $5,000,000, and it is a reduction from some Indian appropriation bills, which some years I believe have amounted to $7,000,000. I cannot fully understand why the Indian service now requires so much more expenditure than it did some years ago. There is a less number of Indians to feed and clothe. It is true that by the extension of our borders our frontiers have been brought more in contact with some of the Indians, and that may in part account for the increased expenditure of this service.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It accounts for it wholly, I will say to my friend.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am not prepared to say from any personal examination of the subject that there has been a lavish expenditure of money; but when I find the general result to be what it is as between past years and the present, I am not satisfied that such is not the case.

Against this increase of appropriation I shall vote, because I am not satisfied from the discussion that has taken place on the part of gentlemen who are familiar with the subject that it is necessary, and gentlemen in the other House entirely familiar have thought the amount appropriated in the House bill is proper.

Mr. WEST. There is a principle before the Senate and a very simple one as to whether it is cheaper to feed Indians than to fight them. Having in the course of my military experience spent eighteen months precisely in the locality of these Indians and controlling them absolutely by military power, I think I have some reason to give my experience to the Senate.

With something over fifteen hundred men I was actually engaged about eighteen months in controlling this body of Indians now in these reservations. To do it effectually might require no more than one thousand men, because it was done with considerable ease with fifteen hundred; but in my judgment the smallest limit of the military force necessary to control them on these reservations is one thousand men. It is very well known that the cost of one thousand soldiers is, according to the military disbursements of this Government, $1,000,000 on an average throughout the country. I think I might double that amount for the necessary disbursements in the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico. In case a thousand men were required to be kept there it would more likely cost you $2,000,000 than it would $1,000,000.

Then the mere question is whether we shall feed or fight them. To fight them will cost you $2,000,000. To feed them will cost you $525,000. The question simply is, is $525,000 too much, or is it not enough? Let me say that I have figured just this moment how many Apache Indians there are on the reservations in New Mexico and Arizona. There are seventy-eight hundred and twenty. The difficulty the Senator from Kansas finds is that he confounds other Indians with the Apaches. The Apaches have various names, I think some seven or eight, for the various tribes according to the manner in which they stain their arrows. I could always tell when I was fighting in an Indian fight by their arrows as we picked them up afterward.

So we have according to the Commissioner's statement seventy-eight hundred and twenty of these Indians upon the reservation. The estimate is that they can be fed for twenty cents a day, giving you $1,564 a day and $570,860 a year, and this bill calls for $500,000.

That in brief has been my experience and that is the result as stated by the Commissioner, and it is economy of the most judicious kind. I have no love for these Indians; if I had any use for them they would not be where they are, considering the treatment that men under my command met at their hands; but it is an absolute economy and it is an economy within a judicious limitation and within a numerical limitation that cannot be controverted.

Mr. INGALLS. Have I any time left?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. One minute.

Mr. INGALLS. I move, then, a postponement of the consideration of this amendment until to-morrow at one o'clock.

The Senator from Louisiana assumes that I have made a mistake in my enumeration and have confounded different tribes of Indians in Arizona and New Mexico, who as he says are distinguished by the way in which they color their arrows. I do not profess to have a very profound knowledge upon this subject, but I am unwilling to rest under the imputation of having made an insufficient or an inaccurate count, and I will therefore call the attention of the Senate to pages 106 and 108 of the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in which the entire number of Apaches is estimated not only by their tribal name as Apaches but by their different designations as Aribapa Apaches, Pinal Apaches, White Mountain or Coyetero Apaches, Apache Yumas, Apache Mohaves, &c., and having added up the entire number of Indians that are named under the different designations the whole amount is exactly what I stated in my remarks before, seventy-seven hundred and eighty-four, and I say again that the enumeration which estimates the entire number at seventy-seven or seventy-eight hundred in New Mexico alone is therefore entirely incorrect; and the Senator having charge of this bill having declared that the amount that is here asked for is based upon the cost of rations for every one of these Indians at fifteen cents per head or fifteen dollars per hundred, he is entirely at fault, and unless the committee can give some further estimate of the objects and purposes for which this money is to be appropriated, certainly this amendment ought not to prevail.

In addition to the amount here appropriated, in addition to the statement made by the Senator in regard to the expenditure of this money for subsistence, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shows that a very large portion of these Indians now upon the reservations, amounting perhaps to about three thousand or thirty-five hundred, are self-sustaining. Upon various pages of his report will be found statements that at one point and another they have raised thousands of pounds of corn and a great many bushels of wheat and vegetables of various descriptions, that they are pursuing largely and contentedly the arts of civilized life. So the estimate upon which these enormous demands are asked appears to be wholly without foundation, and I trust before the Senate passes upon it the committee will give us some further idea of what this money is to be expended for.

One thing further, Mr. President. What I principally complain of, and what I think the Senate and the country have a right to complain of in the administration of Indian affairs, is that that Department habitually disregard the requirements of law. They entirely disregard appropriations that are made, and proceed to spend money and make contracts largely in excess of the amount which they are authorized to spend under the laws providing for the expenditures of the Indian Department.

Last year with regard to these Indians alone we had a deficiency appropriation of more than $400,000, and I have no doubt that when the deficiency appropriation bill comes in this year we shall have another appropriation asked, in order to make up the deficient expenditure in connection with these Indians. The Indian Department, like all other Departments of this Government, ought to be controlled by law. They have no right to spend a dollar or make a contract for a dollar in excess of the appropriations allowed by law; and that is one reason why I think that as a Senate we have a right to complain of the conduct of affairs in the Indian Department.

I withdraw my motion.

Mr. WEST. The Senator from Kansas takes occasion, and not improperly in my judgment, to call into question the management of certain affairs in the Indian Department. The management of those affairs is being gradually and efficiently corrected and in such correction he and other members of the Senate are strongly co-operated with by the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs. But as an illustration of some of the abuses which have come to his notice he cites the fact that there was a large deficiency required last year to maintain these very Indians, and that the Department incurred those expenses unwarrantably, and that Congress is surprised by being requested to make an appropriation that had not heretofore been estimated for. The facts are these, and the occasion of that large deficiency is explained in this way: General Crook was at that time carrying on an active warfare with these Indians; he was endeavoring by persuasion and by constraint to place them upon these reservations; and he was succeeding gradually up to that time with a certain amount of success. The Commissioner estimated for a certain amount of money. General Crook's effort exceeded his most sanguine expectation, as we have heard another Department officer express it, and he got in more Indians than he had money; but it was good economy to give him the money; it is good economy to give the Commissioner the money. So in reference to that, there is the explanation of it. There will be no deficiency of that kind this year. Now we come to dealing absolutely with the fact, "how many Indians have we there," "how much does it cost to feed them," and once having satisfactorily conceded the policy of feeding before fighting, then we have, according to the statement of the Commissioner, nine thousand Apaches in New Mexico and Arizona, according to his main statement on page 1 of his report nine thousand and fifty-seven. Of those I figured—and the Senator's figures nearly agree with mine—seventy-eight hundred and twenty Indians upon these reservations. True they are to some extent self-sustaining; true they are making some progress in agricultural arts and the arts of peace; true we may expect from time to time that the expense devolving on the Government to support them will diminish. But the question is to-day how many Indians have we there and how necessary is it to support them? We have seventy-eight hundred and twenty. I overstated the amount at twenty cents a ration, but the Commissioner estimates that for so much per diem he can keep them from starving. If you do not keep them from starving you are not keeping faith with them. You have put them in that locality and required them to stay there, and you have drawn a dead line around them, and if they go over it you shoot them. Consequently it is but right to feed them, and it is a mere question whether we have the absolute number there or not, and I plead the book in justification of the appropriation. There it is, so many Indians. I speak of it because at the very time this question was up in committee my attention was called to it, and I required the Senator having charge of the bill to justify the fact. He did it to our satisfaction and I think it is done to the satisfaction of the Senate, and I believe the appropriation will stand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 206, to increase the appropriation for the Apaches of New Mexico from $100,000 to $125,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 206, to increase the aggregate appropriation for the Apaches of Arizona and New Mexico from $400,000 to $500,000.

Mr. SARGENT. The words "in all" should be inserted before "$500,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That verbal correction of the amendment will be made.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 278, after the word "authorized" to strike out "and required;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be authorized to withhold, from any tribe of Indians who may hold any captives other than Indians, any moneys due them from the United States until said captives shall be surrendered to the lawful authorities of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was from lines 321 to 333, inclusive, to strike out the appropriation for the Chippewas of Lake Superior in the following words:

For nineteenth of twenty installments, for the seventh smith and assistant, and support of shops, per second and fifth articles of treaty of September 30, 1854, $1,060.

For support of smith and shop, during the pleasure of the President, as per seventh and twelfth articles of treaty of April 7, 1866, $600.

For the support of two farmers, during the pleasure of the President, as per twelfth article of treaty of September 30, 1854, and seventh article of treaty of April 7, 1866, $1,200.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the support and civilization of the Chippewas of Lake Superior, to be expended for agricultural and educational purposes; pay of clerk and necessary employés, purchase of goods and provisions, and for transporting the same; and for such other purposes as may be deemed for the best interests of said Indians, $30,000.

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue to the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church a patent for the southeast quarter of section 9, in township 14 north, of range 4 west, situate in the State of Michigan, as per fourth article of treaty of October 18, 1864.

Mr. BOGY. I should like to obtain some information in relation to the latter part of this amendment, which I will read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue to the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church a patent for the southeast quarter of section 9, in township 14 north, of range 4 west, situate in the State of Michigan, as per fourth article of treaty of October 18, 1864.

I do not think this bill is the proper place for a provision of this kind. It has no business in an appropriation bill. It is to carry out a treaty obligation, as I presume. If so, it should come in a separate form and not as a part of an appropriation bill. It has nothing to do with the appropriation bill. The bill is for the appropriation of money for the Indian service, and here is authority to issue a patent for a piece of land which is said to be due under treaty stipulations. If that be so, let a bill be presented in the Senate in proper form and receive consideration in the proper way. It certainly should not be in this appropriation bill. I therefore move to amend the amendment by striking out that clause.

Mr. WINDOM. The clause to which the Senator refers is I think strictly germane to the bill. It provides for carrying out the provisions of a treaty. The treaty provides that under certain conditions this society should receive a quarter-section of land. This bill is to make appropriations for current and continued expenses, and "for fulfilling treaty stipulations." This is a treaty stipulation, and consequently I think it is entirely proper in this bill.

Mr. BOGY. This treaty was made upward of ten years ago, and I am at a loss to know how the thing has been permitted to lie over for ten years without the parties who claim this land having asked for a patent for it. I think the subject ought to come up in a different way, so that the Senate may be enlightened in regard to this claim. It may be altogether proper; I do not deny it; but I, as a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, know nothing about it.

It is a subject that certainly ought to pass before the Indian Committee. If it is to carry out a treaty obligation, the Indian Committee ought to have it under consideration and report on the subject in a bill. It never has been submitted to that committee. The committee is entirely ignorant of the subject; and how is it that the matter has lain over for the last ten or twelve years?

Mr. WINDOM. I believe there were certain treaty stipulations as to certain conditions which have been substantially complied with by the society, and consequently they present their request to have the Government comply with its conditions. I believe that accounts for the delay.

Mr. BOGY. The Indian Committee is the proper committee to pass on a subject of this nature, and the Indian Committee have never had the matter referred to them. I therefore move to strike out this portion of the amendment—the latter clause.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. As this applies to the State of Michigan, I will state to the Senator from Missouri that the Methodist Episcopal Church were required to expend $3,000 in the education of the Indians upon this reservation. Instead of $3,000 they have expended $10,000, and the amendment comes here with the consent and under the advisement of the Secretary of the Interior. I think there is a letter directly from him, or indirectly through the head of the Indian Bureau, now before the Committee on Appropriations. It is not at my hand now, but I have seen the letter and the committee have it, advising that this be done, that the Secretary of the Interior be authorized to issue the patent in conformity with the stipulations of the treaty. Certainly it is germane to the bill, for the bill provides for carrying out treaty stipulations, and it is carrying out one of the provisions of the treaty to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue the patent. Certainly I think there can be no objection to it.

Mr. BOGY. I ask the Senator from Michigan why has not the subject been referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs? That certainly is the proper committee to pass on a matter of this kind, and not the Committee on Appropriations, because this is not an appropriation. It is a matter of Indian legislation; it is not an appropriation.

I do not agree with the Senator that because the heading of the bill is that it is to carry out treaty stipulations this amendment is proper here. That means treaty stipulations requiring the payment of money, and not entire legislation on the subject of Indian affairs. Upon this bill you cannot lay out a reservation for Indians. You can only provide for that which sounds in money. It means to carry out treaty stipulations that are to be carried out by the appropriation of money; that is, if by treaty you stipulate to pay to an Indian tribe a given sum of money, it shall find a place in a bill of this character; but that you shall include in a bill of this character the entire system of Indian legislation is certainly not correct.

I repeat what I said before, that this is a matter particularly belonging to the Indian Committee; and I dare say, if the matter is well investigated, this proposition is wrong. Without knowing anything about it, but judging from my own experience, I say that when this matter is investigated it will be found that this patent should not be issued, and that these men are not entitled to it.

Mr. WINDOM. Upon that point let me say that this case has been investigated, and the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands can say what the result was.

Mr. SPRAGUE. The Committee on Public Lands had under consideration a bill granting this quarter section of land, and they ascertained the facts from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and I ask that his letter be read, if it is the desire of my friend from Missouri. I have before me a bill proposing to make this grant recommended by the Committee on Public Lands, and the information of the committee comes from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., February 5, 1875.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by reference from the Commissioner of the General Land-Office, of Senate bill No. 1146, providing for the issue of a patent for a quarter section of land in the State of Michigan to the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

By reference to the fourth article of the treaty between the United States and the Chippewa Indians of Saginaw, Swan Creek, and Black River, concluded October 18, 1864, (14 United States Statutes, 657,) provision is made for the issue of a patent for the land described in said bill to said society upon a compliance on its part with certain requisites set forth in said article of said treaty.

The requirements relating to a school have not been complied with by the society nor has any money been paid by the Government to the society on that account, but the society has made valuable improvements on the land, and has furnished constant missionary service since the establishment of the reservation, by which such aid has been rendered to the Indians as has proved of great value in improving their condition in all respects. In return for this service the Indians desire that this society should have the land in question; and I therefore respectfully recommend the passage of said bill.

The bill is herewith returned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

EDWIN P. SMITH,
Commissioner.

Hon. CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE PUBLIC LANDS,
United States Senate.

Mr. SPRAGUE. The treaty provides:

At the expiration of ten years after the establishment of said school, if said missionary society shall have conducted said school and farm in a manner acceptable to the board of visitors during said ten years, the United States will convey to said society the land before mentioned by patent in fee-simple.

I hope the amendment of the committee will prevail.

Mr. BOGY. I could not hear the reading of the letter very distinctly, but if I heard correctly the conditions imposed by the treaty have not been complied with. I guessed there was something of the kind. The treaty has not been complied with, and the subject should be investigated.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I will answer the Senator. As the letter states, strictly the conditions have not been complied with, because the stipulation was that they should expend $3,000 for educational purposes; they have expended, instead of $3,000, $10,000 as stated by the Indian agent. While I am speaking I hope the letter will reach us from the room of the Committee on Appropriations; it is directly from the Secretary of the Interior, I think, corroborative of the one which comes from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the Secretary recommends it as carrying out the stipulation of the treaty.

The design of the Government was to erect a school building. The Indians themselves preferred erecting their own school buildings, and instead of one erected six. Therefore it was entirely useless to expend more money for school purposes, and they expended it in the erection of a church, the Indians inviting it, and the amount of $10,000 was expended. The Indians join in the request to the Government that this be done, stating that this was a full compliance with the treaty so far as they are concerned; and as the Government is satisfied through its officers that there has been a compliance with the treaty, it is now asked that the treaty stipulation be carried out on the part of the Government.

Mr. BOGY. To use the language of my distinguished friend from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] "this won't do." I said at the outset, without knowing anything about it, that there was something wrong in this, and the statement of the Senator from Michigan justifies my statement. The treaty has not been complied with. The school-houses have not been built; but these men have built a church for their own purposes and have not complied with the treaty stipulation. It will not do to say that the treaty has been complied with because they have expended $10,000 and not $3,000. The greater includes the less. If they expended $10,000 for school purposes they complied with the treaty requiring $3,000. But if the matter is investigated, I am prepared to say these men will not get this patent. It will not do. The statement of the Senator justifies my remark. The treaty has not been complied with. These men had no more right to build a church than a bake-house or anything else. They were required to put up buildings for a school. They may have built a very handsome church or other buildings; but the letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs says that the treaty has not been complied with, and that is sufficient for us. Let the matter be investigated.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I do not know how the Senator can say that this has not been done for the benefit of the Indians, as would be implied by his remark.

Mr. BOGY. I do not say that. It may be for the benefit of the Indians. That is not the question. That is evading the question. The treaty says the money shall be expended for a school-house. It might have been for the benefit of the Indians to have fed and clothed them if it was a cold winter and they had no clothes and if they were hungry. That might have been better for them for the time being; but that is not the contract. The agreement was that the money should be expended for a school-house, and it has not been done.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. It is very well known that there are more ways than one to educate the Indians. The Senator's words as they fell upon my ear would imply that this is for individual interests. I stated I think in the hearing of the Senator that it was done at the request of the Indians. This expenditure was at the request of the Indians. The society were ready to put up a building worth $3,000 for school purposes; but when the Indians themselves had built six buildings with all the capacity that was needed for their educational purposes, and then requested that this expenditure should be made in the erection of a church for religious education, was it not proper? It was for the benefit of the Indians entirely, upon the very tract of ground described in the treaty which was designed to be given by the Government to the Indians for educational purposes; and it was done upon the request of the Indians and not at the dictation or initiation of the society. It would seem as though this was a full compliance with the treaty in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior and of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and both the committees that have investigated the subject.

If this was given to an individual, if this was given to a society outside, if this was given in the interest of any but the Indians, I should accord with what has been stated by the Senator from Missouri; but as it is given for the sole purpose of benefiting the Indians and at their request—I am reminded by the President that my time has expired, and I will close my sentence by saying that inasmuch as it is given entirely for their interest and in compliance with the treaty in that respect, it seems as though the Senator from Missouri cannot object to the amendment.

Mr. BOGY. The Senator will pardon me. There is another mistake. This church has been built on what is said to be Indian land. The Indian has only a temporary possession there. He is bound to leave there, and leave there very soon; and when he does go he will not carry that church with him; but if he had been educated he might carry his education with him. He has no fee to the land there. He has only a temporary possessory right. He may be gone to-morrow; he may be gone already; and I would not be surprised if he had already left. There may be no reservation there now; but if there be one he has no fee to it. It will not benefit him hereafter; it will only benefit the church. I have no objection to the church; but I want the treaty carried out; I want the agreement fulfilled, although this might have been greatly for the benefit of the Indian and might have been a great deal more valuable in this way than in his education. I dare say there would have been more benefit from it, because I know they could not have been educated in the school except in worldly wisdom; but that is neither here nor there. The contract was that the money should be spent for a certain purpose, and that purpose has not been complied with; and that is the reason the matter was not sent to the Committee on Indian Affairs. They were afraid that committee would report against it. Let the committee examine the matter, and if it is right they will report for it.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. The Senator from Missouri has moved to strike out the paragraph. I move to amend by striking out of the paragraph the words "township 14 north."

I know nothing of this matter except as revealed by the Indian agent, who is here, and by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. This money has been expended, not for the interest of the Methodist Episcopal Church, but for the interest of the Indians in their development and education. I repeat what I said before, that education can be religiously as well as otherwise, and this has been done at the instance of the Indians. When they had school capacity, school facilities sufficient to meet all their necessities, it does not seem to me as though they should be required, in order to fulfill this treaty stipulation, to expend more needlessly, against their protest. What the church has done in this case has been to furnish them teachers for their schools, strictly in the line of education, in the judgment of the Senator from Missouri, and also to erect a church and give them religious education. Furnishing teachers was a part of this expenditure and so was furnishing them church facilities and all the education that grows out of Christianity, which I think the Senator from Missouri's experience has taught him is in the line of the education and development of the Indian. This is upon a reservation that exists now in Michigan, and it was done at the request of the whole tribe, who ask that this title should be given to the society. This being so, it seems to me that the Senator from Missouri is pressing the objection very strongly and making a very nice point in order to throw them out of the title to this property which they certainly are entitled to. The $3,000 could better have been expended than the $10,000. The $3,000 might have been expended in the erection of a school building; but there were six others, and the Indians asked that no more should be built upon the ground which they hoped to own. Certainly on the part of the society it was but a question of intelligent prudence that they should divert their expenditure toward the education of the Indians in the development of Christian influences and habits rather than in expending more money in educating them under the teachers that they then employed.

So far as the question put by the Senator from Missouri was rather an intimation that this could have come up on a separate bill, we know at this stage of proceedings in Congress it would be utterly futile to attempt to offer such a bill and pass it. It would simply pass this House and go to the other. The proposition receives the commendation and urgent appeal of the Secretary of the Interior and the Indian Department, and is relevant to the bill, inasmuch as it fulfills a treaty stipulation. It seems, then, to be properly before the Senate on this bill.

I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. I have listened with much interest to the explanation of this clause afforded by the statements of the Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from Michigan, and also by the reading of the letter of the Commissioner at the desk; but there appear to my mind to be two objections to the adoption of this clause as an amendment to this bill. The title of the act is "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes." This is in no sense an appropriation, and to that extent therefore it is not germane to the bill now under consideration.

In the second place, I have given what hasty examination was in my power to the various treaties between the United States and the Chippewa Indians and I am unable to find the treaty and the section of the treaty upon which this clause is ostensibly based. I therefore trust before we are called upon to vote, that the Senator having the bill in charge will report the section of the treaty so that we may be able to vote understandingly and ascertain whether this is to carry out treaty stipulations or not. But even if it is in accordance with the stipulations of the treaty, it is entirely inconsistent with the object and theory of this bill. It does not propose to appropriate money and it should have emanated either from the Committee on Public Lands or from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

I need not say that so far as a sectarian argument has been pressed here, I have no share in any such feeling. It is immaterial to me whether the patent is to issue to a Methodist Episcopal church, or a Mormon church, or a Catholic church. If either is entitled to it they ought to have it, and I can see no reason why a question of this character should be determined on an Indian appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ALLISON in the chair.) The Senator from Michigan withdraws his amendment, and the question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri striking out the last paragraph of the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I concur entirely in what has been stated by the Senator who last spoke, that this provision has no place on an appropriation bill, and I confess surprise that the Committee on Appropriations should introduce a matter of legislation in an appropriation bill. I thought that it always resisted all attempts made by outsiders to introduce any such matter into an appropriation bill; but the committee has itself set the example. It is very true this has some connection with Indians, because it is a matter provided for in a treaty with Indians, but that does not make it any the less a private claim which is provided for by legislation in this bill. I would like to know whether the gentlemen of the Committee on Appropriations intend to admit general legislation in their bills, nay, not only to admit it but to invite it; for this does look to me like an invitation. Do we intend to legislate on this bill, to make appropriation bills carry legislation, as was formerly sometimes done? I thought we had all condemned that practice so much that it was not likely to be resumed. If that is to be done let it be so understood, and any one who has a pet measure here and cannot get it through standing by itself can offer it to an appropriation bill. We once had a rule which prohibited that. That rule, I believe, was allowed to die with the session. Whether we are now to act upon the old plan of years ago and let an appropriation bill be loaded down with independent and general legislation that has nothing to do with the appropriations in the bill, it seems to me would be very well worthy the consideration of the Senate.

As to the merits of this particular thing, if I understood the Senator from Michigan, the school-houses had been built, all for which there is any necessity, and the Indians themselves preferred properly the use of the means of the society in the erection of a church. If that is the case I should not feel myself disposed to stick in the bark about the technical performance of the condition in the treaty if there has been a substantial performance, and even a more beneficial performance.

And here I wish to say a word in respect to a remark that fell from the Senator from Kansas. He said something about the sectarian argument. I must say I have heard nothing of the sort. I have heard no Senator object to this amendment on account of any sectarian feature in this society whatever. I think there is nothing of that kind. If there is, it has escaped my attention.

Mr. BOGY. I will read for the information of the Senator from the fourth article of the treaty with these Indians, which is as follows:

The United States agrees to expend the sum of $30,000 for the support and maintenance of a manual-labor school upon said reservation: Provided, That the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church shall, within three years after the ratification of this treaty, at its own expense, erect suitable buildings for school and boarding-house purposes, of a value of not less than $3,000, upon the southeast quarter of section 9, township 14 north, of range 4 west, which is hereby set apart for that purpose.

At the expiration of ten years after the establishment of said school, if said missionary society shall have conducted said school and farm in a manner acceptable to the board of visitors during said ten years, the United States will convey to said society the land before mentioned by patent in fee-simple.

That is the treaty. That treaty has not been complied with in any one particular. The letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs says so in so many words.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. Will the Senator allow me a moment? He says the treaty has not been complied with in any one particular. I think I have stated that so far as the school-buildings are concerned the Indians erected them. So far as that is concerned, they did not comply with the letter of the stipulation; but, as stated, the same society have expended not only $3,000 but $10,000 upon the same property described in that paragraph of the treaty.

Mr. BOGY. The sum of $20,000 doubtless was paid to them:

The United States agrees to expend the sum of $20,000.

Doubtless they received the $20,000; but it was stipulated that if they would erect a building at their own cost upon this land and maintain a school for ten years, at the expiration of ten years the land would be patented to them. The condition was that they should put up the building themselves at their own expense. They did not do it, and therefore they have no right to this land.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. Let me answer the Senator right there. He has made another point that they have not complied with the treaty in that respect. They have kept the school, as stated in the letter, for ten years.

Mr. BOGY. It may be that they have kept the school, but they have not expended the money required by this treaty, which was at their own expense to provide a building for a school-house upon that land.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I think I have sufficiently answered that.

Mr. BOGY. The Senator has not done so. It may be true that these Indians have been taken care of, that these men are entirely worthy, that they may have received many advantages from their teaching and their care in their education; that may be all true, but the agreement was that if they should expend $3,000 on this land, at the expiration of ten years it should belong to them. Now, the contract has not been complied with. What harm can there be in striking out this clause? If this thing is all right, as my friend from Michigan contends it is, and it may be, why not refer this question to the Committee on Indian Affairs? It is true it is too late for this session, but it will be in time for next session. If these men claim this land according to the treaty stipulation, and if they have complied virtually although not technically with that treaty, the Senate and the House will have no hesitation in giving them the land, but I am perfectly satisfied enough has been elicited in this debate to show that these men are not entitled to this land at all. The more we talk about it the less they appear to be entitled to it.

Mr. WINDOM. The treaty just read provided that the United States should expend $20,000 for the purposes named upon this land, and they have not done so. The buildings now upon the land were owned by the Indians. They removed upon the land, as I understand the case. But whether that be true or not, this society carried on the schools, furnished the teachers, and with the consent and at the request of the Indians put up a church and other buildings which they preferred and desired, not needing school buildings, and by the assistance this society has given the Indians $20,000 has been saved by the Government. I think it makes a very strong case in equity that this land should be given to the society. I hope we may have a vote. It is a small matter. Let us vote it either up or down.

Mr. INGALLS. The section of the treaty which was read by the Senator from Missouri convinced me that this clause is entirely superfluous. As I understand it, a treaty is a contract of the very highest obligation. If the parties who are named in this clause as beneficiaries of this tract have complied with their obligations, the Secretary of the Interior is bound upon that fact appearing to issue to them the patent.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I hope the Senator will allow me a word right there, inasmuch as my time is exhausted and I do not desire to resort to a pro forma method of occupying the attention of the Senate. The Secretary of the Interior does not feel himself justified in doing it; but he says the Indians have complied with all that was required, not in letter but in spirit, and he asks that he be authorized to carry out the stipulation of the treaty; and that is the purport of the letter.

Mr. INGALLS. Then, as I understand the Senator from Michigan to say, the reason why this legislation is necessary is because the treaty stipulations have not been complied with.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I think I have explained that and the Senator has heard it. So far as expending the $3,000 for a school building is concerned, that has not been complied with because there were other buildings erected. I think I have stated that two or three times. The Indians asked that the money which the society were to expend should not be expended in erecting more school buildings, but should be expended in erecting a church and in the payment of teachers. For the whole length of ten years this society has furnished the teachers, has erected a church building, and in these two methods, in these two channels of education, has certainly in spirit fulfilled the stipulation of the treaty, but in letter it has not erected a school building; and therefore the Secretary of the Interior, confined strictly to the treaty, does not feel authorized to issue the patent, but asks that he be authorized to carry it out inasmuch as the society have performed their part.

Mr. INGALLS. I do not wish to prolong this debate, and will content myself with saying that the clause has a very suspicious appearance. The fact that it has passed through the entire session without ever being reported from the Committee on Public Lands or the Committee on Indian Affairs, and now in the last days of this session appears as a rider to an appropriation bill, gives it an appearance that is not favorable. Regarding it as establishing a very dangerous precedent, and as being not entitled to consideration, I will content myself with saying that I hope it will not be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. ALLISON in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOGY] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 6, noes 18; no quorum voting.

Mr. INGALLS. I hope the Senator from Missouri will withdraw his request for a division. This question can be just as well determined by reservation in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri withdraw his call for a division?

Mr. BOGY. I wish to make this point, and I give the Senate notice that it is perfectly idle to waste my time and the time of the Senate in making objections to any of these appropriations. If Senators will neither listen nor vote, I give notice now that I shall not waste time in making any such motion ever hereafter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator withdraw his call for a division?

Mr. BOGY. No, sir; I want a division.

Mr. THURMAN. The last vote disclosing that there was no quorum, nothing can be done unless the President counts the Senate. I suggest that the Chair count the Senate.

Mr. WINDOM. Can we not divide again? That will show.

Mr. THURMAN. Either one or the other will show.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On a count of the Senate more than a quorum is present. The Chair will again put the question.

Mr. THURMAN. In listening to this debate it seems to me that in equity this society could well have its patent, although it has not literally complied with the conditions precedent to a grant of the land; but I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, because I think the provision has no place in an appropriation bill. As a separate and distinct bill I should vote for the provision.

The question being again put, the amendment to the amendment was rejected; there being on a division—ayes 15, noes 24.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in the appropriation for the Chippewa, Pillager, and Winnebagoish bands, in line 439, to increase the appropriation for purpose of education, per third article of treaty of February 22, 1855, and per third article of treaty of 1864, first of ten installments, from $1,500 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 518, after the words "Choctaw Nation," in the appropriation for the Choctaws, to insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That from the amount hereby appropriated the sum of $299.10, paid out of the civilization fund of the Indian Bureau for board and medical treatment of Louisa Haskins, a Choctaw Indian, at the Government Hospital for the Insane, near Washington, District of Columbia, and to defray the expenses of J. B. Jackson, a Choctaw Indian youth, en route to his home in the Indian Territory, shall be used to reimburse said civilization fund; and that the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause to be paid, out of Choctaw funds, the expenses incurred at said insane asylum for board and medical treatment of said Louisa Haskins so long as she shall remain in said asylum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 593, after "flannel" to strike out "shirt" and insert "skirt."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "dollars," in line 628, in the appropriation of $100,000 to furnish flour and meat to the Creeks, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That of this amount a sum not exceeding $15,000 may be used for removal of the agency to a more suitable location within the reservation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the items for the Dwamish and other allied tribes in Washington Territory, to reduce, in line 661, the appropriation for sixteenth of twenty installments, for the employment of a blacksmith, carpenter, farmer, and physician, per fourteenth article of treaty of January 22, 1855, from $4,600 to $4,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not know whether the chairman of the committee wishes any interruption of the reading of this bill except to consider the amendments of the committee, but if he is willing that inquiries should be made as we go along, I should like to ask him or the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs whether any such schools as are mentioned in the provision on page 35, under the head of "Molels," are kept up or ever have been at all.

For pay of teachers and for manual-labor schools and for all necessary materials therefor, and for the subsistence of the pupils, per fourth article of treaty of December 21, 1855, $3,000.

If the committee wish me to defer my inquiry until the amendments are through, I will do so.

Mr. WINDOM. I will furnish the information directly; it is not at hand at this moment.

Mr. THURMAN. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in lines 871 and 872, after the words "provided that," in the appropriation for the Navajoes, to strike out the words "this appropriation may be available upon the passage of this act, and that;" and in line 875, after the word "tribe" to insert "and may be available upon the passage of this act;" so that the proviso will read:

Provided, That with the consent of the tribe, $25,000 of the same shall be expended in the purchase of stock, cattle, and sheep for the tribe, and may be available upon the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. With the permission of the Senate, I will recur to the question asked by the Senator from Ohio. The school is at the Grande Ronde agency in Oregon; the number of the Indians is eight hundred; the number of school buildings, one; the number of schools, two; number of teachers, three. There are twenty-one males and twenty-six females, according to the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. It is represented as a very good school. It is under the charge of the Catholics. It is a well-conducted school, as I am informed by the Commissioner.

Mr. THURMAN. Those are the pupils.

Mr. WINDOM. Yes, sir; the pupils—twenty-one males and twenty-six females.

Mr. THURMAN. How long has that school been open?

Mr. WINDOM. I believe it was organized when the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOGY] was Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. THURMAN. I certainly have no objection to an appropriation where a school actually exists such as has been described, for I think we cannot appropriate money much better than for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be continued.

The reading of the bill was proceeded with. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 953, after the word "shall," in the appropriations for the Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes, to insert the words "if required by the Secretary of the Interior;" so that the provision will read:

Provided, That said Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes shall, if required by the Secretary of the Interior, remove to their reservation in the Indian Territory before the delivery of said supplies appropriated for by the foregoing clause.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 995, in the appropriations for the Osages, to insert the following:

For this amount, to be paid to the Osage Indians in accordance with section 12 of the act approved July 15, 1870, being interest from November 1, 1874, to November 1, 1875, at 5 per cent. on $775,543.50, the net avails of Osage trust and diminished-reserve lands sold by the United States prior to November 1, 1874, $38,777.18.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 1189, in the appropriations for the Seminoles, to insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be made an accurate computation of the area of that portion of the Creek reservation lying between the north fork of the Canadian River and the main Canadian River, and between the west boundary of the Creek reservation and a north and south line between said rivers that shall include the main improvements now occupied by the Seminoles; that the Secretary of the Interior be authorized to transfer from the moneys belonging to the Seminole Indians, now in the Treasury of the United States, the sum of $150,000, or so much thereof as may be found necessary to pay for said tract of country at the rate of fifty cents an acre, to the credit of the Creek tribe of Indians; that the Secretary of the Interior be authorized to sell stocks belonging to the Creeks, equal in value to the amount of money required to purchase said tract of country, and to pay over the same, per capita, to the members of said Creek tribe of Indians; Provided, That this action shall be with the consent of both the Creek and the Seminole tribes of Indians.

Mr. WINDOM. In order to save time, as I understand the Committee on Indian Affairs have looked into this matter and express some doubts as to the expediency of adopting the amendment, I, with the consent of the Committee on Appropriations, will not press the amendment. I ask leave to withdraw it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I move that the Senate take a recess from five o'clock until half past seven o'clock this evening.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that we go right on till half past six rather than take a recess. We can perhaps finish this bill by five or half past five o'clock.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. This is not the only bill we have got. We have two or three other bills.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine that at five o'clock to-day the Senate take a recess until half past seven.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. I am constitutionally opposed to night sessions. I appeal to the Senator from Maine whether it would not be better for us to go on and let us see what progress we make in half an hour or so. The consequence will be then, in my judgment—

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Debate is not in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is not debatable.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. I fear that in the evening we shall be left without a quorum; there will be a division called, and we shall have to adjourn.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Debate is not in order.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I suppose nothing else will be in order this evening but to finish this bill and other appropriation bills from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No; we will take up nothing else.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The motion was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in lines 1302, 1303, and 1304, in the appropriation for the Shoshones and Bannacks, to strike out the following words:

(Estimated at eighteen hundred persons) at ten dollars each, (estimated as six hundred persons engaged in agriculture,) at twenty dollars each.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For Indians roaming and engaged in agriculture, as per ninth article of treaty of July 3, 1868.

So as to make the clause read:

For fifth of ten installments, for the purchase of such articles as may be considered proper by the Secretary of the Interior, for Indians roaming and engaged in agriculture, as per ninth article of treaty of July 3, 1868, $25,000.

The next amendment was after line 1517, in the appropriations for the Tabeguache, Muache, Capote, Weeminuche, Yampa, Grand River, and Uintah bands of Utes, to insert the following item:

For this amount, to be expended under the direction of the President in supplying said Indians with beef, mutton, wheat, flour, beans, and potatoes, as per twelfth article of same treaty, $25,000.

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the removal of the Los Pinos agency, in Colorado, from its present location and for the erection of proper buildings and establishment of an agency for the Weeminuche, Muache, and Capote bands of Ute Indians at some suitable point to be hereafter selected on the southern part of the Ute reservation, as provided in the agreement made by Felix R. Brunot, commissioner on the part of the United States, with certain Ute Indians in Colorado, and ratified by act of Congress approved April 29, 1874, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 1660, in the appropriation for the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in California, to insert the following item:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to supply a deficiency in the proceeds of the lands in the Round Valley Indian reservation, applicable for the payment of the improvements of settlers on said reservation, appraised in accordance with the act of March 3, 1873, entitled "An act to restore a part of the Round Valley Indian reservation, in California, to the public lands, and for other purposes," and to liquidate such claims on said reservation as shall be found valid by virtue of pre-emption or homestead entry, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1721, to increase the appropriation for "the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Oregon, including transportation of annuity goods and presents (where no special provision therefor is made by treaties) and for paying the expenses of the removal and subsistence of Indians in Oregon (not parties to any treaty) and for pay for necessary employees," from $40,000 to $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1751, before the word "transportation," to strike out the words "insurance and;" so as to read:

For transportation of annuities and the necessary expenses of the delivery of the annuities and provisions to the Indian tribes in Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Michigan, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1792, to increase the appropriation for the civilization and subsistence of Indians on the Malheur reservation from $35,000 to $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1811, to reduce the appropriation to defray the expenses of a general council of certain Indians in the Indian Territory from $5,000 to $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriation for the third of ten installments to be paid under the direction of the President to the Flathead Indians removed from the Bitter Root Valley to the Jocko reservation, in the Territory of Montana, to strike out the words "paid to," in line 1841, and insert the words "expended for the benefit of;" so that the proviso will read:

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended for the benefit of any Indian of said tribe who shall not have settled upon the Jocko reservation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 1843 to insert:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the expenses of the commission of citizens serving without compensation appointed by the President under the provisions of the fourth section of the act of April 10, 1869, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 1862 and 1863, in the clause appropriating $5,000 for the construction of a hospital at Round Valley reservation, California, to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That this amount shall be taken from the incidental fund of California.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 2, line 3, after "Indians" to strike out "while" and insert "or;" before "band" to strike out "such" and insert "any;" and after "band," in line 4, to strike out "is" and insert "while;" so that the section will read:

SEC. 2. That none of the appropriations herein made, or of any appropriations made for the Indian service, shall be paid to any band of Indians or any portion of any band while at war with the United States or with the white citizens of any of the States or Territories.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 3, line 2, before the words "provided that" to strike out "hereby;" and after the words "provided that" to insert "hereafter;" so as to read:

That for the purpose of inducing Indians to labor and become self-supporting, it is provided that hereafter, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 3, line 14, after the word "tribe" to insert the words "or portion of tribe;" so as to read:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, by written order, except any particular tribe, or portion of tribe, from the operation of this provision, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 4, line 1, after "that" to insert "hereafter;" so as to read:

That hereafter, for the purpose of properly distributing the supplies, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 5, line 1, after "that" to insert "hereafter;" so as to read:

That hereafter not more than $6,000 shall be paid in any one year for salaries or compensation of employees at any one agency, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add to section 5 the following words:

And the provisions of this section shall apply to the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. I suggest that after the first word "that" of the sixth section the word "hereafter" should be inserted; so as to read:

That hereafter it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior, &c.

Mr. WINDOM. That amendment should be made.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was in section 7, line 12, before "dollars" to strike out "hundred" and insert "thousand;" so as to read:

And that no purchase of goods, supplies, or farming implements, or any other article whatsoever, the cost of which shall exceed $3,000, shall be paid for from the money appropriated by this act, unless the same shall have been previously advertised and contracted for as heretofore provided by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 8, line 1, after "that" to insert "hereafter;" so as to read:

That hereafter the Secretary of the Interior cause to be prepared and delivered to the Public Printer, on or before the 1st day of November in each year, a tabular statement of the items paid out up to that date of the appropriations made for the Indian Department for the fiscal year previously ending, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 10, line 1, after "that" to insert "hereafter;" so as to read:

That hereafter the security or securities, upon the bond required by the act of February 27, 1851, to be given by each Indian agent before entering upon the duties of his office, shall file a sworn statement with the Secretary of the Interior, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. In section 7, after the first word "that," the word hereafter should be inserted; so as to read:

That hereafter all appropriations, &c.

I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. On line 53, after the word "employés," I move to insert the words "except teachers;" so as to make the clause read:

And no incidental expenses shall be allowed for this agency—Sac and Fox, of Iowa—and no employés except teachers.

There is a provision for teachers, and the clause at present would exclude them though provision was made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. In the appropriation for the Navajoes I move to insert after the word "sheep," in line 875, the words "and to assist in putting in a crop of grain."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. In line 1800 I move to strike out the word "ten" and insert "thirty-five," making the appropriation $35,000. The clause will then read:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary to carry on the work of aiding and instructing the Indians of the central superintendency in the arts of civilization, in providing clothing, food, and lodging for the children attending school, in caring for the orphans, the sick, and the helpless, and in assisting the Indians generally to locate themselves in permanent homes and sustain themselves by the pursuits of civilized life, $35,000.

I offer this amendment by the direction of the Committee on Appropriations. It was reserved for consideration when the committee reported the bill. The amount now is for schools in the central superintendency, $10,000. They had $40,000 last year and a larger amount in previous years. The committee recommend $35,000 for this year, and that will not entirely cover it.

Mr. INGALLS. I believe that amendment was submitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs for their consideration; and if I violate none of the proprieties of that committee, I believe I am authorized to state it was unanimously rejected.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator will allow me to say that these letters came up from that committee; but was it not the proposition to divert or disburse certain funds under treaty?

Mr. INGALLS. I think not.

Mr. WINDOM. I so understood.

Mr. INGALLS. My impression is that the amendment was submitted to that committee, increasing the appropriation for these purposes from the sum of $10,000 to $40,000. The objects of this appropriation are of a very indefinite and general character, consisting of "aiding and instructing the Indians of the central superintendency in the arts of civilization, in providing clothing, food, and lodging for the children attending school, in caring for the orphans, the sick, and the helpless, and in assisting the Indians generally to locate themselves in permanent homes and sustain themselves by the pursuits of civilized life."

It is my impression that the sum of $10,000 is as large an amount as the country can well afford to pay for these miscellaneous purposes. I hope the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will not prevail.

Mr. WINDOM. It is recommended by the Department. I will not discuss it.

Mr. BOGY. If in order, I move to strike out from line 1793 down to line 1800, inclusive, and I will explain very briefly why I do so.

I think it can be shown to the satisfaction of the Senate that the appropriations included here under the head of "miscellaneous" ought not to be made at all. Each tribe has a specific appropriation in this bill, either under treaty stipulations or by a voluntary amount appropriated for each tribe within the limits of the United States. In addition to these appropriations for each tribe of Indians, which amount to millions, here is another appropriation of the loosest kind imaginable:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary—

And remember the full amount will be found to be necessary—to carry on the work of aiding and instructing the Indians of the central superintendency in the arts of civilization, &c.

To aid in the arts of civilization! In addition to specific appropriations for each tribe of Indians, you put at the disposal of the officers of the Government this large sum of money without any definite application whatsoever.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to me? I desire to make a motion before five o'clock.

Mr. BOGY. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. It is quite apparent, I think, that this bill may be finished in about half an hour, and it is also well understood that it is a very stormy day and we shall be quite unlikely to get a quorum here in the evening. I suggest therefore the propriety of rescinding the order by which a recess was ordered to be taken at five o'clock.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. There is not the slightest possibility that that can be done, and then we have other bills which we want to go on with.

Mr. SARGENT. We might postpone the recess until half past five and see if we can finish the bill by that time.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I will not insist on a motion if the chairman of the committee does not approve it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I hope the Senator will not press it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Very well.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me one word?

Mr. BOGY. Of course.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. As I understood, it was the understanding of the Senate that after the recess we were to take up no other bill but this one.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Appropriation bills.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. But no other appropriation bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. None but appropriation bills.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. I understood we were to take up no other appropriation bill but this one. That is the understanding of gentlemen who have gone out of the Chamber now.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Is there any question before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the Senator from Missouri give way to me a minute?

Mr. BOGY. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS. I would like to have the attention of the Senator from Maine, the chairman of the committee. It is suggested by a number of Senators around me here that they are willing and desirous to keep the Senate in session until we finish this bill, if it takes till six o'clock or whatever the hour may be, and then adjourn until to-morrow at eleven o'clock. I hope that suggestion will meet the approbation of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. There are certainly two other bills that might be passed without inconvenience to anybody if we get through with this bill. We ought to pass this bill and two other bills by all means. We can do it, but we cannot pass this bill before the hour for the recess or in any short time.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I hope we will all do just what the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations wants. That is the way to get through with these bills.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think we had better let the matter stand. There will be no disposition to press things unreasonably.

Mr. BOGY. I have moved to strike out the words in line 1793 down to line 1800, inclusive, because this appropriation is so vague, so indefinite, that the money cannot be judiciously applied. I would furthermore say that this practice of making a miscellaneous appropriation is of modern growth, as I understand. It will be remembered that there are specific appropriations for every tribe of Indians, as I said a moment ago, appropriations under treaty stipulation or as a gratuity by the Government. Each tribe has such appropriations. In addition to that, this clause would place in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior the sum of $10,000, which I believe the Senator from Minnesota proposes to increase to a larger sum, to aid in civilizing Indians, providing clothing and food and lodging for the children attending school. Are we to clothe and to feed those Indians while they are attending school? Appropriations are made for school purposes, but it is not the intention of the Government to clothe the children.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say a word in reference to the amendment.

Mr. BOGY. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri has occupied his five minutes, including the time in which he was interrupted.

Mr. BOGY. I have occupied five minutes, counting in that way, but my friends have taken four out of my five minutes in replication. It has been five minutes since I got up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the Senator from Missouri will be allowed to proceed.

Mr. BOGY. I move to strike out in line 1782 the word "civilization." I have no disposition to detain the Senate. My only object is to bring these views before the mind of the Senate. I am not hostile to the bill. I have no object to accomplish but one for the pub-lie good, but I do know, I am perfectly satisfied, that this appropriation should not be made. It is not the intention of this Government to clothe and feed Indian children while they are attending school. There is no appropriation made for schools except under treaty stipulations, and the amount in every case is very large, much larger for Indian children than for white children. I therefore hope that this clause will be stricken out.

But not only is the money to be used in this way for children attending school, but also—

In caring for the orphans, the sick, and the helpless, and in assisting the Indians generally to locate themselves in permanent homes, &c.

The sum is too small by more than $100,000. If you attempt to remove Indians from one place to another, you cannot do it for $10,000. If you attempt to feed children where they attend school, you cannot do it with $10,000, nor can you clothe them, and the whole thing is a perfect farce. I am opposed to any such measure.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to prevent a misapprehension in reference to the action of the Committee on Indian Affairs with regard to this clause. The amount appropriated under this paragraph last year was nearly $50,000, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and those having charge of the Indians in this superintendency desire the same sum this year. It was at first suggested that this sum should be taken out of the annuities of the Indians in this superintendency, and the Committee on Appropriations weighed the question whether that should be done unless with the sanction of the Committee on Indian Affairs. That question was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. In considering it, as a matter of course we had to consider the propriety of an additional appropriation, and, as suggested by the Senator from Kansas, the Committee on Indian Affairs I believe did decide that this sum ought not to be appropriated. But the Committee on Appropriations believe that this sum ought to be appropriated. It has been appropriated for several years. A number of schools are in existence in this superintendency and ought to be maintained. The whole business of taking care of Indians in this superintendency is under charge of the Society of Friends, which society I believe may be considered as especially friendly to the Indian tribes, and I have no doubt that whatever sum is appropriated here will be faithfully applied to the improvement of the Indians within that Territory to the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. SARGENT in the chair.) Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CAMERON. I ask the Senator to yield to me a moment to pass a little bill to put some head-stones in a soldiers' grave-yard. I ask the Senate to postpone this business for a moment until I present it. I have been trying a long while to do it. It is a bill of the House.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Informally?

Mr. CAMERON. Informally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read House bill No. 4631, in relation to a national cemetery at York, Pennsylvania.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that may be read again for information.

Mr. CAMERON. I will tell the Senator what it is in a moment. The monument society at the town of York, in Pennsylvania, has built a house and made a fence around the graves of the soldiers of the United States there, and they ask only for the Government to put head-stones to each of these graves.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 4816) to authorize the consolidation of the Auburn City National Bank and the First National Bank of Auburn, New York;

A bill (H. R. No. 4385) to regulate the issue of artificial limbs to disabled soldiers, seamen, and others, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 4813) to authorize the removal of the bronze fountain by Rhinehart from the lobby of the city post-office; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4814) to relieve Charles H. Smith, M. D., of Richmond, Virginia, and James M. Hawes, of Covington, Kentucky, of all political disabilities.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. No. 625) for the relief of Lemuel D. Evans, late collector of internal revenue for the fourth district of Texas;

A bill (S. No. 836) granting a pension to William Ira Mayfield;

A bill (S. No. 862) granting a pension to Margaret S. Hastings;

A bill (S. No. 1070) granting a pension to Margaret C. Wells;

A bill (S. No. 1080) granting a pension to J. W. Caldwell, of Marshall County, Indiana;

A bill (S. No. 1154) granting a pension to William Williams;

A bill (S. No. 1205) restoring to the pension-roll the name of Lydia A. Church, minor daughter of Nathaniel G. Church; and

A bill (S. No. 1213) granting a pension to Nathan Upham.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of five having arrived, the Senate will, according to order, take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolutions from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

The bill (H. R. No. 4385) to regulate the issue of artificial limbs to disabled soldiers and others, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. No. 4813) to authorize the removal of the bronze fountain by Rhinehart from the lobby of the city post-office—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The bill (H. R. No. 4816) to authorize the consolidation of the Auburn City National Bank and the First National Bank of Auburn, New York—to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (H. R. No. 4814) to relieve Charles H. Smith, M. D., of Richmond, Virginia, and James M. Hawes, of Covington, Kentucky, of all political disabilities—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. No. 4753) removing the political disabilities of O. R. Singleton, of Mississippi—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 157) authorizing the acceptance by Captain C. H. Wells, of the United States Navy, of the cross of the Legion of Honor, conferred upon him by the President of the French Republic—to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (H. R. No. 4714) for the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River was read twice by its title.

Mr. WEST. That bill should go to the Committee on Transportation Routes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DAVIS. The Committee on Transportation Routes have that question under consideration.

Mr. WEST. There have been several bills, and there is one on the Calendar now, relating to the Mississippi River, all of which have been considered and acted upon by the Committee on Transportation. It seems to me that this bill ought to take that reference.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I think we had better wait until the chairman of the Committee on Commerce comes in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. SARGENT in the chair.) The bill will be laid aside for the present.

Mr. WEST subsequently said: I ask to take up House bill No. 4714 for reference which was laid over a few minutes ago. I move its reference to the Committee on Transportation. That committee considered that subject elaborately and at large last winter, and it is the proper reference.

Mr. BOGY. I hope the bill will be referred to the Committee on Transportation Routes. It is known as the jettee bill, and it has been considered by a committee raised for that purpose since the last session of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved by the Senator from Louisiana that the bill be referred to the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Sea-board.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SPRAGUE presented the petition of Mrs. Eliza Potter, praying compensation for moneys expended by her during the late war in caring for sick and wounded soldiers of the United States Army confined in rebel prisons at Charleston and Columbia, South Carolina; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom were referred the bill (S. No. 829) for the relief of Henry Warren, of Texas, and the papers concerning the claim of Henry Warren for the loss of his property destroyed by the Comanche Indians, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, and that they be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

Under the requirements of section 6 of the "Act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1874, I have the honor to submit herewith the report of the board of audit upon the amount equitably chargeable to the street-railroad companies, pursuant to the charters of said companies or the acts of Congress relating thereto, together with the reasons therefor.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION. February 19, 1875.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the message be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, in answer to a resolution of the Senate of the 17th instant, transmitting a copy of the report of the Government directors of the Union Pacific Railroad Company for 1874; which was referred to the Committee on Railroads, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the commissioners of the District of Columbia, giving reasons why the bill (H. R. No. 4727) explanatory of the act of June 20, 1874, should not be passed by the Senate; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SPRAGUE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1332) for the relief of Mrs. Eliza Potter; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

FREE YOUNG MEN'S BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. SARGENT in the chair.) The business before the Senate is the Indian appropriation bill. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate that the pending bill may be laid aside informally that I may take up and secure the passage of a little bill reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia some time ago allowing the Young Men's Benevolent Association for colored people here to sell a portion of the lands belonging to them now used for sanitary purposes in order that they may devote the proceeds for the improvement of the new cemetery grounds they have bought. I think there will be no objection to passing the bill now.

Mr. WINDOM. I will not object to that, but I give notice that I will object to anything else except the bill of my friend from Virginia, [Mr. LEWIS,] as to which I promised last night that if he would not press it then, I would yield to him to-day; and in yielding to this I yield on condition that it will not lead to any debate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1222) to authorize the trustees of the Free Young Men's Benevolent Association to sell and convey square numbered 272, in the city of Washington.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I desire to offer an amendment suggested by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.] I move to insert at the end of the bill:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to create any claim against the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. To exclude any possible claim if the title does not turn out to be good.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNSETTLED ACCOUNTS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. LEWIS. I move to take up House bill No. 4727, explanatory of the act passed June 20, 1874. The bill has passed the House, and it is a simple act of justice to a deserving man who has swept the streets here for twelve months and has not been paid. It is a bill explanatory of a previous law, and as it is simply an act of justice I suppose there can be no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not object, if it is left liable to objection in any of its stages. It may be taken up subject to a call for the regular order at any time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 4727) explanatory of the act passed June 20, 1874.

The bill declares that it was the true intent and meaning of the act passed June 20, 1874, for the government of the District of Columbia, that the sweeping, cleaning, and removing all refuse and filthy accumulations in the streets, alleys, and avenues of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and the repairs and cleaning of the sewers, are necessary municipal objects, which belong to the current expenses of the same, to be paid for in money as other ordinary municipal expenses; and the proper District authorities are directed to pay the parties that have heretofore performed this class of work from the treasury of the District, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, the amount and value of the work done since the passage of the act, with legal interest from the time the same fell due under the contract, but not till after their accounts have been approved and audited as the law directs.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the bill by striking out all before the word "the" in line 11, that part which refers to the meaning, and then I will state my reason for making the motion.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the following words:

That it was the true intent and meaning of the act passed June 20, 1874, for the government of the District of Columbia, that the sweeping, cleaning, and removing of all refuse and filthy accumulations in the streets, alleys, and avenues of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and the repairs and cleaning of the sewers, are necessary municipal objects, which belong to the current expenses of the same, to be paid for in money as other ordinary municipal expenses, and.

So as to read:

The proper District authorities are hereby directed to pay the parties that have heretofore performed this class of work, from the treasury of said District, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, the amount and value of said work done since the passage of the act, with legal interest from the time the same fell due under the contract, but not till after their accounts have been approved and audited as the law directs.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That will need another amendment. My object in moving the amendment which is to strike out the recital of what is said to have been the true intent and meaning of the act appointing commissioners for the District of Columbia, that is, that it was the true intent and meaning of that act that all obligations for current work, as the bill calls it, were intended to have been paid in money and not to be scaled or consolidated into bonds. I am not by any means sure that that was the true intent and meaning of that act, but I am perfectly willing that these gentlemen who are now since the passage of that act performing current work shall be paid in cash of course. So that I wish to leave the bill simply directing that since the passage of that act they shall be paid in cash, and that is all the bill proposes to do. It is only striking out the recital. If that be agreed to, then I will move to change the other language, so as to make it read in proper harmony.

Mr. LEWIS. I have no objection in the world to striking out that part of the bill except that it necessitates its going back to the House, which I think will endanger at least the passage of the bill. This work has been performed faithfully by this gentleman. I have examined the subject; it has been before our committee. He has performed this work faithfully, and he has been paying 12 per cent. a month for money in order to carry out his contract and to save his property from being sold. I have no objection in the world to striking out that part of the bill if it can be passed through the House in time, but it is absolute ruin to this man not to pass this bill, and it should be passed in justice to him.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Will the chairman of the District Committee mention who the person is to whom this money is to be paid?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Wright.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if he has had any correspondence with the commissioners of this District in relation to this claim.

Mr. LEWIS. No, sir; I have not.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Then I hope the bill will remain on the table until the correspondence is communicated. I have had some correspondence which leads me to suppose that the chairman of the committee would not press this bill. I shall have that correspondence to-morrow. I hope, therefore, no action will be had upon it at present.

Mr. LEWIS. I will just say that this is a House bill; it was discussed there—

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I understand it.

Mr. LEWIS. If the commissioners had any objection to it they ought to have made those objections known there. We have had it before our committee several times and several parties appeared before us in behalf of Mr. Wright, but no one of the commissioners, while they knew of it, was there. They have made no objection whatever, and I do not think it is an act of justice to Mr. Wright to lay the bill aside.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I hope the chairman of the District Committee will allow the bill to lie on the table until he has examined his files to see if there is not a communication from the commissioners of the District in relation to this claim.

Mr. LEWIS. There was no objection to it up to to-day, or up to a late hour this evening.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I understand there is a strong objection to the claim.

Mr. LEWIS. I have not heard it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. This is going on simply by general consent.

Mr. FLANAGAN. I ask unanimous consent to take up the motion to reconsider Senate bill No. 736, to change the boundaries of the eastern and western judicial districts of the State of Texas, and to fix the times and places of holding courts in the same. I do not think it will take two minutes, and I am very desirous to have the motion to reconsider disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a bill now pending.

Mr. LEWIS. I insist on a vote.

Mr. FLANAGAN. What bill; the appropriation bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill now pending presented by the Senator from Virginia, on which the pending question is the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I call for the regular order. I do not know anything about this bill, but I am informed it ought not to pass, and I am sure it ought not until we hear the objection of the commissioners.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order being called for—

Mr. LEWIS. I do not wish to press this bill if I can have any assurance that I can get it up in the morning hour to-morrow or any other time. I do not want to embarrass the Senate; I do not want to press anything through the Senate without full investigation. We had this matter before us, and I investigated it thoroughly; and it is an outrage upon Mr. Wright that he has not been paid.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia withdraw the bill?

Mr. LEWIS. I withdraw it.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3821) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes; the question being on the amendment of Mr. WINDOM, in line 1800, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "thirty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry on the work of aiding and instructing the Indians of the central superintendency in the arts of civilization, in providing clothing, food, and lodging for the children attending school, in caring for the orphans, the sick, and the helpless, and in assisting the Indians generally to locate themselves in permanent homes and sustain themselves by the pursuits of civilized life, $35,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOGY] moved to strike out the clause from line 1793 to line 1800, inclusive. The first question will be on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota to perfect the clause.

Mr. WINDOM. This amendment was under consideration in the committee, but was postponed for further investigation with the understanding that it should be reported to the Senate by the committee should it be found necessary in their judgment to do so. The Department of the Interior recommend $50,000 for this purpose. It is a continuation of the provisions heretofore made for the central superintendency under the control and management of the Society of Friends. The schools have been conducted for several years very successfully, and the committee believe that it is important to continue them. The reports from them show evidences that they are doing a great deal of good. There are in that superintendency thirteen boarding-schools, containing six hundred and eighty-eight pupils, who are boarded, clothed, and cared for by the Society of Friends; and this is the only fund they have for that purpose. We appropriated in 1870 $60,000; in 1871, $40,000; in 1874, $44,480; and I propose now in this bill to appropriate $35,000—$9,480 less than last year. The fund is not used for the Sacs and Foxes or Osage Indians, who have ample funds of their own to support their schools.

I believe that this matter is important; and having stated the main facts, I hope further time will not be consumed. It is recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and by the Secretary of the Interior, and is urged strongly by the Society of Friends, who have the schools in charge.

Mr. INGALLS. To show the value of the statement made by the Senator from Minnesota as to the purposes for which these funds are to be employed, it is only necessary to say that the subject which he mentions is not even indirectly alluded to in the clause which provides for the appropriation of money. It declares that this money is for the purpose of—

Aiding and instructing the Indians of the central superintendency in the arts of civilization, in providing clothing, food, and lodging for the children attending school, in caring for the orphans, the sick, and the helpless, and in assisting the Indians generally to locate themselves in permanent homes and sustain themselves by the pursuits of civilized life.

If the purpose of this money is what the Senator from Minnesota states it to be why is the section worded as it is? Why are we left to suppose that the object for which this ten thousand or thirty-five thousand or forty thousand dollars is to be used is for sustaining a school system that is already in operation when that subject is not even mentioned in the section?

As another illustration of the remarkable character of this provision that is now sought for, I will state that two of the confidential employés of the central superintendency came to me just after the adjournment of the Senate this afternoon and told me the object of this appropriation was to provide subsistence for the destitute Indians in that superintendency, and they begged me to withhold my opposition, upon the ground that it was an act of pure benevolence to the Indians who were in danger of starvation. When these doctors disagree, who is to decide whether it is for the purpose of keeping up a system of schools or whether it is for the purpose of being expended in this incoherent and nebulous sentimentality that in my judgment characterizes too much of this Indian business?

I object to the appropriation because there is no reason shown for it, because the grounds upon which it is asked for are so conflicting and contradictory, and beyond that because it proposes to allow the money to be distributed at the unlimited discretion of the superintendent of Indian affairs without any control whatever on the part of Congress. He can devote this $10,000 as the clause now stands, or this $35,000 as the amendment is, to any object that he may see fit to expend it for—chromos, hoop-skirts, tooth-brushes, anything that in his judgment may be necessary to promote the advance of the Indians in the arts of civilization. It is very strange that this section should have come from the House of Representatives, having passed through the Committee on Appropriations in that body and then through the Committee on Appropriations in this body, left standing at the sum of $10,000, and that some new light should suddenly have dawned upon the Committee on Appropriations that now requires it to be advanced to $40,000. I trust the appropriation will not be enlarged.

Mr. WINDOM. After the very courteous and parliamentary language of the Senator from Kansas, I will say a word to show the value of the remarks he makes upon this subject. I will simply quote the fact that he says the schools are not mentioned at all.

Mr. INGALLS. I said the school system was not referred to.

Mr. WINDOM. And here stands distinctly in this sentence, "and lodging for the children attending school," &c. The Senator objects to the form of this proposition as it came from the House. It is precisely the form which was followed last year, and under that the fund of $40,000 appropriated last year was devoted to schools. The statement I made when on the floor before was based upon a statement by the superintendent in charge of these schools, a gentleman of high character and standing. Unless the Senator from Kansas can be a little more careful in his statements, I think the remarks made by this superintendent are worth quite as much as those made by the honorable Senator. I have no feeling about this matter at all. I believe it is proper to continue these schools. I hope they may be continued, but if the Senate chooses to vote it down I have no sort of feeling about it.

Mr. BOGY. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. The expenses of the Indian Bureau have in the course of not a great many years increased from less than one and a half million dollars to upward of seven millions, and the number of Indians now is not one-fourth what it was when the expenditure was a million and a half of dollars or a little less. These appropriations have become so large simply owing to the wild and reckless manner of making the appropriations. The Senator from Minnesota says that the intention of this appropriation is that the money shall be applied to schools within the central superintendency. The bill itself says no such thing; and if they are not authorized to expend it for schools by the law, it would be a misappropriation. But according to his own statement there has been expended in that superintendency for the last two or three years upward of $200,000 for educating Indians; and I venture to say that there is not one of these Indians to-day who can either write his name or spell "baker." And yet the sum of $200,000 has been expended in the last two or three years, and in one year the large sum of $60,000 was expended.

Mr. President, it is time that this wild, reckless mode of expending the money of this nation should be checked. I am not opposed to the system; I do not rise here from a spirit of opposition to it; I rise to make these remarks because I do know that this money is wasted and is not needed, and the very fact stated by the Senator from Minnesota shows it. This appropriation is to aid Indians in civilization and for food, clothing, and lodging for children's schools, and he says it is intended for the purpose of educating them. If that is the object, why does it not say so? In point of fact, the money appropriated to educate Indians within that superintendency is under different heads, already more than abundant; but as to the Cheyennes and Arapahoes, to speak of education is a misapplication of the term. Cheyennes and Arapahoes and Comanches and Kiowas and Indians of that character are in that superintendency; these are the Indians for whom we have spent $200,000 in a few years; these are the Indians to be educated. If they could be educated, reclaimed from barbarism, and brought to civilization and religion, I would not object to any amount that might be necessary for that object; but I do know that this is not necessary. The whole law in this respect is wrong. There is no reason why an amount of money should be placed at the discretion of any of these parties, however good they may be, and I am not charging them with improper conduct. If you do not make the appropriations for Indian service specific, you will go on year after year spending millions and millions of money and effecting no good purpose whatever. The reason why to-day the Indians are cavorting and playing high, low, jack, and the game on the western frontier is because the appropriations made are too large. This fact has invited a horde of wild speculators, of bad men, of reckless men who have gone out there to make money off these Indian appropriations, and they are making it from day to day, and they are demoralizing the Indians, and the Indians themselves are prevented from being self-sustaining because you appropriate large sums of money to sustain them and encourage them in idleness. I say it would be the best thing for this nation if all these appropriations were stopped. If we went even to the extent of not voting one cent for the Indians it would be the best thing for the Indians.

I submit these remarks to the Senate as a test. If the Senate of the United States is prepared to vote for this amendment, it is perfectly idle to attempt to check the large amounts which are annually appropriated for the Indian service. It cannot be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. WRIGHT. I wish to say just one word upon this amendment. As a rule I have been opposed and I am opposed yet to increasing the appropriations as recommended by committees, but I think there are several reasons in favor of this proposition. If the rule or the practice asserted by the Senator from Missouri be correct, then we should stop all appropriations looking to the civilization and education of the Indians. He says these appropriations only tend to their demoralization. If this is true to the extent stated, then we should not only withhold this appropriation but all appropriations looking in the same direction. It is proposed by the committee in this instance to increase this appropriation to $35,000. I shall vote for it for several reasons.

In the first place it is not fair to state the proposition that the Committee on Appropriations failed to include this in their recommendations. I understand that this was withheld for the reason that they wanted to examine the subject further; and upon such subsequent examination they concluded to recommend it, and it is now recommended by the committee. I shall vote for it because heretofore we have had an appropriation larger than this and I have heard no suggestion that it has been improperly expended. In the next place I shall vote for it because it is recommended by the committee. In the next place I shall vote for it because it is recommended by the superintendent of Indian affairs. I shall vote for it because it is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior. I shall vote for it because the Friends who have the superintendency in charge have perhaps been more faithful and more devoted to the work in connection with the education and civilization of the Indians than any other denomination that has had charge of Indians. From them I understand that this increase of appropriation is necessary and can be used to the interest and to the advantage of these Indians. I shall vote for it, as I already said, because I have heard no suggestion made that the appropriations heretofore have been improperly expended.

And now, Mr. President, if on the recommendation of the Superintendent of Indian Affairs, the Secretary of the Interior, the Committee on Appropriations, with no suggestion that larger appropriations have been improperly expended, a smaller appropriation is proposed, the Senate should hesitate because it is suggested by Senators that they fear there is something wrong about this matter, then we had just as well abandon the recommendations of the Department and the recommendations of the committee and take the suggestions of Senators that they think there is something wrong.

Mr. BOGY. I will say that according to that theory we might as well take the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner in bulk and say nothing more about it, but let them make the appropriations as they are really doing virtually in all these Indian matters. I do say that out of the money heretofore appropriated not an Indian has ever been educated or reclaimed from barbarism—not one—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is aware that it is proceeding under the five-minute rule, and the time of the Senator from Missouri has expired.

Mr. WRIGHT. I only wish to suggest to my friend from Missouri, in answer to what he has said, that while according to his opinion all due weight, yet I am to determine whether I shall be influenced alone by his opinion that this is wrong or shall consult all the authorities I have on the subject whose recommendation is uniform.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. This opposition involves this question: whether we will abandon any attempt to aid these fugitive bands, these bands which we are gathering into the Indian country. That is really the point. Since 1867, having declared then that we would make no more treaties with the Indians, we have attempted to aid them in other ways. Having declared that we would make no more treaties with these Indians and having invaded their country at all points and driven them on to reservations, we have said and given the faith of the nation that if they would attempt to adopt the modes of civilization, we would aid them in it. This is one of the aids that we have promised. This is one of the things that we have been doing these last four years. The question is now, will you change that policy? Do we mean to stop right here? My honorable friend from Missouri says there never was an Indian educated. Is that so?

Mr. BOGY. Not a Comanche or Kiowa, or any of those Indians within that superintendency.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. How many educated Indians are there about us here soliciting one thing and another, influencing the legislation of this Chamber? How many men who would do credit to any of us appear before our committees and advocate their own rights and interests; accomplished men too? What an idea, that an Indian cannot be educated! It is too late in the day for that. And have we no duty in regard to this perishing race of men who once inhabited this continent and who, by our own theory, once held it in possession and whose possessory rights were sacred everywhere. Now that they are perishing and fast fading out, shall we deny to them all the appliances of civilization?

In this central superintendency there are some eight hundred scholars being taught. They are of fugitive bands. They are not civilized Indians living in the Indian Territory, but they are such Indians as we have been forcing into that limbo in the last twelve years, forcing out of Kansas to give civilization a free play. I am very sorry to hear my honorable friend from Kansas follow these poor Indians down into that Territory and deny them this boon. It is a very small thing that the nation can do for that people. The little we can do in this direction cannot be better done to any people than to those, and we owe it to them as we owe it to no other people on this continent in my judgment.

The Quakers or Friends have undertaken the care of this superintendency. They send their women, they send their men, they go and gather these children into schools, they clothe and feed and wash and attempt to educate them; and if they do nothing more than the former they are in the way of improvement, I submit to my honorable friend from Missouri.

Now, as enlightened as my honorable friend is in regard to the Indian policy in the main, I submit that this proposition of his is not quite worthy of him. This is not a new appropriation, I desire to have the Senate understand. It is simply a repetition of what we have been doing in the last four years, reduced to $10,000 by the House of Representatives, and the only reason we ask you now to make this amendment is that a question arose in the committee whether it was not worth while to charge this over against the annuities of these Indians. Upon examination it was found that was not the proper thing to do.

I hope, Mr. President, there will be no hesitation about this.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has already spoken five minutes.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the pending question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota to strike out "ten" and insert "thirty-five."

Mr. INGALLS. Is an amendment to that in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An amendment to that amendment is in order.

Mr. INGALLS. But I am not in order in speaking on that amendment itself?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No, sir.

Mr. INGALLS. I move then an amendment to strike out after the word "on," in line 1794, the words down to "the," in the same line, and to insert the words "schools among."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment would not be in order now. The amendment of the Senator from Minnesota is to strike out "ten" and insert "thirty-five."

Mr. INGALLS. Would it be in order to move to commit this amendment to the Committee on Indian Affairs?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That would not be in order.

Mr. INGALLS. Would it be in order to move to reduce the sum to $25,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That would be in order.

Mr. INGALLS. In that case I move to reduce the sum named by the Senator from Minnesota to $25,000, and upon that amendment I desire to say to the distinguished Senator from Maine that if he is so very much attached to the Indians and is so very desirous of bestowing upon them the blessings and benefits of education and making them all bachelors of arts and doctors of laws, I wish he would be kind enough to take them down into his own State of Maine.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. We have got our portion; we never drove them out.

Mr. INGALLS. Let him locate them upon the waste places by the Androscoggin or by the Penobscot or at the foot of Mount Katahdin. He can take them all and welcome. So far as we of the West are concerned, we have no desire for their presence, and would very much prefer to have philanthropy exercised toward them in the home of their immediate and particular friends.

And in regard to my friend from Iowa who has alluded to the singular self-sacrifice and self-denial of the able and learned and wise teachers who are instructing these young barbarians and savages, I can say that I fully and cordially indorse all that he has said about these men because they all come from Iowa, and I know that every man who comes from Iowa is entitled to all the eulogy that can be pronounced upon him.

But seriously, sir, the Senator from Minnesota has stated that there are in that superintendency now in operation thirteen schools, having an aggregate of six hundred and eighty papooses. They ask as an appropriation to carry on this magnificent system of education the sum of $35,000, which is an aggregate of nearly $3,000 to each one of these schools. Now, as a matter of economy, as a matter of prudence, as a matter of good government, can any man who is familiar with the common-school system of New England or of this country generally say that that is not extravagant, that to pay $3,000 for carrying on a school that has twenty-five or thirty pupils is a fair or reasonable appropriation? Certainly the very statement of the amount that is asked, taken in connection with the allegation made by the Senator from Minnesota in regard to the number of these schools, is sufficient to show the Senate that it is entirely outside of reason and of good sense. I trust that if the appropriation is to be made at all it will be reduced down to the sum which was reported from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WINDOM. In reply, all I wish to say is that this sum feeds, clothes, and takes care of these pupils and keeps the buildings in repair, and I do not think it is a large sum. It only amounts to sixty dollars apiece for feeding, clothing, and boarding them, and teaching them throughout the year.

Mr. INGALLS. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota to increase the appropriation from $10,000 to $35,000.

Mr. BOGY. As I wish to make a test of this matter, I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOWE. I would not have said a word if the yeas and nays had not been called for, but as they have been, I want to say that I shall vote against this proposition, not because I am not willing to appropriate $35,000 to educate the children of those Indians down there; but if you are going to appropriate it for that purpose I want you to say so. This does not make any appropriation for any such purpose. The dedication of the money is so general as to allow the agents to do just what they please with it. If you want to educate children, give some money to educate them; but there is no specific purpose to which a dollar of this money is specifically dedicated.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 19, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Boutwell, Conover, Cragin, Edmunds, Fenton, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Sargent, Spencer, Washburn, West, Windom, and Wright—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Boggy, Chandler, Cooper, Dennis, Goldthwaite, Hager, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Johnston, Kelly, Lewis, McCreery, Merrimon, Norwood, Scott, Sprague, Stevenson, Stewart, Stockton, Thurman, and Tipton—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Bayard, Boreman, Brownlow, Cameron, Carpenter, Clayton, Conkling, Davis, Dorsey, Eaton, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Gilbert, Gordon, Hamilton of Maryland, Harvey, Jones, Logan, Morton, Oglesby, Patterson, Pease, Pratt, Ramsey, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Schurz, Sherman, and Wadleigh—32.

So the amendment of Mr. WINDOM was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOGGY] to strike out the entire paragraph.

Mr. THURMAN. We have had a statement that the reports show flourishing schools in this central superintendency. I have heard it said that these reports are not very reliable on the subject of schools among the Indians. I would be glad if some Senator representing a State in which Indians are found, in respect to whom there are educational reports, would say whether or not these reports are reliable according to his own information. I think that at a former session we had some statement made by the Senator from Nevada on my right [Mr. STEWART] in respect to his own State that was very different from the statements made in the reports, and I would be glad to know from him or any other Senator how much reliance is to be placed upon these reports.

Mr. STEWART. This is not in my State and I do not know the facts, but I shall have a word to say when it comes to Nevada about a report I have before me which I think is a pure fiction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. INGALLS. I have no objection to a reasonable appropriation being made for educational purposes among these Indians, if I can be satisfied that the funds so appropriated will be devoted to that object. Upon the statement of the Senator from Minnesota as to the number of schools in operation there and the number of pupils in attendance, with the desire to confine the appropriation to educational purposes, I move to amend the paragraph so that it will read:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary to carry on schools among the Indians of the central superintendency, $10,000.

Mr. BOGGY. There are already in this bill under different heads ample appropriations for educational purposes for all these tribes. These Indians are away down in the Indian country at Fort Sill. Each one of these tribes has ample appropriations for educational purposes. This is an addition to all other provisions for that purpose, and it is entirely unnecessary, so unnecessary for the purposes of education that the framers of the bill themselves did not put it down for that purpose. It is not intended to use it for the purposes of education. The words do not have that object; nor is the intention to use it for that purpose. The intention is to use it for purposes that are indefinable, to aid in civilizing Indians, providing clothing, food, and things of that kind to what extent you cannot tell; and who is to distribute the money? It is left to the discretion of these men to do as they please with the money of this Government. I repeat that there are already ample appropriations for education for each one of the tribes included within this superintendency.

Mr. WINDOM. As the best evidence I can give of my desire that it shall be used for that purpose, I hope the Senator will accept the amendment offered by the honorable Senator from Kansas. I think the clause means precisely the same thing as it is in the bill, but I will not object to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS.]

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to strike out the clause as amended.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask to make an amendment to perfect the clause before that is done. I move now to make the sum $30,000 instead of $10,000. That will amount to a little over forty dollars each for the children, as little as can be got along with, I think.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I hope that this amendment will prevail. These schools are established, and I understand the report shows that there was expended last year about fifty-one dollars a head for six hundred and eighty-eight children. This is about forty dollars a head for that number of children. We may call the Indians murderers and marauders, and we may have our prejudices excited against them; but the truth is, after we have said all that, we owe them a debt which will never be paid, and it becomes the Congress of this nation to provide for their civilization. We have their lands, we have their country; we have neither taught them how to live nor how to die; and it becomes this Congress to do what they can toward giving them civilization, and if it took ten dollars to make one dollar effectual, with all my heart I would vote for the effectuation of it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Do I understand the Senator from New Jersey to say that there are six hundred and eighty-eight of these Indians?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Six hundred and eighty-eight children.

Mr. SHERMAN. And you propose to appropriate $40,000 to educate them?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Thirty thousand dollars.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would like to ask my friend from New Jersey to apply that to the white people of the United States and see how far in excess that would be of any appropriation made by the people of any State in this Union for the education of children. For instance in Ohio, where I believe we spend $6,000,000 a year, and that is a very large sum, we have twelve hundred thousand children to educate. We have more than that number between the school ages. Now, if you apply this same rule of forty dollars a head to the children of all the Indian tribes, how much would it be, in the name of Heaven?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Senator will allow me to ask him how much it would be if you fed and clothed your children at the same time?

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me go a little further—

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I want to know of the Senator from Ohio whether his argument would not be just as good to say that if you make appropriations every year to support Indians, why should you not make appropriations to educate and support the people of Ohio?

Mr. SHERMAN. We have in this bill between five and six millions to support the Indians. Now, if we are to educate the Indian children at the rate of forty dollars a head, instead of five or six millions we ought to appropriate—there must be at least one hundred thousand Indians to be educated at forty dollars a head; the Senator can compute it—we ought to appropriate $4,000,000 more. Now, there ought to be a limit even to expenditures by the Indian Department. I am willing to do everything that is reasonable, but at the same time the very amount stated by the Senator surprises me—forty dollars a head to be appropriated for the education of six hundred Indian children!

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That was not the statement. It was forty dollars a head for the education, clothing, and support of these Indian children.

Mr. SHERMAN. Ah, but this whole bill is full of appropriations for the education, support, and maintenance of Indians. They have their annuities. They have ample provision made for their support and maintenance. Now, to add to that a school fund at the rate of forty dollars a head, it seems to me is going too far. I vote with pleasure for the $10,000. I think we ought to appropriate enough for these schools to furnish them teachers; we ought to appropriate enough perhaps to supply the teachers with such reasonable facilities as you would give to teachers of white children, and that is as far as we ought to go. We cannot pay the children for going to school; we cannot feed them for going, and we cannot clothe them while going, unless they are supported, clothed, and maintained out of other appropriations contained in the bill.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The argument of the Senator from Ohio, if it is good for anything, dispenses with all provision for the support of Indians. The Senator says that abundant appropriation is made for the support of these six hundred and eighty-eight children; but if you take six hundred and eighty-eight children and separate them and place them at school, of course the expense is greater, and they do not come under the chapter of appropriations which is made for these Indians. This thing has been tried; it is a successful undertaking; these schools are prosperous. I understand it is about $3,000 for each school with the appropriation at $40,000. It is an appropriation at forty dollars a head for the education, clothing, and support of these children.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. There is one view that is taken of this appropriation bill every year by a portion of us which shocks, it seems to me, all common sense, not to say common honesty, and that is the language my honorable friend from Ohio employs about this bill, that here are five or six millions appropriated for the support of Indians. Was there ever any such statement as that, in view of all the facts in this case, made to go out to the world?

We are providing out of the Treasury five or six millions, it is said, for the support of the Indians. Five or six millions, the pittance these men have got for a continent. That is all there is of it. It is just as much a matter of good faith for the people of this country, for the Congress of the United States to make these appropriations to fulfil our treaties as to pay your bonds, and infinitely worse to deny it, because we have been dealing with an impotent people, a people within our power altogether, and we have said as solemnly as we can say by language, "If you will surrender and go further off out of our way and give us your lands, we will do so and so," and every year when this question comes up we carp, and we hesitate, and we insist that they are paupers; that they are living on our bounty, on our charity; that we may, if we choose, appropriate nothing. No such bad faith ever did exist anywhere under the sun that ever I heard of as exists in this nation according to this theory. Throughout this appropriation bill treaties are cited; and where there are not treaties the appropriations are for what? The support of these men. No; the merest pittance in the world for the lands and possessions which we forced them from. We forced them off from their hunting grounds, and forced them on to reservations of our own appointment, and if they go off they pass the dead line, and may be shot as outlaws. That is our treatment; and then when we come in here and talk about making appropriations we have to go over this whole policy again, and Senators talk as if we are under no obligation, as if there was no faith whatever; that it is a mere gratuity, a mere act of charity and benevolence on our part that we appropriate anything at all, and we really make ourselves believe that we are a very charitable people if we do appropriate anything.

Mr. STEWART. If we are legally bound, if we owe the Indians what this continent is worth, that is a debt, and we ought to pay it. Let us pay it or give up the continent if that is the situation. If this is put on the ground of an obligation, we had better have the land we have taken from them appraised at once and settle our debt.

Mr. SHERMAN. With our improvements.

Mr. STEWART. Appraised with our improvements. It may be they would allow us a little for our betterments, but perhaps not. If we are under a debt and obligation to do something for them, all right, let us do it. Let us treat it in that light, settle this debt, and see if we have anything left. We shall not have anything left if we go on as we have been doing. If it is not debt, then what is our obligation? It is simply the obligation of humanity, the obligation to deal with them as a poor helpless class of people in a humane way for their own good and our good. I solemnly believe that we are committing a crime to humanity by almost every dollar we appropriate. I believe that we are multiplying thieves of white men by the demoralization of this service and the way it is conducted more rapidly than we are civilizing the Indians. I have no doubt of it. There is no means of determining what becomes of your money from any kind of a report that can be made here and the committees have no means of examining it. Any kind of a plausible story can be put. From my State the Indian agents seldom tell the truth; I do not know how it is in other States. There is not one grain of truth in a bushel of chaff, and has not been in the reports for a great number of years. I appeal to the people of my State and they will bear me out in saying that is the fact, and it is probably so elsewhere. Here we are appropriating millions. If it is competent for us to do this we should have checks and balances on these things and have some means of ascertaining what is done with the money. We should have more definite reports, and not so much indirection in this thing.

Senators talk about the obligation and the humanity of this system. Here in your midst and throughout the North there are hundreds of poor white people starving. You tax the washer-woman and give it to the Indian agent. All the Indian agents and contractors in the West are rich. You give it to them without making them account for it, and you pass on your streets here beggars at every crossing suffering. If, I say, it is a question of debt, let us mortgage everything and pay it. If it is a question of humanity and charity, then let us see who are suffering and who need help most and give it to those. I have heard it argued here on the ground of being cheaper than some other way; that it is cheaper to feed than to fight the Indians. I do not believe there is any necessity for feeding them or fighting them at all. I believe if the Indians were treated like men they would soon become accustomed to our laws and become industrious. If we treat them like paupers and feed them they will always be paupers, and we know from experience that these Indian appropriations must increase yearly as your Indian agents become more greedy and your paupers become more numerous.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Does my honorable friend know that there are $2,000,000 less appropriated on this very bill than there were four years ago under this policy?

Mr. STEWART. The other was under this policy, too.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The other was not.

Mr. STEWART. Senators talk about the Indians becoming self-sustaining. I would like to know where under this policy they have become self-sustaining.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will tell the Senator. The Creeks, Choctaws, Chickasaws, and Seminoles were as prosperous communities at the breaking out of the war in 1860 as there were in this country. They had been isolated since 1835. They were herders, they were agriculturists, they had schools, academies, and colleges; they had educated men.

Mr. STEWART. But I can tell the Senator that that did not come under this policy.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I admit it.

Mr. STEWART. Let us see some of the fruits of that policy. Those Indians lived and acquired those virtues before they were moved into an isolated position. Most of them were slave-holders, and an Indian is a pretty good hand at driving others about and making them work. A good many of them were half-breeds, and they learned these things in older States. Many of those we saw coming here as representatives were half-white people. They acquired their civilization among civilized men and not from Indian agents. They did not get it from the soup-bowls of Indian agents dealt out to them. They got it because they were brought in contact with white men in the South, and they acquired slaves and went out West. Most of them were slave-owners. That is the way they had their schools. They took their civilization from the whites from contact, and you will find some of them in the North partially civilized; but the idea of an Indian agent educating or civilizing anybody with his gang of common thieves is absurd; they do not do it. It is only where you have the influences of honest communities close at hand to overlook them that there is any civilization whatever. Civilization comes by contact with civilization, and not by contact with demoralization; it comes from contact with good communities; but when the Indians are taken away from good communities and good influences and left the prey of speculators, they will never become civilized in the world. I have traveled over that country; I have seen the operation of it, and I tell you if you are to civilize Indians you must bring them in contact with civilized communities and put them under good influences. If you could appropriate this money and bring them back into the older States and put them on farms in a place where they could imitate white men, then they would have a chance. They have no chance here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say only one word with reference to this appropriation bill. This is a very small sum compared with other things in this bill that have been passed over without a word of objection. This appropriation applies to all the Indians in the Indian Territory, and there is a large number of them, comprising various bands and tribes. They are under the control of the Society of Friends, which society, if I am correctly informed, appropriates from private charity large sums in addition to the appropriations made by the Government for the purpose of civilizing these Indians. If we propose to change this entire policy, let us do so; but here we have gathered together at these various agencies schools having from eighteen to sixty scholars, maintained and supported in part by the voluntary contributions of benevolent people in this country, maintained in part by annual appropriations under treaty stipulations made with these tribes, and now it is proposed to add this small sum to these appropriations for the purpose of maintaining these schools. This particular paragraph has been amended so that this sum shall apply solely to the education of these children.

Now, if this policy is wrong, if this money is improperly expended, let us call to account the people who are expending this money, but let us not withhold this small sum for the education of the children of these Indians who are gathered under this policy by the Society of Friends at various agencies, and are being educated by them.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I confess I was greatly shocked a moment ago by a remark that fell from the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. STEWART.] The Senator from Nevada is a leader of the republican party on this floor, and has been for a number of years, and yet he expressed the opinion, if I understood him correctly, a few minutes ago, that slavery among the Cherokees had been an instrument in their civilization. Mr. President, what are we coming to, when a great leader of the republican party openly in the Senate advocates slavery as an instrument of civilization?

Mr. STEWART rose.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, (to Mr. STEWART.) He has got you. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEWART. I do not think he has. I do not think he has got me at all. I do not want to get out of it at all. I am free to confess that there is no civilization so degraded as the pauper civilization created by a few hungry, thieving agents. There is nothing so demoralizing as that. Even slavery with all its degradations, with all its evil consequences, does produce and has produced better specimens of civilized men than Indian agents. We have before us some of the specimens that grew up under slavery, and I do think they are better educated and have a higher claim to civilization than the boss Indians who have been fed on food from Indian agencies and pretty nearly starved too. I think the products of slavery are better than the products of Indian agents, much as I am opposed to slavery; but it is an argument. My friend from Maine thinks that slavery is a very bad thing—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must remind the Senator that he has spoken five minutes.

Mr. STEWART. I trust I may be allowed to finish my sentence. My friend from Maine thinks that slavery is a very bad thing; but if he will show me as good a specimen of an Indian educated under his system as I can in this room now of an Indian educated under the system of slavery, I will give it up that slavery is worse than Indian agents. I think that Indian agents are worse than slavery in any form.

Mr. THURMAN. Let the amendment be reported. Senators do not understand it.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is on page 74, line 1800, to strike out "ten" and insert "thirty."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota. [Mr. WINDOM.]

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, I will vote "yea" when my name is called on this amendment; but I want to say to the Senate that when we come to another year and we are asked to make another appropriation for this purpose, I shall want to know then what has been done with this $30,000. I shall want to know something more than is stated in any report I ever saw from an Indian agent yet, to wit, that the schools have been generally prosperous, and that the progress has been all that has been expected, or that there is a certain number of pupils enrolled. I shall want the agents of these different tribes to say what the attendance has been and what the progress has been; whether they have found any children who have learned their letters, or learned to read, and give us something by which we can measure the advance. I think I will approve this one appropriation and see what comes of it.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 22, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Boreman, Clayton, Conover, Cragin, Davis, Dorsey, Edmunds, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Howe, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Sargent, Scott, Washburn, West, Windom, and Wright—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Boggy, Chandler, Cooper, Dennis, Eaton, Fenton, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Johnston, Kelly, Lewis, McCreery, Merrimon, Norwood, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Thurman, Tipton, and Wadleigh—26.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Bayard, Boutwell, Brownlow, Cameron, Carpenter, Conkling, Ferry of Connecticut, Gilbert, Harvey, Jones, Logan, Morton, Ogelsby, Patterson, Pease, Pratt, Ramsey, Ransom, Robertson, Schurz, Spencer, Stevenson, and Stockton—25.

So the amendment of Mr. WINDOM was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOGGY] to strike out the entire paragraph as amended.

The question being put, a division was called for, and the yeas were 14, and the nays 24.

Mr. BOGGY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MERRIMON. I am very sure that I am anxious to do anything to benefit the Indians and to civilize them, but I desire that a system shall be established by law for disbursing the money appropriated for such purposes. Now, as I understand from the Senator from Missouri, there is no law regulating the manner of educating the Indians. The Indian agent is charged with a certain fund, and he establishes a school when he will and where he will and he appoints such teachers as he pleases, and the accounts are general for the fund. If that is the way the money is expended, I am not willing to vote it for any such purpose. I would inquire of the Senator from Missouri if I am correct in my understanding of the manner in which this money is disbursed?

Mr. BOGGY. In accordance with the law as it now stands, it is to be disbursed by persons who give no bond, who hold no real official position, who are mere appointees of the Bureau, and are not responsible in the way of bond. I do not know that they even take an oath.

Mr. MERRIMON. And the party furnished with money in this way appoints the teachers?

Mr. BOGGY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MERRIMON. With that understanding I am not willing to vote a single dollar.

Mr. DAVIS. I am inclined to think that the paragraph should stand as it is. It appropriates but $10,000 as it now stands, and that is to be used expressly for school purposes. There are over six hundred Indians, as I understand, collected in these schools. This is the only fund that can be used or that they will have in any way for the education of those children.

Mr. MERRIMON. How is the money disbursed?

Mr. DAVIS. This particular fund is disbursed, as I understand, under the Society of Friends.

Mr. BOGGY. Look at the forty-eighth page and you will find a provision for the Sacs and Foxes belonging to this agency:

For the support of a school, as per fifth article of the treaty with said tribe of March 6, 1861, $200.

Then in another part of the bill is an appropriation for the education of the Quapaws, of $1,000, and an appropriation of $1,800 for schools for the Pottawatomies. There is a specific appropriation for each one of these tribes independent of this appropriation. It was not intended for schools.

Mr. MERRIMON. Is there any law regulating the manner of disbursement?

Mr. DAVIS. That I am not able to answer, for I am not familiar with that subject; but I wish to say to the Senator from Missouri that this is what is known as the central superintendency, and children are collected there from the Indian country.

Mr. BOGGY. The central superintendency is located in the town of Lawrence, which is in Kansas. That is the location. These Indians, as I said a while ago, are the Comanches, the Kiowas, and the Wichitas, who are scattered all the way down as far south as the Texas line, and there are none at Lawrence in Kansas.

Mr. DAVIS. I may be mistaken, but I think I am right. I stated that this is for the support of what is known as the central superintendency, and the children from a number of tribes that have no school fund whatever. I appeal to the gentleman who has the bill in charge to know whether I am correct that a portion of these Indians whom this $10,000 is intended to school have no educational fund whatever?

Mr. WINDOM. That is true, as I am informed.

Mr. BOGGY. Which tribe?

Mr. WINDOM. Quite a number of them.

Mr. BOGGY. We have treaty stipulations with the Quapaws, Cheyennes, Arapahoes, and all these Indians by which they get school moneys.

Mr. WINDOM. Quite a large number of Indians have been brought in from the plains of various tribes that are included. The Modocs are a portion of them.

Mr. BOGGY. The Modocs are not ready to receive any education and will not be for two years.

Mr. MERRIMON. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota how this money is disbursed, who is charged with it, how the schools are managed, who conducts them, and who teaches the Indians?

Mr. WINDOM. Disbursed by United States Indian agents who give bond for that purpose, under the direction of the Society of Friends. I do not propose to resist this, there is so much opposition to educating the Indians; but if it is carried to the extent of putting into the penitentiary the Quakers for trying to educate the Indians, I will stand here all night to resist that.

Mr. MERRIMON. I want to educate the Indians and civilize them, but I do not want money put in such shape that it will be stolen.

Mr. DAVIS. I will say a word to my friend from North Carolina who feels anxious to do justice if he knows where the money is going. The gentleman who had charge who is a Quaker—I have forgotten his name—was before the committee, and he gave such an account of the progress at this particular station of the education of the Indians that I became convinced that there ought to be a larger amount than $10,000 appropriated. I hope this small sum will be left in the bill and not stricken out.

Mr. HAGER. As I understand, the amendment as to schools was disagreed to.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. No; the amendment increasing the appropriation was disagreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paragraph was amended on motion of the Senator from Kansas so that it applies only for the maintenance of schools.

Mr. HAGER. If we strike out the whole paragraph we strike out the $10,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAGER. The schools then go out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This provision is stricken out.

Mr. HAGER. In that case I shall vote in the affirmative.

Mr. DAVIS. I understand if this section is stricken out, this particular station of six hundred children will have no educational fund whatever.

Mr. MERRIMON. They had better not have a dollar than for us to put it in such a shape that it will be stolen by faithless agents. I am not in favor of having any agency where the agent, whether responsible or otherwise, is governed by his own will; he should be governed by the law. If we are trying to educate the Indians, let us have a common-school educational system for them. I am willing to vote for such a system, but I am not willing to vote to give A B so much money to establish a school where he pleases and when he pleases, to appoint any teacher he pleases, and send any folks to that school that he pleases. I am opposed to that. It seems to me a mockery and a waste of money.

Mr. HAGER. I stated that I would vote for striking out the paragraph; but if I thought this appropriation would be in any way beneficial to the Indians, I would be perfectly willing to have it stand. I have never yet heard or had any information satisfactory to me that the Indians have been improved by any education extended to them by the Government. I do not believe myself that this appropriation will be of any benefit to the Indians. If I thought that it would, I should have no objection to letting it stand. I know that in California the efforts to educate the Indians have been a failure entirely, even as to the old Mission Indians, as to whom it was kept up for years daily. The natives of that State did not improve under the facilities thus offered them for obtaining education, and I have yet to learn that it has succeeded anywhere, taking the tribes in their natural savage state. I think, therefore, it is useless for us to undertake to civilize them or educate them when we find them in the wilderness. If it is done at all it is to be done by bringing them in contact with civilization much nearer than they are brought now. There is an antipathy between the Indian race and the white race which does not bring them together. The old Mission Indians of California have all fled to the mountains, left the valleys where they were formerly congregated around the missions and gone back to their natural savage life. That has been the result so far as I know everywhere except in the Indian Territory, so called, which is now a reservation where the Indians for a number of years have been sent, and perhaps they may have there attained some civilization. I have no doubt that is true.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOGGY] to strike out the paragraph.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 12, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Boggy, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Johnston, Kelly, Lewis, McCreery, Merrimon, Norwood, and Thurman—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Boreman, Chandler, Clayton, Conover, Cragin, Davis, Dorsey, Edmunds, Fenton, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Sargent, Saulsbury, Scott, Sherman, Sprague, Stevenson, Tipton, Washburn, West, Windom, and Wright—32.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Bayard, Boutwell, Brownlow, Cameron, Carpenter, Conkling, Cooper, Dennis, Eaton, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Gilbert, Jones, Logan, Morton, Ogelsby, Patterson, Pease, Pratt, Ramsey, Ransom, Robertson, Schurz, Spencer, Stewart, Stockton, and Wadleigh—29.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WINDOM. In line 4, I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to move after the word "appropriated" to insert "for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876." It is simply to limit the appropriations to the fiscal year.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. After the word "tribes," in line 7, I am instructed by the committee to move to insert:

And where the exigencies of the service require it, goods and supplies for the Indian service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, may be purchased and transported during the current fiscal year.

Mr. BOGY. I do not understand that. What is the object of it?

Mr. WINDOM. The first amendment offered limited the use of the money appropriated by the bill to the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876. This simply permits the Department to anticipate that year in their purchase so as to be able to ship their goods before the 30th of June next to such point as could not be reached if they were purchased after the 30th of June.

Mr. BOGY. If goods were purchased in the spring of 1876 they would get there in time.

Mr. WINDOM. It is the spring of 1875.

Mr. BOGY. This is an appropriation expiring in June, 1876. We are now in the early part of 1875, and it will be ample time to buy the goods wanted next year in the spring of 1876.

Mr. WINDOM. For the year ending June 30, 1876, you can hardly buy them in the spring of 1876.

Mr. BOGY. It will be ample time in the spring of 1876 to purchase the goods for that year.

Mr. WINDOM. And commence using them six months before! I will state again to the Senator from Missouri that this amendment enables the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to purchase goods prior to the 30th of June, 1875, if he chooses to do so, in order that they may be shipped to points where they will be needed in July, 1875, and so on anticipating.

Mr. THURMAN. I should like to inquire from the Senator from Minnesota whether, then, it would not be necessary to make the appropriation applicable before the 30th of June, 1875, or otherwise he would have to purchase on credit.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the effect of this amendment so far as those particular goods go. It is the same clause that has been put into the bills limited to a few objects ever since we have resorted to the practice of preventing any money being used out of an appropriation after the year had expired. Inasmuch as the fiscal year begins on the 1st of July, it is found necessary in various of these bills to authorize the Departments who are to use the money to anticipate the beginning of the year by making their arrangements to carry on operations immediately after the year begins. That is this amendment, and I confess I do not see objection to it. It has been in the other bills and found to work.

Mr. THURMAN. This is an appropriation for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1875, and ending June 30, 1876. Now the object of the amendment as I understand it is to enable the Secretary to make some of these purchases before June 30, 1875. Am I right in that?

Mr. WINDOM. Yes, sir.

Mr. THURMAN. Where is the money to come from to pay for them?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Out of this appropriation.

Mr. THURMAN. That is the very question I asked before. Is there anything in this bill that authorizes him to use this money before the 30th of June.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Unless it arises from this very clause which authorizes him to anticipate.

Mr. THURMAN. By implication simply.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; by implication.

Mr. THURMAN. It seems to me it would be very doubtful if it were left in that way.

Mr. STEVENSON. I move to amend the amendment by adding:

And each Indian agent shall keep a book of itemized expenditures of every kind, with a record of all the particulars of all contracts, together with the receipts of money from all sources, and have the books thus kept always open to inspection, and the said books to remain in the office at the respective reservations, and not to be removed from said reservations by said agents.

I have no doubt myself, from a service on the Indian Committee and the Committee on Appropriations, and from what I have heard, that great frauds are annually committed upon the Indians. I do not know that those frauds can always be prevented, but I offer this amendment in good faith as a preventive against the commission of frauds. These agents will then, at every reservation, be required to keep a book containing the itemized expenditure of every dollar, the particulars of every contract, how every dollar has been expended, how much has been received, and the Indians will have a right to look into that book, and it will be subject to public inspection. There can be no possible objection to it with honest men. I know some agents object to it. I know that some agents have not allowed such at any time to be inspected. I know that certain agents have taken the books away. There is therefore no mode by which the most outrageous frauds can be detected. I hope the Senator from Minnesota will accept the amendment I have offered.

Mr. WINDOM. I see no objection to it at present. The only objection is that this is hardly the proper place to put it. I think it had better come in another part of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I want to suggest to the Senator from Kentucky that I think if this amendment is made, which it is a very proper one to make, these books ought to be transmitted from one agent to another, so that there will be a record of each agency kept. I am told that it is the practice of Indian agents when they leave an agency to carry away with them all their records. I think the records ought to be preserved at the agency.

Mr. STEVENSON. That is the intention, that they shall never be removed from the reservation.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to make a suggestion to the Senator from Kentucky. I have read his amendment very carefully; it seems to me to be well drawn and proper, and I shall vote for it with great pleasure.

Mr. WINDOM. It ought to come at the end of section 10.

Mr. HAMLIN. The suggestion I want to make to the Senator from Kentucky is that his amendment should also contain a provision requiring copies of the charges and items entered upon that book to be transmitted to the Department here, so that we should see as well as others what have been the contracts and what have been the disbursements. We should not only provide that these books should be kept there, but that their contents should be sent here.

Mr. STEVENSON. I will withdraw the amendment for the present in order to offer it to come in hereafter at the end of section 10, where it will come in more properly. I will also add to the amendment that these books thus kept shall be handed over to the successor of each agent.

Mr. HAMLIN. The Senator, I think, has not listened to my suggestion.

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes, I heard you. I am perfectly willing to provide that transcripts of the books shall be sent to the Department here.

Mr. HAMLIN. Perfect transcripts of the accounts kept at the agency should be forwarded here quarterly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. I suggest now whether we must not amend this further. Here is an appropriation bill for expenses from a given time to a given time; and certainly if there were nothing in the bill that authorized purchases to be made beforehand and the money to be paid beforehand, not a dollar of it could be drawn from the Treasury until the beginning of the fiscal year covered by the bill. It ought not to be left to implication whether that money can be drawn beforehand.

Mr. WINDOM. Will it cure the defect if we add the words "and paid for" after "purchased?"

Mr. THURMAN. Those words would do.

Mr. WINDOM. I move then to insert the words "and paid for out of the appropriation hereby made" in the amendment just adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. If the committee have no further amendments, I have one that I wish to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Committee on Indian Affairs have amendments. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to that committee?

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly, if the Committee on Indian Affairs have amendments to propose.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Indian Affairs have instructed me to offer the following amendment to this bill:

On page 31, after line 736, insert:

For this amount, to pay the balance due the confederated tribes of the Kaskaskias, Peorias, Weas, and Piankeshaws, arising from the sale of trust lands by William Brindle, late receiver of public moneys at Leecompton, Kansas, $1,209.88.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that explained.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say in explanation of the amendment that by treaty we are bound to pay these Indians for their lands sold by the United States and keep the proceeds in trust for them. One of the receivers of public moneys at Leecompton failed to turn over to the United States a portion of the proceeds of these sales; in other words, became a defaulter. This is to place in this trust fund the amount of the deficit.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator kindly have the papers read which show the facts?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir; I send up the papers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The papers sent up by the Senator from Iowa will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

Washington D. C., January 19, 1875.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith for the favorable action of Congress copy of a communication, dated the 14th instant, from Hon. S. S. Burdett, Commissioner of the General Land Office, inclosing an estimate of appropriation required for the confederated tribes of the Kaskaskias, &c., in the State of Kansas.

Very respectfully,

B. R. COWEN,
Acting Secretary.

HON. WILLIAM A. BUCKINGHAM,

Chairman of Committee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,

Washington, D. C., January 14, 1875.

SIR: In reply to your communication of the 26th instant, inclosing copy of letter addressed you by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, bearing date December 22, 1874, requesting that I submit an estimate of appropriation for the sum of $1,209.88, if this be the actual deficiency in the accounts of William Brindle, late receiver of public moneys at Leecompton, Kansas, on account of sales of trust lands belonging to the Kaskaskias, &c., under treaty of 1854, I have the honor to submit herewith the estimate for that amount in duplicate. It appears from the records of this office that there is due the United States by William Brindle, late receiver, on account of sales of above-named lands, the sum of $8,170.45 as exhibited per report to First Comptroller, No. 16382, dated April 8, 1861. It also appears from the records of the Indian Office that Receiver Brindle refunded to the United States Treasury September 3, 1861, the sum of $142.27, which reduced the amount of deficiency to $8,028.18. On the 3d March, 1865, Congress appropriated the sum of $6,818.30, as held by said Brindle, from sale of those lands, and unaccounted for. (13 Statutes at large, 547.) From the above exhibit it seems that there still remains a deficiency of $1,209.88 due the said Indians. This difference between the amount actually due at the time the appropriation by Congress was granted and the sum appropriated is accounted for by the refundment by the honorable Secretary of the Interior of balances of funds placed in his hands for investment for the benefit of the tribes, and subsequently accounted for in the Indian Office as proceeds from sales of the lands.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. S. BURDETT,
Commissioner.

Hon. C. DELANO,
Secretary of the Interior.

Estimate of appropriation required for the confederated tribes of the Kaskaskias, &c., in the State of Kansas.

For the amount of $1,209.88, the balance still due the confederated tribes of the Kaskaskias, Peorias, Weas, and Piankeshaws, arising from the sale of "trust lands," by William Brindle, late receiver of public moneys at Leocompton, Kansas, $1,209.88.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has the Senator another amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope this will be passed by for a minute till I look into it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be considered as withdrawn temporarily.

Mr. ALLISON. After line 1107 I move to insert:

Provided, That the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the amount now in the Treasury of the United States as proceeds of the sale of the Pottawatomie lands in Kansas to the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad, made under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, be expended to relieve the immediate and pressing wants of the Prairie band of Pottawatomies; and the remainder of the said fund shall be invested by the Secretary of the Interior in United States bonds to be disposed of as may hereafter be provided by law.

I will explain briefly this amendment. The Pottawatomies were recently removed from the State of Kansas to the Indian Territory, and their lands were sold to the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railway. The proceeds of the sales are now in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior, amounting to $118,000. The Pottawatomies are said to be in need of a portion of these funds. The committee have proposed out of them to allow $15,000 for the support of the Pottawatomies, and direct that the remainder of their fund now in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior, not drawing interest, shall be invested in United States bonds and placed to their credit.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs is on page 76, after line 1867, to insert:

For educational purposes for the Creeks, $2,810.

Mr. WINDOM. I think the treaty provides for $1,000 for educational purposes. Does it not?

Mr. ALLISON. The treaty provides for $1,000, but this covers more than a year and is very necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. The next amendment is to insert after the amendment just adopted:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the subsistence and support of the Arapaho, Cheyenne, Apache, Kiowa, Comanche, and Wichita Indians in the Indian Territory, $50,000, to be available immediately.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer the following amendment to come in at the same place:

For this amount, to indemnify the Pawnee Indians for four thousand and eight hundred acres of land, erroneously excluded from their reservation in Nebraska by the survey of the boundary line thereof, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Indian Affairs instruct me to offer the following amendment:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to reimburse the United States in the sum of $24,000, by transfer from funds in the Treasury belonging to the Kaskaskia, Peoria, Wea, and Piankeshaw Indians, now to their credit under the act of Congress approved July 12, 1862, said sum being the amount advanced by the act of April 10, 1863, in the payment for certain lands purchased from the Senecas and sold to the Kaskaskias.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to propose the following amendment as an additional section:

SEC. —. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to convert into cash so much of the stocks held in trust for the Chickasaw tribe of Indians as shall when sold yield the sum of $100,000, and to pay the proceeds thereof to the treasurer of the Chickasaw Nation, to be by him distributed to relieve the pressing necessities of the members of said tribes, to be available immediately: Provided, That the consent of the proper authorities of said Chickasaw Nation be first obtained to this disposition of their funds.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like to hear some explanation of the necessity for that transfer of funds.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator misapprehends the meaning and purpose of the amendment. It makes no appropriation from the Treasury, but provides for a portion of the trust funds belonging to the Indians themselves being sold for the purpose of relieving the necessities they are now laboring under.

Mr. DAVIS. Is not that fund in the Treasury?

Mr. INGALLS. That fund is in the Treasury, but belongs to the Chickasaw Nation of Indians. They have been subjected during the past season to an unexampled series of calamities. Their crops were destroyed by the same invasion of insects that affected disastrously so large a portion of the West, and many of them at the present time are in a starving condition. The legislative council of the Chickasaw Nation have passed an act requesting that this disposition should be made of part of their funds, and the agent representing them is at the present time in the city for this purpose; and this is in accordance with the express desire of the nation, communicated to us in this manner.

Mr. DAVIS. Is it in bonds or in money in the Treasury?

Mr. BOGY. Bonds. This authorizes the bonds to be sold.

Mr. INGALLS. At the request of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] I send to the desk and ask to have read the act passed by the legislative council of the Chickasaw Nation.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Before that is done I should like to know the population of that tribe.

The Secretary read as follows:

An act for the relief of the destitute and starving Chickasaws.

Whereas in consequence of the unprecedented heat and long-continued drought of the two last summers there has been an almost total failure of corn and all other crops among the Chickasaws, and all the horrors of famine are pending over a great many of them; and whereas the only available funds in the hands of the Government of the United States subject to the control of the Chickasaw legislature, with the approbation and consent of the Government of the United States, being the Chickasaw national fund held in trust by the United States Treasury for the Chickasaws; and whereas it is earnestly requested by the Chickasaw people that Congress will make an early appropriation for the payment of all debts now due the Chickasaws as arrearages of interest or otherwise, but the same cannot be made available for the relief of the Chickasaw people from famine which is inevitable unless aided with means to purchase supplies before winter: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the legislature of the Chickasaw Nation, That the sum of $100,000 be, and the same is hereby, withdrawn from the Chickasaw fund held in trust by the United States Treasury for the Chickasaws, and the President of the United States, is hereby requested to cause so much of said stocks as may be necessary to yield the sum of $100,000 to be converted into cash, and the same paid over to the national treasurer of the Chickasaw Nation through a legal authorized United States agent for the Chickasaw Indians, the same to be distributed among the Chickasaw people by the directions and authority of the Chickasaw Legislature.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, That immediately after the passage of this act, the governor of the Chickasaw Nation be, and he is hereby, authorized and requested to furnish a copy of this act to the President of the United States, and communicate through his office with the President of the United States, stating in full the indispensable necessity of demanding immediate relief for the Chickasaws, as much so as the Southern States did in the overflow of last spring in the Mississippi River.

SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, That this act take effect from and after its passage. Approved October 5, 1874, by

B. F. OVERTON,
Governor.

I hereby certify that the above is a true and correct copy of an act passed at the Chickasaw Legislature on the 5th day of October, 1874.

CHARLES E. GOODING,
National Secretary.

Mr. INGALLS. In response to the inquiry made by the Senator from New Jersey, I would state to him that the number of the Chickasaws is about six thousand; that they reside in the southeastern portion of the Indian Territory, and they have stocks held in trust by the Secretary of the Interior to the amount of $1,261,996.73.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. The first amendment I offered was passed over at the request of the Senator from Vermont. The Senator from Vermont, after examining the statute and the letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, seems to have some doubt as to the amendment, and for the purpose of solving that doubt I withdraw it, as it will probably keep until next year.

Mr. STEWART. I offer the following amendment: to strike out from line 1702 to 1707 inclusive, as follows:

For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Nevada, presents of goods, agricultural implements, and other useful articles, and to assist them to locate in permanent abodes and sustain themselves by the pursuits of civilized life, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $15,000.

And in lieu thereof to insert the words which I send to the Chair.

The Chief Clerk read the words proposed to be inserted, as follows:

For the payment of debts contracted by G. W. Ingalls, agent on the Pi-Ute reservation, in Southeastern Nevada, as follows:

To Jennings & Moffatt.....	$2,754 25
To Jacobs & Sutton.....	1,430 57
To A. Woods.....	224 00
To Frank Carey.....	95 00
To P. S. Johnson.....	115 00
To J. Bennett & Co.....	375 00
To William Knapp.....	75 00
To E. Brown & Co.....	24 80
To Papperson & Lassell.....	1,576 20
To William Hill.....	1,354 38
To J. R. McGarrigle.....	250 00
To A. Bishop.....	325 00
To A. Frye.....	732 75
To W. R. Hamilton & Co.....	592 38
To Belding & Co.....	487 17
To A. Nebeker.....	1,364 51
To A. Spillsburg.....	75 00
To William Hyndman.....	125 00

Mr. WINDOM. I raise the point of order on that amendment. There are sundry and divers private claims in it, and it has not been referred to any committee or examined by any committee.

Mr. STEWART. I want the amendment read anyhow. I am entitled to that. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read through.

The Chief Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the amendment, as follows:

In all $11,876.01; which appropriation shall be available from the passage of this act.

For the general incidental expenses of the Pi-Ute reservation in Southeastern Nevada, presents of goods, agricultural implements, and other useful articles, and to assist them to sustain themselves in permanent abodes by the pursuits of civilized life, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $20,000, $10,000 of which amount shall be available from the passage of this act for the remainder of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875; and the Pi-Ute reservation in Southeastern Nevada is hereby reduced to one thousand acres, to be selected by the agent, A. J. Barnes, in a compact body; and when such selection shall have been made he shall report the same to the Secretary of the Interior, and the remaining portion of said reservation, after said selection shall have been made, shall be and remain a part of the public domain, subject to the laws of the United States in the same manner as it would have been if no reservation had ever been made: Provided, That the claims of no settler shall be included in the reservation to be selected under the provisions of this act.

For the general incidental expenses of the Walker River and Pyramid Lake reservations in Nevada, presents of goods, agricultural implements, and other useful articles, and to assist them to sustain themselves in permanent abodes by the pursuits of civilized life, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $12,000.

Mr. WINDOM. I raise the point of order on the amendment. It provides for private claims, and there is no authority for it.

Mr. STEWART. Let me explain it. Withdraw the point of order so that I can explain.

Mr. WINDOM. I withdraw it to allow the Senator to explain.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota waive the point of order or insist on it?

Mr. WINDOM. I waive it for the moment.

Mr. STEWART. I wish the Senate to listen to me. In Eastern Nevada a reservation was declared by the Department which covered an area of country as large as many of the smaller States. That country has a very few peaceable Indians in it, and a few pieces of good agricultural land. It is principally a mining country. It included a large number of settlers, and there was an estimate here of some $30,000 or $40,000 to be paid to settlers. A man by the name of Ingalls had charge of it. There was an immense scheme recommended to the Department for a large appropriation and it threatened very soon to get up into the hundreds of thousands of dollars. I opposed it and opposed the appropriation because I did not want the State of Nevada scandalized by the thing that was then put up. They then wanted payment of the debts that had been contracted by Ingalls. They got an appropriation in the deficiency bill for a part of them, in gross. I was unwilling to make any appropriation in gross, and I opposed that, and I required that they should send the names of the parties with their accounts sworn to. I have the accounts here. I have looked them all over, and the amendment contains a list of the accounts I propose to pay, so that the agent can start on a square basis and pay the parties that were contracted with. I have tried to find out who the debts were owing to. I do not include all the claims, but all that come properly authenticated; and the amount is $11,000. The debts were contracted by Mr. Ingalls without any authority of law. It is necessary, I say, to appropriate to pay them before he can go there on a square basis and do any business whatever. The people will not tolerate him if he goes there without paying these debts.

Then I provide $20,000 for a start. He ought not to have after this more than $10,000 a year. The first year I provide for $20,000. The agent thought he ought to have about $25,000, but I think that he has estimated the articles he wants to purchase too high. From my knowledge of the country I think a man can get along with $20,000 and start the farm.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is this recommended by the Department?

Mr. STEWART. My amendment is not recommended by the Department. They approve of the payment of these bills, but the amendment is not recommended by the Department. I do not know whether the Department would like to have it done this way or not, but the enormous reservation there I have cut down to a thousand acres. I do not propose to buy any land; there is enough public land there, and the agent informs me that he can select a thousand acres of good land. I know that is more than he can cultivate or will cultivate in the next ten years, but I am willing that he shall have a liberal amount. I do not want him to have a country as large as the State of Texas because we want to mine in that country.

Then as to the other two reservations I have reduced the amount from $15,000 to $12,000. I think $12,000 will be enough for them, and $20,000 will start this and after that $10,000 a year will be ample in my opinion to do everything that can be done in that direction for the Indians. If any appropriation is to be made at all for Eastern Nevada to go on, it is necessary before the agent shall go there that he shall pay these debts. If the point of order is made and sustained and the debts cannot be paid, we do not want the amendment because there is no use of the agent going there. If he goes there after the promises that have been made without the means to pay these debts, the whole community will be against him and he will have no show at all. If he goes on a cash basis as an honest man and takes a reasonable farm for the Indians, he can do some good.

If the Senator having charge of this appropriation bill wants to make a technical objection to this amendment, let it go.

Mr. WINDOM. I raise the point of order that this provides for private claims.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the Chair the point is well taken.

Mr. McCREERY. I offer an amendment, and I will remark that I have not had time to examine it very carefully myself but that my colleague two years ago was a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs and made a thorough investigation. The Indians are very much in need of the money at this time and I will thank my colleague to make a statement of the case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Kentucky will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as an additional section:

SEC. —. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to pay to the Chickasaw tribe or nation of Indians the following arrears of interest due to said tribe or nation, to wit: Arrears of interest on $90,000, Arkansas 6 per cent. bonds, from July 1, 1852, to July 1, 1866, $75,600; arrears of interest on $616,000, Tennessee 6 per cent. bonds, from January 1, 1861, to July 1, 1866, $203,230; arrears of interest on $66,666.66, Tennessee 5½ per cent. bonds, from January 25, 1861, to July 1, 1866, $19,010.25; and that the same be paid to said tribe or nation of Indians in bonds of the United States of any issue authorized by law, and bearing 5 per cent. per annum: Provided, however, That said bonds shall not be delivered until the Legislature of the Chickasaw Nation shall, by law duly enacted, and certified to the Secretary of the Treasury, agree to accept said bonds in lieu of the several amounts due said nation in money as aforesaid on Arkansas and Tennessee bonds or stocks now held in trust by the Secretary of the Interior for said tribe or nation of Indians.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President—

Mr. WINDOM. I will reserve the point of order that I wish to make until the Senator has the opportunity to make a statement, if he desires.

Mr. STEVENSON. If there is to be a point of order raised let it be now, before I speak. This is on an Indian bill. This claim is as just as one as the Government ever became liable for. When I was on the Indian Committee some years ago the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] and myself were a sub-committee to investigate this claim of the Chickasaws against the United States. We found the following state of facts to exist: By the treaty known as the Pontotoc treaty, between the United States and the Chickasaws, it was provided in the eleventh article—

The Chickasaw Nation have determined to create a perpetual fund, for the use of the nation forever, out of the proceeds of the country now ceded away. And for that purpose they propose to invest a large proportion of the money arising from the sale of the land in some safe and valuable stocks, which will bring them in an annual interest or dividend, to be used for all national purposes, leaving the principal untouched, intending to use the interest alone. It is therefore proposed by the Chickasaws, and agreed to, that the sum to be laid out in stocks as above mentioned, shall be left with the Government of the United States, until it can be laid out under the direction of the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, in such safe and valuable stock as he may approve of, for the use and benefit of the Chickasaw Nation. The sum thus to be invested shall be equal to at least three-fourths of the whole net proceeds of the sales of the lands, and as much more as the nation may determine, if there shall be a surplus after supplying all the national wants.

The obligation of the United States arises under the eleventh article of this treaty. This money has never been paid. It is justly due. It has been estimated for by the Department. The United States took the proceeds of the lands of the Chickasaws and invested them in the State bonds of Tennessee and Arkansas. For many years those bonds were left in the Treasury of the United States, and the Treasury collected the interest on the bonds, but after some time the interest on the bonds was not paid. The United States then kept up the interest until the war or till a short time before the war. I read from a report of the Acting Secretary of the Interior, dated April 13, 1872:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C., April 13, 1872.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith an estimate of appropriation required to pay the Chickasaw Nation of Indians the balance remaining due and unpaid on certain Arkansas and Tennessee State bonds held in trust by this Department for the benefit of said Indians, amounting in all to the sum of $297,890.25.

The accompanying copies of the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and other papers, it is believed, furnish full information upon the subject.

By the tenth article of the treaty concluded April 23, 1866, with the Choctaws and Chickasaws, (14 Statutes at Large, 769,) it appears that the United States reaffirmed "all obligations arising out of the treaty stipulations or acts of legislation with regard to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations entered into prior to the late rebellion."

In my opinion the provisions of the above article cover this case, and I therefore respectfully request the favorable action of Congress upon the estimate.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

B. R. COWEN,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. JAMES G. BLAINE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

When the war came on these Indians, the Chickasaws, were involved in the rebellion, and they were deemed disloyal. Thereupon Congress passed an act in 1862, which will be found in the twelfth volume of the Statutes at Large, page 529, in which they declared—

That in cases where the tribal organization of any Indian tribe shall be in actual hostility to the United States, the President is hereby authorized, by proclamation, to declare all treaties with such tribe to be abrogated by such tribe, if in his opinion the same can be done consistently with good faith and legal and national obligations.

That act was passed on July 5, 1862. The President, as it seems, was authorized to abrogate this treaty if he thought it was proper to do so. He never did think it was proper; he never took any action pro or con in the abrogation of the treaty; but in 1866 the tenth article of the treaty then made with the Chickasaws—

Reaffirms all obligations arising out of treaty stipulations or acts of legislation with regard to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations entered into prior to the late rebellion and in force at that time not inconsistent herewith, and further agrees to renew the payment of all annuities and other moneys accruing under such treaty stipulations and acts of legislation from and after the close of the fiscal year ending on the 30th of June in the year 1866.

This refers to payments which had been suspended by the rebellion. There was a reaffirmance and a solemn promise on the part of the United States to pay this trust debt; but even without that for the honor of the United States and in furtherance of well-recognized principles of law no act of war, unless a nation should choose to confiscate when peace was restored, would justify the confiscation of all trust funds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. McCREERY. I will give my colleague five minutes of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky yields to his colleague.

Mr. STEVENSON. I was going to say that these were trust funds, the United States being the naked holder of the title, with a solemn obligation to pay the interest on these bonds; and I say that without the treaty of 1866 the United States would have been in honor bound to pay it to these Indians. They have gone without that money.

Here is the recommendation of the Department. I attempted when I was on the Committee on Indian Affairs to put it upon a deficiency bill. I think it ought to have gone on that deficiency bill. I was then met toward the close of the session with the objection that I ought to put it on the Indian bill, that that was the appropriate place for it, and accordingly I support the suggestion of my colleague on this bill and say that this is a just debt which ought to be paid.

Mr. President, how can we ever expect to maintain the national faith with one set of nations if we disregard it to these poor red men who are our own wards? If the other contracting party had been Great Britain or any civilized nation, they would not have waited one year. They would have pointed to that treaty and said: "Here is your obligation; we demand its fulfillment;" and we would have been ready to cry out "No matter what the taxes are, let us support the national faith." These men, whose lands we bought and of the proceeds of which we agreed to become the trustees, confided in our honor, trusted to our faith, and asked us to invest this money due by the Government to them in a perpetual fund, the interest of which was to be paid to them. The United States did annually pay it up to the period of the war. With what face can the Congress of the United States say that this is a stale claim?

Mr. BAYARD. I would ask my friend from Kentucky to state the circumstances of what he calls a trust. At one time he has termed the fund a debt due to the Indians, and at another time he has said it was a mere trust fund in the hands of the United States for the use of the Indians.

Mr. STEVENSON. Let me explain to my friend. The United States bought from the Chickasaws a large quantity of lands at a specified price, amounting to so many hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. BAYARD. How much?

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not remember now, but I could turn to it. It is a large amount.

Mr. BAYARD. Does the amendment specify the amount?

Mr. STEVENSON. This is for interest. I was going on to tell my friend how this debt arose. The Chickasaws, not desiring this large amount of money, asked the United States to hold it in trust for them:

The Chickasaw Nation have determined to create a perpetual fund, for the use of the Nation forever, out of the proceeds of the land ceded to the United States—

Mr. BAYARD. From what does the Senator read?

Mr. STEVENSON. From the treaty, the eleventh article, which answers the question; and for that purpose they proposed to invest a large amount of the money received from the sale of the land—in some safe and valuable stocks, which will bring them in an annual interest or dividend, to be used for all national purposes, leaving the principal untouched, intending to use the interest alone. It is therefore proposed by the Chickasaws, and agreed to, that the sum to be laid out in stocks, as above mentioned, shall be left with the Government of the United States until it can be laid out under the direction of the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, in such safe and valuable stock as he may approve of, for the use and benefit of the Chickasaw Nation.

The United States, instead of paying them this money, agreed to take the position of trustee, the Government binding itself to invest the money in bonds and to pay the interest annually to the Indians.

Mr. THURMAN. Will my friend allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. STEVENSON. Certainly.

Mr. THURMAN. What he has read shows that the Government undertook to pay interest itself until the President with the advice and consent of the Senate invested the fund; but when the Government invested, the doubt is whether anything in the treaty makes the Government responsible for the interest.

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. THURMAN. That is what I want to know. Did the Government discharge its trust when in good faith it invested the fund in what it considered to be a safe and productive stock? Or did it agree to guarantee that the interest should be paid on that stock?

Mr. STEVENSON. I was answering my friend from Delaware, and I had not got through so as to explain to him what this sum was for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must remind the Senator that his time has expired.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to say that I feel very much interested in the remarks that are being made by my friend from Kentucky, and with one more question which I want him to answer, I will, according to the usage, yield the rest of my five minutes to him. I wish to know precisely the time for which this interest has not been paid by the Government, and whether the Government has paid it since the new treaty from 1866. Now I yield to him.

Mr. WINDOM. Is it in order to yield time in this way?

Mr. THURMAN. That has been the custom.

Mr. BAYARD. There is no doubt about that. I wish to be informed on this subject, because by the statement of the Senator from Kentucky, if it be true that there is a debt not simply of money but of honorable obligation, involving the creation of a trust to these poor people—

Mr. WINDOM. I raise a point of order that a Senator cannot yield his time in this way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not aware that a ruling has been made in the Senate as to the right of a Senator to yield his time.

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask did I not obtain the floor regularly?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio was on the floor and proposed to yield his time to the Senator from Kentucky, when the question was raised whether a Senator could yield his time under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BAYARD. That has been done so constantly that I took it for granted. The object was not to waste time by having a longer period than five minutes for debate; but if a Senator chooses to allow another to occupy that portion of the time allotted to him, it has been the custom to allow it, and it has been done ever since the rule was adopted.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. McCREERY] took the floor and he yielded his five minutes to his colleague.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very true, with the assent of the Chair, who recognized it; and unless corrected by the Senate the Chair will hold that it is admissible.

Mr. THURMAN. The only effect of my yielding my time to my friend is that I cannot speak on this amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be done by unanimous consent. I do not want such a precedent set.

Mr. WINDOM. I raise the point of order that the amendment provides for a private claim.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the Chair the point is well taken.

Mr. STEVENSON. I shall appeal. Is the question of order debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An appeal is taken.

Mr. STEVENSON. Does the Chair say that a provision for the payment of a treaty stipulation is a private claim?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that the amendment provides for a private claim. That is the opinion of the Chair. The Senator appeals from the decision of the Chair, and the question will be whether the opinion of the Chair shall stand as the judgment of the Senate. The appeal is debatable.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If the Senator from Kentucky will allow me—

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not understand this one-sided legislation. The Senator from Minnesota puts in a private claim to pay a Methodist church for a land patent. Is not that a private claim?

Mr. WINDOM. It is under a treaty, as I understand.

Mr. STEVENSON. So is this under a treaty.

Mr. WINDOM. That was to carry out the provisions of a treaty.

Mr. STEVENSON. This is to carry out the provisions of a treaty.

Mr. WINDOM. I have not seen the treaty that this is to carry out.

Mr. STEVENSON. And it was recommended by a Department of the Government. If that is the ruling of the Chair, then we shall take exception to various items of this bill which were permitted to go on. If the Chair's ruling is to be sustained it will cut off half a dozen items.

Mr. WINDOM. Very well.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Let me inquire whether this amendment comes from any committee?

Mr. STEVENSON. I did not offer the amendment; my colleague offered it. I understand it was offered from the Committee on Indian Affairs, but I do not know.

Mr. McCREERY. No. I understand that it passed the Committee on Indian Affairs at a previous session, before I became a member.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It is not recommended by the committee now?

Mr. McCREERY. No, sir.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Then it is not in order for that reason.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If it does not come from the Committee on Indian Affairs or any other committee, it is out of order for that reason.

Mr. McCREERY. I call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the fact that it was referred to his own committee some three or four days ago.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That may be; but it must come from some committee and be recommended before it is referred. It must necessarily be recommended by some standing committee of the body in order to bring it within the rule.

Mr. BAYARD. Is that the rule?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that to be the rule.

Mr. INGALLS. I hope the Chair will not pass on that question without further examination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is anxious for light on that matter.

Mr. INGALLS. A decision of that question in my judgment would be entirely outside of the terms of the rule. What is it?

No amendment proposing additional appropriations shall be received to any general appropriation bill unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law or some act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session, or moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or in pursuance of an estimate from the head of some of the Departments.

Those are all in the disjunctive, and any amendment may be offered under any one of these clauses which I have read. Therefore it seems to me that the Chair, in holding that no amendment can be offered unless reported from a standing or select committee, is certainly going far beyond the meaning and the purposes of the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The second branch of the rule reads:

All amendments to general appropriation bills reported from committees of the Senate, proposing new items of appropriation, shall, one day before they are offered, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and all general appropriation bills shall be referred to the said committee; and in like manner notice of amendments to bills making appropriations for rivers and harbors shall be given and referred to the committee to which such bills shall be referred.

Mr. BAYARD. These requirements have been met in the present case, and I would draw the attention of the Senate and of the Chair to the preceding section of that rule:

No amendment proposing additional appropriations shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or some act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session, or moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or in pursuance of an estimate from the head of some of the Departments; and no amendment shall be received whose object is to provide for a private claim, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation.

It seems to me very clear that under the Constitution treaties and laws are held in equal dignity, bearing their force entirely in accordance with the priority of duty. A preceding law is repealed by a subsequent treaty; a preceding treaty is repealed by a subsequent law. That is the rule in our courts. Here, when we are considering the rules of the Senate, it seems to me that the same reasoning must apply. This, therefore, is an amendment, according to the statement made by the Senator from Kentucky, to carry out the provisions of an existing treaty, and if there be a question whether the words "existing law" do not embrace that, it seems to me the defect is entirely cured by the subsequent portion of the paragraph—

Unless it be to carry out the provisions of existing law or a treaty stipulation.

The meaning is plain. If the argument of the Senator from Kentucky is to have weight, it must be that the amendment he proposes is to carry out a treaty stipulation pre-existing. Whether it does or does not is a question for the Senate to determine, and if it does it clearly to my mind is within the meaning of this rule.

I should like to have heard more before the technical point of order was raised in regard to this amendment. I should like to have the Senator from Kentucky clear up certain facts in regard to the matter to show that there was, if not a legal, an equitable claim upon the Government of the United States to execute a trust respecting moneys left in its hands by this tribe of Indians under treaty stipulation. I am well aware, and I am sorry to say, that Indian treaties have not been held quite so sacred and obligatory as treaties with those who are better able to defend themselves. If that has been heretofore the basis of legislation, it ought now to cease, because it is certainly not respectable, to say the least.

Therefore, Mr. President, it seems to me that the point of order is not well taken; that the rule entirely sustains the amendment which has been offered; and the only question is whether or not the amendment is within the language of the rule; whether this is an amendment which is carrying into effect the provisions of any existing treaty stipulation. If it does, it is perfectly plain and clear that it has a right to be on this bill, and then, being on the bill legitimately, the question will be whether the Senate will decide to pass it as they do any other measure proper for their consideration. I submit, then, that the point made by the honorable Senator from Minnesota is not well taken, and that the amendment offered by the honorable Senator from Kentucky is properly before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In order that the ruling of the Chair may be understood, he will remark that by the thirtieth rule there are four cases in which, and in which only, an amendment to an appropriation bill can be offered increasing the appropriation. One is "to carry out the provisions of some existing law." That that does not mean "existing treaty" is obvious from the last line of the first clause, where it is said that an amendment for a private claim shall not be received "unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or treaty stipulation." In the same paragraph there is a distinction drawn between an existing law and a treaty stipulation. Consequently where the words "existing law" first occur they do not mean a treaty stipulation.

The second case in which an amendment may be offered is where it is to carry out "some act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session." It is not a law because it may not have passed the House or received the approval of the President, but still an amendment is allowed to carry out such act or resolution.

The next case is, "or moved by direction of a standing or select committee."

The Chair does not understand that either of these three cases has happened. The fourth is, "or in pursuance of an estimate from the head of some of the Departments." If the amendment comes within either of these heads it is in order, but otherwise it is not. But the rule goes further and says "a private claim shall not even then be in order, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or treaty stipulation." Therefore the Chair rules this amendment out of order.

Mr. THURMAN. I beg leave to appeal from that decision, and I wish to say a word on this question of order.

Mr. INGALLS. Allow me one moment. I should like to call the attention of the Chair to one fact.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish the Senator would allow me to proceed; I will take but little time. In the first place, I do not agree that this is a private claim within the meaning of this rule. What is a private claim? This Chickasaw Nation is regarded by us as a distinct quasi nation, so far clothed with the attributes of nationality that it is competent to make a treaty with us. In that respect it stands precisely on as high a footing as would Great Britain or France. Now would an amendment offered to this bill providing for the payment of a debt due by us to Great Britain or to France be a private claim? Is that the meaning of the rule? Manifestly it is not. "Private claim" means the claim of some individual or corporation or body not clothed with the attributes of nationality. It cannot be that this term "private claim," in this rule, applies to a nation, applies to a claim made by Great Britain or France or by an Indian tribe capable of making treaties with us.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator a question? Does he mean to say that the word "private" there, as distinct from "public," refers to the person who makes the claim instead of to the claim itself?

Mr. THURMAN. I do not take the distinction which the Senator seeks to draw. Why, sir, to provide for paying money which we owe by treaty to a foreign power is not a private claim. It cannot be made to be a private claim. But, again, what is the argument of the Senator from Kentucky and which we must hear before we can decide? The Senator insists that the payment of this money is necessary in order to carry out both the provisions of the existing law and a treaty stipulation. He insists that there are laws on the statute-book; he has them here on his desk ready to read to the Senate to show that under existing law we are bound to pay this money. Whether he will be able to maintain that, or not, I do not know; but that is what he has said and he is ready to show the treaty stipulation under which he claims that we are bound to pay the money. Then if you call it a private claim is it not a private claim which may be moved in order to carry out the provisions of an existing law which he is ready to cite to the Senate, or a treaty stipulation which he has cited? How can there be any doubt about that? Whether he will be able to maintain his proposition or not, I do not know; but we cannot decide that proposition on a question of order. We cannot cut off the very proof of that which would bring it within the rule, on a question of order. I submit, therefore, that this amendment is perfectly in order.

What is meant by "existing law?" It certainly is not meant an appropriation by existing law; for if there were an appropriation by existing law the amendment would be wholly unnecessary. It is only meant that the claim is ascertained by existing law to be a valid claim, that Congress has once passed on the validity of the claim, and all that remains is to pay it. That is the meaning of the term "existing law" here. And now the Senator professes his ability to show us that the claim is provided for by existing law, and that all we have to do is to pay it. Whether he will be able to do that or not I do not know.

Mr. INGALLS. Had the Senator from Ohio been willing to listen to the remark I desired to make, I presume he would have been spared the necessity for his argument. I hold in my hand a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of appropriations required for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, published as an executive document of House of Representatives, No. 5, and upon the ninety-eighth page of this volume, under the head of "estimates of appropriations for the Indian service," appear the three following items:

Arrears of interest on $90,000 Arkansas 6 per cent. bonds, from July 1, 1852, to July 1, 1866, fourteen years.....	$75,600 00
Arrears of interest on $616,000 Tennessee 6 per cent. bonds, from January 1, 1861, to July 1, 1866, five and a half years.....	203,280 00
Arrears of interest on $66,686.66½ Tennessee 5½ per cent. bonds, from January 25, 1861, to July 1, 1866, five years and one hundred and fifty-seven days.....	19,010 25
Total.....	313,030 25

So that this has been submitted as an estimate from the head of a Department and is plainly in order under the rule.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not if it is a private claim. That is the very question.

Mr. SHERMAN. It seems to me perfectly clear, notwithstanding the statement of the Senator from Kansas, that this is a private claim and that it is not embraced in any treaty stipulation, and I think the treaty itself shows that as clearly as anything can. The fact that it is contained in the estimates of appropriations does not affect the question at all.

The only question is, is this a claim which we are required to pay by the terms of a treaty? The treaties to which we are referred do not provide for any such claim at all. They do not contemplate that such a claim can arise. On the contrary, the treaty now before me provides that this fund shall be invested by the United States in stocks, and it seems from the amendment itself that the United States did comply with this stipulation by investing this fund in stocks. That is all the stipulation contained in the treaty read by the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STEVENSON. I was cut off in my argument. I have investigated this thing from top to bottom. The Senator is only commenting on the first treaty, when there have been two.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The second treaty does not help the case a bit.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have to take the case as it is before us.

Mr. STEVENSON. I was stopped in my statement.

Mr. SHERMAN. Article 11 expressly provides that the United States shall invest this money for the benefit of the Indians in certain stocks. Recognizing this fund as the money of the Indians, the United States was simply to invest the fund in certain stocks, and those stocks are named in the amendment. There is nothing in the world in this treaty which requires us to pay the interest on these stocks or to make good the failure of the makers of these bonds; there is nothing that requires us to guarantee the bonds. There is nothing at all in the eleventh article of this treaty which can require us to pay the interest on these bonds. What we are bound to do under the treaty is to invest in the bonds with the consent of the Indians; and that, it seems, has been done. Then, after all, there is nothing in the treaty that has been read to us which requires us to pay this money. There may be other treaties; but if so, they are not before us.

At all events we ought not to put this amendment upon an appropriation bill until it has been examined carefully by a committee of this body. If we are bound to pay this money, if we are guarantors of this investment, we ought to pay it and ought not to hesitate to pay it; but the fact that so many years have elapsed since this interest accrued, very many years indeed, going back, I think, to 1853, and the fact that this money was not paid from 1853 to this time, is strong presumptive evidence at least that we are not bound to make good the interest of this fund. The fact that it was not paid from 1853 down to 1866 is sufficient evidence that there is enough in this case to prevent us from paying this large sum of money until we have a full and fair investigation and a separate bill on the subject and the report of a committee.

All I desire to say is that it is clear on the face of the treaty read to us that this is not a claim growing out of a treaty. If there is any claim at all it is a claim against the United States as a trustee for not taking due care in the administration of a trust. All the treaty required us to do was to invest that money. It may be that there are other treaties.

Mr. STEVENSON. On the question of order I wish to say a word. I have not said anything I believe upon it.

My colleague offered this amendment and asked me to make a statement in regard to it. I said if my friend from Minnesota was going to make a point of order, I would not speak. He got up then and said, "I waive my point of order and will hear the Senator."

Mr. WINDOM. I did, and under the rule of the Senate he had the right to speak five minutes. His colleague got the floor and yielded to him, and he spoke five minutes more. The indications were that the debate was going on all night, and I renewed the point of order which I had simply waived.

Mr. STEVENSON. I am not complaining, but it is most extraordinary when I told the Senator from Ohio that I was not half through the case that he should go off on one point. Let me tell him that this treaty was modified twice, and the United States solemnly pledged itself to invest in these bonds and to keep the interest at par annually, and that this Government has for a half dozen years yearly made appropriations to keep this fund up since 1866. Now, why does he talk about 1853? This estimate is only from 1866 back, and it was paid since that time subsequent to the war.

Now I will go on with my statement. I had only got to the eleventh article of the treaty of 1833. That was ratified by articles of convention and agreement entered into between the United States and the Chickasaws on the 24th of May, 1834, and ratified by the United States and the Indians on the 1st of July, 1834. (7 Statutes at Large, 450.)

The eleventh article of this treaty, after referring to the manner in which the lands shall be sold, provides that the Government of the United States, within six months after any public sale, shall advise the Chickasaws of the receipts and expenditures and of balances in their favor; and that at regular intervals of six months, after the first report is made, the Chickasaws shall be informed of the proceeds of all entries and sales; and declares further, that—

The funds thence resulting, after the necessary expenses of surveying and selling, and other advances which may be made, are repaid to the United States, shall from time to time be invested in some secure stock, redeemable within a period of not more than twenty years; and the United States will cause the interest arising therefrom annually to be paid to the Chickasaws.

In view of the constitutional provision that no money shall be drawn from the United States Treasury without an appropriation therefor by act of Congress, the legislative department of the Government, by the act of April 20, 1835, (5 Statutes at Large, 10,) pointed out the means for carrying into effect the treaties with the Chickasaws. The first section of this act declares that moneys received by the United States for lands shall be paid into the United States Treasury; and the third section enacts that "all investments of stocks required by the said treaty shall be made under the direction of the President." Pursuant to the provisions of the third section of this act, the President directed that investments should be made by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Chickasaws, reposing confidence in the wisdom and integrity of the Government of the United States, reaffirmed their trust and confidence in their treaty of June 22, 1852, (10 Statutes at Large, 974,) in article 5 of which treaty it is declared that—

The Chickasaws are desirous that the whole amount of their national fund shall remain with the United States in trust for the benefit of their people, and that the same shall on no account be diminished—and it was therefore agreed that the United States shall continue to hold said fund in trust, as aforesaid, and shall constantly keep the same invested in safe and profitable stocks, the interest upon which shall be annually paid to the Chickasaw Nation.

Now, will the Senator from Ohio listen?—

There is the guarantee; there is the language of the treaty by which the United States became solemnly the guarantor of this fund, and this amendment offered by my colleague is to make that interest thus assumed and thus guaranteed good. The Government went on and paid it year by year for sometime; and when it became past due, F. A. Walker, Commissioner of Indian Affairs in 1872, wrote this letter:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., April 9, 1872.

SIR: Referring to office report of the 29th ultimo, in relation to appropriations made by Congress for arrears of interest on certain State stocks held in trust by the honorable Secretary of the Interior as a portion of the Chickasaw national fund; also, to a communication from the honorable Secretary of the Treasury, dated the 4th instant, in relation to the same subject, (copy herewith "A.") I have the honor to transmit a statement (inclosure "B") showing a balance found due and unpaid on account of arrears of interest on Arkansas and Tennessee State bonds, accruing while said bonds were held in trust by the Secretary of the Treasury, and from which it will appear that there is due and unpaid—

On $90,000 6 per cent. bonds of the State of Arkansas from January 1, 1842, to July 1, 1866, the sum of.....	$75,600 00
On $616,000 6 per cent. bonds of the State of Tennessee from January 1, 1861, to July 1, 1866, the sum of.....	203,280 00
On $66,666.66 5 1/2 per cent. bonds of the State of Tennessee from January 25, 1861, to July 1, 1866, the sum of.....	19,010 25
Amounting in the aggregate to.....	297,890 25

It will be seen by reference to the inclosed statement that the advances made by Congress for a portion of the arrears of interest on the $90,000 Arkansas bonds, amounting to $56,700, has been deducted from the amount of interest.

What does the Senator from Ohio say to that when he talks about stale claims? The chairman of the Finance Committee stands up to say that this is a stale claim, when treaty after treaty and act after act pledges the faith of the United States as a trustee to pay. Why, sir, it is because the Indians are poor red men? Would the Senator take that position if it were a foreign nation? No sir; it is not a stale claim. But I go on with Mr. Walker's letter:

I herewith inclose an estimate of appropriation required to pay the Chickasaw Indians the amount remaining due and unpaid on the Arkansas and Tennessee bonds held in trust for them as herein stated, and respectfully recommend that the matter be laid before Congress for its action.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. A. WALKER,
Commissioner.

Hon. C. DELANO,
Secretary of the Interior.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must remind the Senator that his time has again expired.

Mr. STEVENSON. But this is a question of order. There is no time on that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the Chair the rule applies.

Mr. STEVENSON. I am very unfortunate. I have never been allowed to make a statement but I have been interrupted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair regrets to interrupt the Senator, but is obliged to enforce the rules as he understands them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Kentucky may finish his remarks. I dare say he will not be long.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. STEVENSON. I will not go on.

Mr. BAYARD. Is it a violation of the rule?

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not believe it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the judgment of the Chair when the Senate is under the five-minute rule all debate is confined to the same limit.

Mr. WINDOM. In order to bring the Senate to a vote on this question, I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. MERRIMON. It is now a quarter to eleven o'clock. The Senate is thin. It is manifest that we cannot get through with this bill to-night. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. WINDOM. I hope not. We can soon finish this bill.

The Senate refused to adjourn; there being on a division—ayes 20 noes 22.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the appeal lie on the table.

The question being put, a division was called for, and the ayes were 20, and the noes 21.

Mr. MERRIMON. What is the appeal?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The appeal is from the decision of the Chair ruling that the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky contained a private claim.

Mr. STEVENSON. I call for the yeas and nays. That will teach us something.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to make an inquiry before the vote is taken. Is it in order to move to lay an amendment on the table?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is in order.

Mr. THURMAN. Is it, under the rule, in order to move to lay an appeal on the table?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands.

Mr. THURMAN. On a question of order?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. THURMAN. Until the other day I never knew that it was.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on laying the appeal on the table.

Mr. BAYARD. Before that vote is taken I merely wish to say—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to lay on the table is not debatable.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 21, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Boreman, Boutwell, Chandler, Clayton, Dorsey, Edmunds, Ferry of Michigan, Hitchcock, Howe, Lewis, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Sargent, Scott, Sherman, Stewart, West, Windom, and Wright—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Bogy, Cooper, Dennis, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Norwood, Saulsbury, Sprague, Stevenson, Stockton, and Thurman—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Brownlow, Cameron, Carpenter, Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Davis, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Hamlin, Harvey, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones, Logan, Morton, Oglesby, Patterson, Pease, Pratt, Ramsey, Ransom, Robertson, Schurz, Spencer, Tipton, Wadleigh, and Washburn—33.

So the appeal from the decision of the Chair was laid on the table.

Mr. STEWART. I move to strike out lines 1702 to 1707 inclusive, and insert the following:

For the general incidental expenses of the Pi-Uto reservation in Southeastern Nevada, presents of goods, agricultural implements, and other useful articles, and to assist them to sustain themselves in permanent abodes by the pursuits of civilized life, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $20,000, of which amount shall be available from the passage of this act for the remainder of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875; and the Pi-Uto reservation in Southeastern Nevada is hereby reduced to one thousand acres, to be selected by the agent, J. A. Barnes, in a compact body; and when such selection shall have been made he shall report the same to the Secretary of the Interior, and the remaining portion of said reservation, after said selection shall have been made, shall be and remain a part of the public domain, subject to the laws of the United States in the same manner as it would have been if no reservation had ever been made: Provided, That the claim of no settler shall be included in the reservation to be selected under the provisions of this act.

For the general incidental expenditures of the Walker River and Pyramid Lake reservations in Nevada, presents of goods, agricultural implements, and other useful articles, and to assist them to sustain themselves in permanent abodes by the pursuits of civilized life, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $15,000.

Mr. WINDOM. Is that amendment in order? I raise the point of order that it is not reported from any committee and has not been referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. STEWART. It is from the Committee on Indian Affairs, and they recommend the whole of it. I left a part of it out that was objectionable. The Committee on Indian Affairs are in favor of it.

Mr. WINDOM. When did they report it?

Mr. STEWART. They did not report it. They authorized me to report it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the amendment reported from any standing committee?

Mr. STEWART. It is by consent of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order being raised, it is necessary for the Chair to understand the fact.

Mr. STEWART. I want to know whether the Committee on Indian Affairs has not agreed that I should offer it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rule is that it shall come from a committee as an amendment to this bill, not that it shall be reported in some other form for the action of the Senate.

Mr. STEWART. I want to know if that point of order is going to be raised? If you leave the reservation as it is, it is not my fault. You cannot say it is my fault if there be no appropriation for this purpose. The chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs spoke to my colleague and myself about it, and I told him I would go to work and try to get it in shape. The reservation is in a most disgraceful situation. They get up debts to have them paid. The committee said it would have to be reported from a committee, and as I understood the committee were doing it. Now, if the committee do not want to do it and treat it fairly, very well.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say, in reply to the Senator from Nevada, that the Department estimated $50,000, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and the committee looked into it somewhat, but were not willing to make any report with reference to it without consulting the Senators from Nevada. Since the Senator has made the statement to me and other gentlemen of the committee we have had no meeting. Therefore of course as a committee we have not considered the particular amendment he now proposes. I do not object to it myself, and I presume other gentlemen of the committee would agree to it, but the committee as a committee have not. Justice to the committee requires that I should say that.

Mr. STEWART. Sixty thousand dollars has been recommended by the Department, and here is $20,000 in place of it.

Mr. WINDOM. If the Committee on Indian Affairs have examined it so as to say they are in favor of it, I do not raise the technical point that they have not actually recommended it, if the chairman says they are in favor of it.

Mr. ALLISON. I can only speak for myself. I think the committee is in favor of the amendment and is willing it shall be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the point of order is not made on the amendment, of course it will not be made by the Chair.

Mr. STEWART. Fifteen thousand dollars is already in the bill. There was a recommendation, but it was not definitely stated why it should be so. There was a recommendation of $60,000 for Eastern Nevada. Now we only ask $20,000, leaving the rest to be used in the western end of the State. We do not want $60,000 as recommended by the Department. If the Senate say we shall not have any, I shall not complain.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The only thing that troubles me about that is that this changes the reservation entirely. I do not think that ought to be done by an amendment unless it has been examined by a committee and recommended. That is a pretty arbitrary sort of thing. How much does this propose to leave the Indians?

Mr. STEWART. A thousand acres.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. How many Indians are there?

Mr. STEWART. When they all get together there will be two or three hundred.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is pretty indefinite. I dislike—

Mr. STEWART. I hope the Senator will not object to this, for I know it is a decent thing to do.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My honorable friend I dare say thinks he knows. I have the greatest possible confidence in my honorable friend, knowing that he is very enlightened, and I have great confidence in his judgment; but in Indian affairs I do not think he is quite sound.

Mr. STEWART. I know one thing about it. Nevada has not been stealing three or four hundred thousand dollars a year since I have been here.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. How much is the amount asked?

Mr. STEWART. Twenty thousand dollars.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The difficulty is about the reservation. I do not think it ought to be abolished here unless recommended by a committee. I do not understand that the committee have recommended it.

Mr. WINDOM. Let us have a vote.

Mr. STEWART. Yes, I want to vote.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I raise the question that this amendment has not been recommended by a committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Legislation does not need to be recommended by a committee.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But it has an appropriation connected with it.

Mr. STEWART. Let me say one word about it. It is a reservation that has not been confirmed by any law. It is a floating reservation, and covers a portion of Nevada nearly equal in size to the State of Connecticut. It is a mining country, and there is not one Indian to five thousand acres of ground in it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What do you mean by "floating reservation"?

Mr. STEWART. It is a reservation made by the Department. I do not know how much it does cover. It has not been surveyed. It goes entirely by latitude and longitude, by rivers, and they have not been surveyed. We know generally from the maps that it is about as large as the State of Connecticut.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. And a floating reservation?

Mr. STEWART. No matter about that. It is a reservation by description in the eastern part of Nevada, gotten up there for the purpose of excluding miners and settlers. It was a scheme to buy out the settlers—that the settlers should be bought out. Thus they drive them away from their homes and dedicate it to barbarism. There are only a few Indians there. They are comfortably situated. There is very little good land, but some very rich land on the Muddy. The Indian agent who went down there to examine it informed me that he could get a thousand acres of land which would be very suitable for the Indians. I know they will never need more than a hundred acres or so. It is necessary that the balance should be left open where men can live. It is necessary it should be left open. It is a great region, and it will not do to spread that reservation over a country where there should be no reservation. If it is confined to a thousand acres, they can do some good for the Indians and some good for the people there.

I beg of you now to cut down that reservation. I am in earnest about it. It is important for peace and civilization. It is an outrage to dedicate that country to be a waste. Call it a reservation! Those mountains are only fit for mining purposes. Here and there is a little valley and a few peaceable Indians who like to have settlers come among them. To disturb that by an immense reservation is an outrage on my State. No one could come here to either House from Nevada if he did not protest against it. Every member of both Houses from Nevada and every decent citizen of Nevada protests against this outrage. My colleagues in both Houses, no matter what their politics, protest against this thing. The Legislature have been protesting against having this outrage, and all I ask is that you reduce it to a reasonable amount to cultivate, give the Indians this reserved land, and let them try the experiment of farming from $20,000 if it can be done and not $60,000, $40,000, or $50,000, to buy out the settlers, because those settlers are an advantage to the Indians; they live there in harmony with the Indians, and the Indians do not want the settlers to go away.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine insist on his point of order?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I raise the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has no other resource except to rule that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. STEWART. Then I will offer another amendment. I think, though, I had better appeal from the decision on that point of order. I do not see on what ground it was made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Your amendment contained an appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the ground that it has not been referred to the Committee on Appropriations and does not come from any standing committee of the Senate. That is the ground on which the Chair rules. Does the Senator appeal?

Mr. STEWART. Let it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and I give notice that I will offer it to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to have it printed?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir, not printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. Does the Senator offer another amendment?

Mr. STEWART. I offer another amendment. After line 1707 I move to insert—

That the Pi-Ute reservation in Southeastern Nevada is hereby abolished.

Now, I want to know whether it is intended here that, contrary to all good government, contrary to all the interests of my State, the Senate will fool in that way to allow a reservation covering as large a portion of territory as the State of Connecticut to be dedicated to an Indian reservation. There are several hundred miners there engaged on this reservation; there are settlers there, and it is a scene of plunder, a scene of desolation that can do nobody any good. All my people protest against it. They are a unit against it, and everybody who comes from Nevada must forever be a unit against having a reservation of this kind in that State. Now I ask whether the Senate will abolish it?

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say one word to the Senator from Nevada. I understand him to say that this reservation is not fixed by law.

Mr. STEWART. It is not fixed by law.

Mr. ALLISON. It is fixed by an executive order?

Mr. STEWART. It never could have been fixed by law.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is not opposed to reducing this reservation even to the extent proposed by the Senator from Nevada. It seems to me if there is no objection we should agree to the amendment.

Mr. STEWART. I have protested to the Executive against it. No chance would ever have made this a law. No Congress would ever have given it the power. It is a great grievance on my State, and I want it abolished.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nevada.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of the bill:

To reimburse white settlers for losses and destruction of property by depredations of Indians $4,700,179.39, said sum being the amount of such claims examined by the Secretary of the Interior and officially reported to Congress.

Mr. WINDOM. I raise a point of order on that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota raises a point of order.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I would like to be heard before the Chair sustains it. What is the point of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the Chair understands, the point of order is made on the ground that this is a private claim, does not come from any committee, and has not been sent to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But it is in accordance with law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I appeal, and I will state the ground of my appeal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska appeals, and the question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. SHERMAN. I rise to a privileged question.

Mr. LEWIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia moves that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. WINDOM called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 23, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Bogy, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Johnston, Kelly, Lewis, McCreery, Merrimon, Mitchell, Norwood, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Stewart, Stockton, and Thurman—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Boreman, Boutwell, Chandler, Clayton, Dorsey, Edmunds, Ferry of Michigan, Frelinghuysen, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Sargent, Scott, Sherman, Sprague, West, Windom, and Wright—21.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Brownlow, Cameron, Carpenter, Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Flanagan, Gilbert, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Jones, Logan, Morton, Oglesby, Patterson, Pease, Pratt, Ramsey, Ransom, Robertson, Schurz, Spencer, Tipton, Wadleigh, and Washburn—29.

So the motion was agreed to; and (at eleven o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 19, 1875.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole to resume the consideration of the tax and tariff bill.

The SPEAKER. There are several gentlemen who desire to submit requests for unanimous consent. If there be no objection, the Chair will entertain such requests.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. BARRERE, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Private Land Claims a bill (H. R. No. 4808) to ascertain and settle private land claims in certain States and Territories; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

BRANCH MINT AT SAINT LOUIS.

Mr. WELLS, by unanimous consent, presented a resolution of the Legislature of the State of Missouri, in favor of the establishment of a branch mint at the city of Saint Louis; which was referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN RICE JONES, DECEASED.

Mr. MORRISON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4809) supplemental to an act for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of John Rice Jones, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

LOUISIANA MEMBERS OF THE FORTY-FIRST CONGRESS.

Mr. SHELDON. I ask unanimous consent to introduce the following resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope members will take their seats, so we may know what is going on.

The SPEAKER. There is no mode of doing business so innocent as granting unanimous consent if members will give attention, but there is none so hazardous if they do not. The Clerk will read the resolution offered by the gentleman from Louisiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be directed to ascertain whether there is rightfully due to any member of the Forty-first Congress from Louisiana any part of his salary as such member; and, if so, it shall be in order for such committee to report as part of the deficiency appropriation bill such appropriation as shall be found due on such salaries.

Mr. SHELDON. This does not apply to me, and I hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not propose to object to the introduction of the resolution, but merely to ask that it shall be so modified as to provide that amendments covering the subject-matter of the resolution only shall be in order for the consideration of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, the resolution, as modified, will be considered as adopted.

The resolution, as modified, was adopted.

SALE OF KANSAS INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. PHILLIPS, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4810) providing for the sale of Kansas Indian lands in the State of Kansas to actual settlers, and for the disposition of the proceeds of the same; which was recommended and ordered to be printed.

NEW LAND DISTRICT OF WYOMING.

Mr. PHILLIPS also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 3319) to establish a new land district in the Territory of Wyoming; which was recommended and ordered to be printed.

INDEFINITE LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. ROBERT S. HALE, is confined to his bed by illness and will not be able to be out during this session. I therefore ask that he be granted indefinite leave of absence.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

TOBACCO ASSOCIATION OF RICHMOND, VIRGINIA.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, by unanimous consent, presented the memorial of the Tobacco Association of Richmond, Virginia; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN DEPREDACTIONS IN OREGON AND CALIFORNIA.

Mr. NESMITH, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4811) to enable the Secretary of War to pay the expenses incurred by the State of Oregon and the citizens of California in suppressing Indian hostilities in the States of Oregon and California in the years 1872 and 1873; which was read a first and second time, recommended, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RANDALL. The understanding is that it is not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. Of course.

LYDIA CRUGAR.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Claims a bill for the relief of Lydia Crugar, executrix of Moses Shepard, deceased, and ask that it be put on its passage at this time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve objection until the bill has been read.

The bill appropriates $18,124.34 for the payment of judgment rendered in favor of Lydia Crugar, executrix of Moses Shepard, by the Court of Claims, on the 19th of November, 1860, to be paid to said Lydia Crugar or her legal representatives.

Mr. HOLMAN. This bill requires some explanation, and I object.

Mr. BURROWS. I can explain it.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is quite an old claim. I do not object to the gentleman's explanation.

Mr. BURROWS. It is simply to make appropriation for the payment of a judgment of the Court of Claims which has never yet been paid. Bills have heretofore passed the Senate and the House, and this is now reported unanimously from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. RANDALL. Is it in obedience to a judgment of the Court of Claims?

Mr. BURROWS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. This was before the reorganization of the Court of Claims, and it does not stand, therefore, upon the footing of a judgment of that court now stands.

Mr. BURROWS. There is no provision for interest on the amount of that judgment; but it simply provides for the payment of the face of the judgment of the Court of Claims.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

Mr. BURROWS. Then I withdraw the bill.

PAWNEE AND OTTOE LANDS.

Mr. CROUNSE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4812) to provide for the sale of the Pawnee and Otoe Indian lands; which was read a first and second time, recommended, and ordered to be printed.

RHINEHART'S BRONZE FOUNTAIN.

Mr. FRYE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Library, reported as a substitute for the bill H. R. No. 4442, a bill (H. R. No. 4813) to authorize the removal of the bronze fountain by Rhinehart from the lobby of the city post-office; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Joint Committee on the Library to cause the removal of Rhinehart's bronze fountain from the lobby of the city post-office to the Corcoran Art Gallery or to such other place as they may think proper for safe-keeping and exhibition.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRYE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TEXAS PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. HOUGHTON, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, reported back with the recommendation that it do pass, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 4547) amendatory of and supplementary to an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1871, and the act supplementary thereto, approved May 2, 1872, and the act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific Ocean," approved July 27, 1866; and the same was ordered to be printed and recommended, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

REMOVAL OF POLITICAL DISABILITIES.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4814) to relieve Charles H. Smith, M. D., of Richmond, Virginia, of all political disabilities.

The bill was read.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. There is a petition accompanying the bill, and its passage is unanimously recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BECK. I desire to include another person in that bill, and move to amend by adding the name of James M. Hawes, of Covington, Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed; two-thirds having voted in favor thereof.

CAPTURED AND ABANDONED PROPERTY.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4815) to cover into the Treasury certain sums of captured and abandoned property found by adjudication to be the money of the United States; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommended, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

BOUNDARY BETWEEN ARKANSAS AND INDIAN COUNTRY.

On motion of Mr. AVERILL, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 679) to establish the boundary line between the State of Arkansas and the Indian country was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

LEMUEL D. EVANS.

Mr. NIBLACK. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Ways and Means, that it may be now put upon its passage, the bill (S. No. 625) for the relief of Lemuel D. Evans, late a collector of internal revenue for the fourth district of Texas. There is an emergency, both personal and official, why there should be immediate action on this bill.

The bill was read. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury, in adjusting the accounts of Lemuel D. Evans, late collector of internal revenue for the fourth district of Texas, to credit him with the sum of $2,753.18, that being the amount of money collected by his deputy, W. B. McIntyre, at and in the neighborhood of Athens, in said State, and of which he was robbed by highwaymen on the night of May 6, 1869, on his way from Athens to Marshall; provided that it shall appear to the satisfaction of said Secretary that said McIntyre was robbed without any collusion or privity on his part.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NIBLACK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AUBURN, NEW YORK, NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. MAYNARD, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4816) to authorize the consolidation of the Auburn City National Bank and the First National Bank of Auburn, New York; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask that the bill may now be put upon its passage.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does this bill come from the Committee on Banking and Currency?

The SPEAKER. It does.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MAYNARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER.

Mr. SAWYER, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Commerce, reported as a substitute for the House bill No. 2409 a bill (H. R. No. 4817) to authorize the construction of the bridge across the Missouri River at or near Sioux City, Iowa; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. HOLMAN. After this is disposed of I shall call for the regular order.

The bill was read.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SAWYER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the tariff bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will withdraw the demand for the regular order in order to enable some gentlemen to get in matters which they are anxious to bring before the House at this time.

AMERICAN SHIP-BUILDING.

Mr. SCHELL, by unanimous consent, presented the petition of the Board of Trade of New York City, in reference to the promotion of American ship-building; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF EAST RIVER.

Mr. SCHELL also, by unanimous consent, presented joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of New York, in relation to the improvement of the East River; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE HARBOR OF ERIE, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. STORM, by unanimous consent, presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, relative to the improvement of the harbor of Erie, Pennsylvania, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, ordered to be printed, and printed in the RECORD.

The joint resolution is as follows:

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in General Assembly met. That our Senators be instructed, and members of the House of Representatives in Congress be requested, to vote for and use all proper means of securing from Congress an appropriation for the improvement of the harbor of Erie, in this Commonwealth, and that the governor be requested to transmit copies of this resolution to our Senators and Members of Congress.

Attest:

ELBRIDGE MCCONKEY,
Resident Clerk of the House of Representatives.

THOMAS B. COCHRAN,
Journal Clerk of the Senate.

WILLIAM J. MARTIN.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 4121) for the relief of William J. Martin, late paymaster in the United States Army; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

SOLDIERS OF THE MEXICAN WAR.

Mr. WILLIE, by unanimous consent, presented joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Texas, instructing and requesting the congressional delegation to urge upon Congress early and favorable consideration of the claims upon the people's gratitude of those who rendered service in the Army and Navy of the United States in the late war with Mexico; which were referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. KILLINGER. I call for the regular order.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I move to reconsider the various votes taken; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the regular order of business? Would it not be the morning hour, with the call of committees for reports of a private nature?

The SPEAKER. It would be the call of committees, but the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the tariff bill, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAWLEY] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar. This being Friday, the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar takes precedence.

Mr. DAWES. I wish the question so stated that the House will understand that this is a test-vote between the two.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair was endeavoring to do. It is for the House to decide whether they will go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the tariff bill or into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar. This being Friday, it is the duty of the Chair to put the question first upon going into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLMAN. If those motions fail will not the morning hour run, allowing reports to be made from the committees on private business?

The SPEAKER. If the House rejects both the pending motions, then the morning hour will intervene.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. There are more bills now upon the Private Calendar than could be disposed of in the next three months if the House should be so long in session, and it seems to me that it would be a waste of time at this late period of the session for the House to put more bills upon the Private Calendar.

Mr. DAWES. If I can have one hour I will get the tariff bill out of the way.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. If we intend to consider the private bills at all again this session we ought to go into Committee of the Whole to-day and pass them.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let us go into Committee of the Whole on the Army appropriation bill.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois; and on a division there were—ayes 96, noes 69.

Mr. DAWES. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 119, nays 116, not voting 52; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Arther, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Barrere, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Buckner, Bundy, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Caldwell, Canfield, John B. Clark, jr., Freeman Clarke, Clymer, Cook, Crittenden, Crossland, Crutchfield, DeWitt, Donnan, Dunnell, Eames, Eldredge, Farwell, Field, Finck, Frye, Giddings, Glover, Gooch, Gunter, Hagans, Hamilton, Hancock, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Havens, John B. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, Hereford, Herndon, Howe, Hunton, Hynes, Kelley, Kellogg, Knapp, Lamar, Lamison, Lewis, Lofland, Lowe, Luttrell, Marshall, McKee, Milliken, Mills, Morrison, Neal, Nesmith, Niblack, O'Brien, Orr, Orth, Hosea W. Parker, Isaac C. Parker, Pendleton, Perry, Phillips, Pierce Pike, Read, Robbins, James C. Robinson, Henry B. Sayler, Milton Sayler, Schell, Isaac W. Scudder, Sherwood, Sloan, Sloss, Small, J. Ambler Smith, William A. Smith, Snyder, Southard, Standiford, Charles A. Stevens, St. John, Stone, Stowell, Strait, Taylor, Thompson, Todd, Tremain, Vance, Waddell, Wallace, Jasper D. Ward, Wells, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, John M. S. Williams, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wolfe, Wood, Woodworth, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—119.

NAYS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Archer, Averill, Barber, Beck, Bogole, Biery, Bradley, Bromberg, Burlington, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Cain, Cannon, Carpenter, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Clayton, Clements, Stephen A. Cobb, Coburn, Comingo, Conger, Cotton, Cox, Crooke, Danford, Dawes, Duell, Durham, Fort, Foster, Garfield, Gunkel, Eugene Hale, Harner, Harrison, Hatcher, Joseph R. Hawley, Hays, E. Rockwood Hoar, George F. Hoar, Holman, Hoskins, Houghton, Hubbell, Hunter, Huribut, Kasson, Killinger, Lamport, Lansing, Lawrence, Lawson, Loughridge, Lynch, Martin, Maynard, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, Merriam, Monroe, Moore, Myers, Negley, O'Neill, Packard, Packer, Page, Parsons, Poland, Potter, Rainey, Randall, Ray, Richmond, Ellis H. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Ross, Sawyer, Scofield, Sener, Shanks, Shields, Sheldon, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Smart, A. Herr Smith, George L. Smith, H. Boardman Smith, John Q. Smith, Speer, Sprague, Stanard, Starkweather, Storm, Strawbridge, Swann, Christopher Y. Thomas, Thornburgh, Tyner, Waldron, Walls, Marcus L. Ward, Wheeler, White, Whiteley, Charles W. Willard, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, William Williams, William B. Williams, Willie, and James Wilson—116.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Barnum, Barry, Bass, Brown, Cason, Chittenden, Clinton L. Cobb, Corwin, Creamer, Crouse, Curtis, Darrall, Davis, Dobbins, Eden, Freeman, Robert S. Hale, Hathorn, John W. Hazelton, Hendee, Hodges, Hyde, Kendall, Leach, Lowndes, Magee, McCrary, MacDougall, McLean, McNulta, Mitchell, Morey, Niles, Nunn, Pelham, Phelps, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Pratt, Ransier, Rapier, William R. Roberts, Rusk, John G. Schumaker, Henry J. Scudder, Sessions, Alexander H. Stephens, Sypher, Charles R. Thomas, Townsend, Wilber, and Ephraim K. Wilson—52.

So the motion of Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois, was agreed to.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. COX in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the Private Calendar. The Clerk will report the first bill.

RELIEF OF CONSTRUCTORS OF IRON-CLADS.

The first bill on the Private Calendar was the bill, with an amendment, reported from the Committee on War Claims by Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin, being a bill (H. R. No. 217) for the relief of certain contractors for the construction of vessels of war and steam-machinery.

The bill provides that the claims for building vessels of war and constructing steam-machinery referred to and embraced in the act entitled "An act for the relief of certain contractors for the construction of vessels of war and steam-machinery," approved March 2, 1867, shall be referred to the Court of Claims, which is vested with authority and jurisdiction to hear and determine the respective claims of the several parties upon the principles and rules laid down in said act; that all such claims shall be presented to said court within one year after the passage of this act and not afterward, and that any sums heretofore allowed to any of said claimants as additional compensation shall be deducted from any amount which may be found due to such claimants respectively.

The amendment was to add to the bill the following:

Provided, That this act shall not be construed to apply to the claims of Secor & Co.; Perine, Secor & Co.; Harrison Loving; Miles Greenwood; and George C. Bestor, who have already received specific relief by acts of Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the report accompanying this bill be read. There are two reports, a majority and a minority report. I ask that the minority report be read.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I object to the reading of the minority report.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I object to the reading of either report at present.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have the floor, I believe.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.]

Mr. KELLOGG. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KELLOGG. My point of order is that neither the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] nor any one else can ask as a right to have a minority report read. I have no objection to the reading of the minority report; but I insist that, when a member is asking for that which he has no right to insist upon, the majority report should at least be first read.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the majority report be read, and then if any objection is made to reading the minority report, some gentleman can have it read as a portion of his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The reading of the majority report is in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe I have the floor, and I object to the reading of any document in my time for which I have not asked.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] can have the minority report read as a part of his speech. But the majority report should be first read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have not asked for the reading of the majority report.

Mr. KELLOGG. Is the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] first entitled to the floor rather than the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. HAZELTON,] who reported the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana was the first to address the Chair after the bill was read.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. The Chair is mistaken. I was standing on the floor for some time, waiting for the reading of the bill to be concluded.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear the gentleman address him.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I addressed the Chair at least as soon as the gentleman from Indiana did.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HAZELTON] in a moment.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I represent the majority of the committee and the gentleman from Indiana the minority; I claim that I have the first right to be heard upon this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. As that seems to be the courtesy of the House, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will suspend until the gentleman who represents the majority of the committee is heard.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. If it is the desire of the committee to hear the majority report read rather than to proceed with the discussion of the bill, I will not object to its reading.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not object to the reading of the report of the majority.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. The report is somewhat lengthy, and if the majority and minority reports are both read, it will occupy an hour or an hour and a half. I will suggest that by common consent, instead of reading the reports, the committee proceed now to the discussion of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. That requires unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. It does.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the reading of the reports.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I would ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HAZELTON] why the reports were made, if they are not to be read for the information of the committee?

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. They are in print, and can be obtained and read by any member. But I will not object to the report being read now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed to read the report of the majority.

The Clerk read the report of the majority of the committee, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 217) for the relief of certain contractors for the construction of vessels of war and steam-machinery, having considered the same, submit the following report:

By an act of Congress, approved August 3, 1861, the Secretary of the Navy was authorized and directed "to appoint a board of three skillful naval officers to investigate the plans and specifications that may be submitted for the construction or completing of iron or steel clad steamships or steam-batteries, and, on their report, should it be favorable, the Secretary of the Navy will cause one or more armored or iron or steel clad steamships or floating steam-batteries to be built."

Under and pursuant to this law, a board was appointed, consisting of Commodore Joseph Smith, chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks of the Navy Department; Commodore H. Paulding, then waiting orders; and Captain Charles H. Davis, superintendent of the Nautical Almanac, who entered upon the work assigned them, and subsequently made a report, a copy of the material parts of which is appended to and made a part of this report, and marked Appendix A.

Afterward, on the 13th day of February, A. D. 1862, the Secretary of the Navy was "authorized and empowered to cause to be constructed, by contract or otherwise as he shall deem best for the public interest, not exceeding twenty iron-clad steam gun-boats for the use of the Navy of the United States," and the sum of $10,000,000 was appropriated to carry out the provisions of the act.

Under the authority thus conferred, the Secretary of the Navy entered into contracts with divers ship-builders in the different parts of the country for the construction of these vessels. Part of these contracts were made in 1862; others were made in 1863, and some as late as 1864.

The construction of this class of war-vessels was necessarily experimental, as nothing of the kind had ever been attempted or was known to naval warfare prior to the late war of the rebellion. The Government needed such vessels or boats for service on the coast and along the rivers, where the proximity of rebel batteries rendered wooden vessels of little or no value.

The Committee on the Conduct of the War refer to this fact in the following language:

"During the year 1862 the necessity for some light-draught armored vessels for operations on our western rivers and the shallow bays and sounds upon the Atlantic and Gulf coasts became so urgent that the Navy Department determined to provide some for that purpose, if possible.

"Application was made to Mr. John Ericsson, the inventor of the original monitor, for a plan of a light-draught monitor, to carry one turret, and to have a draught of from six to six and a half feet. On the 9th of October, 1862, Mr. Ericsson submitted to the Department a plan which, to use his own words, was not intended as a working plan, yet it defined with clearness and precision the general principle and mode of building the vessel, engines, boilers, and mode of propelling them."

The preparation of calculations and working plans was confided to Chief Engineer Stimers, of the United States Navy. These completed, the Department advertised for proposals, and thereafter, to wit, in the months of March, April, and May, 1862, contracts for the construction of twenty light-draught monitors, upon the plan furnished by the Government, were entered into. The bidders were limited to those who had all the needed preparations for entering upon and prosecuting the work, and it was required that a time should be stated within which the bidders would agree to complete their contracts.

This statement of facts will apply substantially to all the contracts entered into by the Navy Department for the construction of iron-clad vessels, except that the later contracts contained a provision not in the earlier ones, to the effect following:

That the parties of the second part shall have the privilege of making alterations and additions to the plans and specifications at any time during the progress of the work, as they may deem necessary and proper, and if said alterations and additions shall cause extra expense to the parties of the first part, they will pay for the same at fair and reasonable rates, and should such changes cause less work and expense to the parties of the first part, a corresponding reduction to be made from the contract-price, and in each case the cost of the alterations to be determined when the changes are directed to be made.

It turned out that the plans and specifications of the Navy Department were in whole or in part worthless, in consequence of which it became necessary to make radical changes in the plans and method of construction.

Mr. Stimers himself says, in speaking of one of the contracts, "Acts, therefore, which I performed which affected Mr. Bestor, and affect his case, were to direct him to make a different vessel from the one we contracted to do."

What is true of this particular case is also true of all the cases covered by the aforesaid bill. The naval officers and engineers doubtless did the best they could. The simple truth is, they did not know, and could not know, what would be the result of their endeavors. The effort was, as we have said, an experiment—just as much an experiment as the trials made with the Dahlgren and Wiard guns, upon which vast sums of money were expended.

The parties making these contracts were not acting on plans and specifications of their own; they were essaying to carry out the plans of the Government, and this under the supervision of an engineer of the Navy Department. They did not, therefore, occupy the attitude of parties who had procured contracts from the Government on plans and propositions submitted by themselves upon the implied understanding that the work would prove a success.

The changes made by the Navy Department necessarily occasioned delay in the execution of the contracts, during which a large advance occurred in the cost of all or nearly all the materials used and in the value of labor required for the completion of the contracts.

Certain allowances were made to these contractors by the Navy Department, but it is claimed that these allowances were predicated in every instance on the scale of prices embraced in the several contracts, the Department not feeling authorized to go any further than that in affording relief; and that, in point of fact, no compensation has been made for losses growing out of the large advance in the cost of materials and labor and the fair rental value of the premises and machinery of the contractors, which remained idle and entirely unavailable while awaiting the orders of the Navy Department.

These constitute, as it is understood, the items on which these claims are predicated. The ground of these claims may be rendered plainer, perhaps, by statement in another form.

When the contracts were entered into iron was worth, say, $65 per ton, and skilled labor, say, $2.50 per day. Pending the delays caused by the officers of the Government, changing and rechanging the plans, iron advanced to $220 per ton, and labor to $4 per day.

It is claimed that the allowance made by the Department for additional iron and labor was limited to the scale of prices first mentioned, and that no allowance was made for increase in cost of materials and labor, or for the use of yards, shops, machinery, &c., while idle and unemployed.

If so, then it would seem clear that the parties have a just and meritorious claim upon the Government for relief; but it is not necessary to decide that.

The bill under consideration does not decide that. It only provides that these parties may go into the Court of Claims, a court eminently qualified to make the investigation, and to see that no wrong is practiced upon the Government, and have these matters judicially and fairly investigated and determined, subject to the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. There the evidence, pro and con, can be submitted, and the several claims left to abide the result. It seems to us the Government can do no less. If the parties have an honest and meritorious demand, they should have the right to show it; if not, let it be so adjudged, and the controversy ended.

We ought not, perhaps, to close this report without stating that some of this class of claimants have already received specific relief by act of Congress, and that the action of Congress and the committees of each branch of Congress has been uniformly and without exception favorable to the principles of this bill.

In this connection we may be pardoned for a brief statement on this behalf.

On the 9th of March, 1865, the Senate adopted the following resolution: "Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to organize a board of not less than three competent persons, whose duty it shall be to inquire into and determine how much the vessels of war and steam-machinery contracted for by the Department in the years 1862 and 1863 cost the contractors over and above the contract price and allowance for extra work, and report the same to the Senate at its next session; none but those that have given satisfaction to the Department to be considered."

Under the foregoing resolution the Secretary of the Navy organized a board of naval officers, known as the Selfridge board, which convened at the navy-yard in New York June 5, 1865, and thoroughly investigated the whole subject, concluding their examination, after a seven months' session, when they made report thereof to the Secretary of the Navy.

The Senate Committee on Naval Affairs of the Thirty-ninth Congress reported a bill which adopted in full the awards of the Selfridge board as a basis of relief. The Senate, after long discussion, adopted an amendment paying all contractors 12 per cent. over and above their contract price. The House Committee on Claims unanimously rejected this Senate bill, upon the ground that while certain of these contractors would receive less than the amount claimed and in some cases more, other contractors would receive less than the amount of their losses, and that consequently the Senate bill was not an equitable basis of relief.

It therefore reported a substitute for the Senate bill, and a conference committee finally agreed upon a bill which became the act of March 2, 1867.

That act directed the Secretary of the Navy to investigate the claims of all contractors for building vessels of war and steam-machinery under contracts made after May 1, 1861, and before January 1, 1864, upon the following basis:

He was to ascertain the additional cost which was necessarily incurred by each contractor in the completion of his work by reason of any changes or alterations in the plans and specifications required and delays in the prosecution of the work occasioned by the Government which were not provided for in the original contract; but no allowance for any advance in the price of labor or material was to be considered unless such advance occurred during the prolonged time for completing the work rendered necessary by the delay resulting from the action of the Government aforesaid, and then, only when such advance could not have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary prudence and diligence on the part of the contractor; and from such additional cost, to be ascertained as aforesaid, was to be deducted the sum previously paid each contractor for any reason, over and above the contract price.

Under that act the Secretary of the Navy convened the "Marchand board," which held its sessions in Washington. It reviewed the report and evidence before the "Selfridge board" without, however, permitting the contractors to be heard in their own behalf, or to rebut the adverse testimony or report of any Government official.

Had this Marchand board conducted such an inquiry as was in our judgment contemplated by that act and according to the well-settled and established principles of law governing such investigations, a settlement of this matter would doubtless have been reached equitable alike to the Government and these claimants, and Congress thereby relieved of the trouble and expense of subsequent investigations by various committees.

Pursuing the investigation in the manner which the Marchand board prescribed for itself, awards were made to but seven of the forty-nine claimants, and these were paid under the act of July 13, 1868.

A bill passed the Forty-first Congress for the relief of these claimants, which was properly vetoed by the President on the ground that it was a departure from the basis fixed by the act of March 2, 1867.

The bill reported by your committee, as amended, obviates the objections raised to that bill, and simply authorizes a judicial investigation upon the basis of the act of March 2, 1867.

In the Forty-second Congress these cases were again considered by committees of both Houses and received favorable action, the House Committee on Claims reporting upon each case separately, instead of making provision for all by a general bill.

Seven of these cases passed the House in the latter part of the third session, one only passing the Senate and becoming a law; and that case is now under investigation by the Court of Claims.

The last Congress also passed a bill to pay the heirs of George C. Bestor, of Illinois, the sum of $125,000, "for extra work done, delays, and damages and expenses caused by such delays, on the part of the Navy Department, in the completion of his contract for the construction of an iron-clad steam-battery," (see 17 Statutes at Large, 733); and, as illustrating the narrow scope of investigation to which the Marchand board held it was restricted, it may be stated that it awarded Mr. Bestor, whose claim was before it, nothing.

The committee therefore report back the bill with the following amendment: Provided, That this act shall not be construed to apply to the claims of Secor & Co., Perrine, Secor & Co., Harrison Loring, Miles Greenwood, and George C. Bestor, who have already received specific relief by act of Congress; and as thus amended recommend its passage.

APPENDIX A.

Distrustful of our ability to discharge this duty, which the law requires should be performed by three skillful naval officers, we approach the subject with diffidence, having no experience and but scanty knowledge in this branch of naval architecture.

The plans submitted are so various, and in many respects so entirely dissimilar, that without a more thorough knowledge of this mode of construction and the resisting properties of iron than we possess, it is very likely that some of our conclusions may prove erroneous.

The construction of iron-clad steamships of war is now zealously claiming the attention of foreign naval powers. France led off; England followed, and is now (September 16, 1861) somewhat extensively engaged in the system; and other powers seem to emulate their example, though on a smaller scale. Opinions differ among naval and scientific men as to the policy of adopting the iron armature for ships of war. For coast and harbor defense they are undoubtedly formidable adjuncts to fortifications on land. As cruising vessels, however, we are skeptical as to their advantages and ultimate adoption. But, while other nations are endeavoring to perfect them, we must not remain idle. The enormous load of iron as so much additional weight to the vessel, the great breadth of beam necessary to give her stability, the short supply of coal she will be able to stow in bunkers, the greater power required to propel her, and the largely increased cost of construction, are objections to this class of vessels as cruisers which we believe it is difficult successfully to overcome. For river and harbor services we consider iron-clad vessels of light draught or floating batteries thus shielded as very important; and we feel at this moment the necessity of them on some of our rivers and inlets to enforce obedience to the laws. We, however, do not hesitate to express the opinion, notwithstanding all we have heard or seen written on the subject, that no ship or floating battery, however heavily she may be plated, can cope successfully with a properly constructed fortification of masonry. The one is fixed and immovable, and, though constructed of a material which may be shattered by shot, can be covered if need be by the same or much heavier armor than a floating vessel can bear, while the other is subject to disturbances by winds and waves, and to the powerful effects of tides and currents.

Armored ships or batteries may be employed advantageously to pass fortifications on land for ulterior objects of attack, to run a blockade, or to reduce temporary batteries on the shores of rivers and the approaches to our harbors.

Wooden ships may be said to be but coffins for their crews when brought in contact with iron-clad vessels; but the speed of the former, we take for granted, being greater than that of the latter, they can readily choose their position, and keep out of harm's way entirely.

It has been suggested that the most ready mode of obtaining an iron-clad ship of war would be to contract with responsible parties in England for its complete construction; and we are assured that parties there are ready to engage in such an enterprise on terms more reasonable, perhaps, than such vessels could be built in this country, having much greater experience and facilities than we possess. Indeed, we are informed there are no mills or machinery in this country capable of rolling iron four and a half inches thick, though plates might be hammered to that thickness in many of our workshops. As before observed, rolled iron is considered much the best, and the difficulty of rolling it increases rapidly with the increase of thickness. It has, however, occurred to us that a difficulty might arise with the British government in case we should undertake to construct ships of war in that country, which might complicate their delivery; and, moreover, we are of opinion that every people or nation who can maintain a navy should be capable of constructing it themselves.

Our immediate demands seem to require first, so far as practicable, vessels invulnerable to shot, of light draught of water, to penetrate our shoal harbors, rivers, and bays. We therefore favor the construction of this class of vessels before going into a more perfect system of large iron-clad sea-going vessels of war. We are here met with the difficulty of encumbering small vessels with armor which, from their size, they are unable to bear. We nevertheless recommend that contracts be made with responsible parties for the construction of one or more iron-clad vessels or batteries of as light a draught of water as practicable, consistent with their weight of armor. Meanwhile, availing of the experience thus obtained, and the improvements which we believe are yet to be made by other naval powers in building iron-clad ships, we would advise the construction in our own dock-yards of one or more of these vessels upon a large and more perfect scale when Congress shall see fit to authorize it. The amount now appropriated is not sufficient to build both classes of vessels to any great extent.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. If it is desired that the minority report be read, I suggest that it be read now, omitting the tables of figures, which would occupy a long time, and which, I suppose, it is not desired should be read. I ask the gentleman from Indiana whether he desires that those tables should be read?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not know that I desire the reading of the entire report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed to read the minority report, omitting the tables, if there be no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the reading of the minority report come out of my time?

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I do not understand that the gentleman has any time yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair not having a Calendar before him, did not know who reported this bill. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HAZELTON] was entitled by courtesy to be first recognized. The Chair will assign the floor to the gentleman from Indiana when the gentleman from Wisconsin has yielded the floor.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. If the floor is assigned to me at the present time I will proceed with the discussion of the bill, unless the Committee of the Whole desire that the minority report, omitting the tables, be now read and that then the discussion proceed. I should be very glad to have that course taken, if I do not thereby lose the floor.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest the minority report be now read, with the understanding that it does not come out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I think that would be entirely satisfactory.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the minority report, omitting the tables, will now be read, and the time thus occupied will not be deducted from the time of any gentleman.

There being no objection, the Clerk proceeded to read the report; which is as follows:

MESSES. LAWRENCE, HOLMAN, JAMES WILSON, and A. HERR SMITH, from the Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred bill (H. R. No. 217) for the relief of certain contractors for the construction of vessels of war and steam-machinery, submit the following as the views of the minority:

The execution and completion of the several contracts for the construction of the vessels and machinery referred to in the pending bill covers a period extending from the 16th day of May, 1862, to the 3d day of February, 1865.

It appears that while the contracts in each case provided for the payment of a specific sum of money to the contractors by the United States, modifications were subsequently made of the plans of construction of the several works, which in some degree delayed the completion of the contracts and the cost of the work, and the duty devolved on the Government not only to pay the original sum stipulated for in each contract, but such additional sum as the contractors should be fairly entitled to in consequence of such modifications. These contracts were made under the laws by the Secretary of the Navy, were to be fulfilled under the supervision and inspection of the Navy Department, and upon that Department, from the nature of the contracts, the experience and the intimate knowledge of its officers in the details of the work, and their constant supervision of its execution, devolved the duty of adjusting the claims of these contractors upon the Government on the completion of their contracts.

The undersigned find that each of these contractors submitted to the Secretary of the Navy claims for extra compensation for the work done by them in fulfilling these contracts; that upon each contract an extra compensation was allowed by the Secretary of the Navy, less, however, than the amount claimed, and that the original sum stipulated for in each contract and the additional sum which the Secretary of the Navy decided each of the contractors entitled to was paid by the Department to the respective contractors and was received by them.

The aggregate sum contracted to be paid to these several parties for the vessels and machinery, the contracts for the construction of which are covered by the pending bill, is the sum of $14,301,000, and the aggregate of the extra sums allowed by the Secretary of the Navy on these contracts is the sum of $5,302,847.91.

These parties now ask the passage of an act to confer upon the Court of Claims jurisdiction to open up and readjust their respective claims for extra compensation under these contracts.

The undersigned believe that common justice to the whole people requires that the jurisdiction of a tribunal organized to determine questions of law or fact between citizens and their Government should be uniform and equally applicable to all; and that if exceptions should be allowed to this general rule, it should be to enable the citizen and the Government to obtain the legal interpretation of an ambiguous contract or the determination of questions of fact and of law where the subject-matter was not within the immediate supervision of either of the Departments of the Government. The contracts involved in this inquiry are clear and specific, and the facts connected with the execution of each contract your committee find were in detail before the Navy Department, when the claims for the extra allowances were considered by the Secretary of the Navy and the extra allowances made. Each contract was under the supervision of an agent of the Department, who made bi-weekly reports on the progress of the work to the Department.

The undersigned are impressed with the belief that under ordinary circumstances a Department of Government is the proper tribunal to adjust the claims of citizens growing out of contracts made through such Department in matters which by law are placed under its control, and for which its chief and his subordinates are held responsible. With this view and to aid in securing justice alike to the citizen and the Government, the Department of Justice is charged with the duty of advising the heads of the other Departments touching the law. In the determination of such matters a Department of the Government has the same motive for good faith and impartiality that should actuate a court of justice.

On account of the magnitude of these transactions, after the adjustment of these claims by the Navy Department, Congress thought proper to require a re-examination of them by the Secretary of the Navy, and passed the following act, which was approved on the 2d day of March, 1867:

An act for the relief of certain contractors for the construction of vessels of war and steam-machinery.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the claims of all contractors for building vessels of war and steam-machinery for the same under contracts made after the 1st day of May, 1861, and prior to the 1st day of January, 1864, and said investigation to be made upon the following basis: He shall ascertain the additional cost which was necessarily incurred by each contractor in the completion of his work by reason of any changes or alterations in the plans and specifications required and delays in the prosecution of the work occasioned by the Government, which were not provided for in the original contract; but no allowance for any advance in the price of labor or material shall be considered, unless such advance occurred during the prolonged time for completing the work rendered necessary by the delay resulting from the action of the Government aforesaid, and then only when such advance could not have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary prudence and diligence on the part of the contractor; and from such additional cost, to be ascertained as aforesaid, there shall be deducted such sum as may have been paid each contractor for any reason heretofore over and above the contract price; and shall report to Congress a tabular statement of each case, which shall contain the name of the contractor, a description of the work, the contract price, the whole increased cost of the work over the contract price, and the amount of such increased cost caused by the delay and action of the Government as aforesaid, and the amount already paid the contractor over and above the contract price: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy, under the resolution, shall investigate the claim of W. H. Webb for constructing the steamer Dunderberg, applying the provisions of this resolution in such investigation, except that proper consideration shall be given to the increased cost incurred by said Webb by reason of any alteration in the plans and specifications for the Dunderberg made during the progress of the work, whether such alterations were provided for in the original contract or not, when payment for the same was not embraced in the contract price.

Approved March 2, 1867.

Tabular statement showing the result of the action of the board appointed July 6, 1867, by the honorable Secretary of the Navy, to "examine the claims of certain contractors for the construction of vessels of war and steam-machinery," under act of Congress approved March 2, 1867.

Name of contractor.	Description of work.	Contract price.	Whole increased cost of the work over the contract price, as claimed by the contractors.	Amount of such increased cost caused by the delay and action of the Government, as determined by the board to be due.	Amount already paid the contractors over and above the contract price. (Obtained from the Bureau.)
Secor & Co. and Perine, Secor & Co.	River and harbor monitors Manhattan, Tecumseh, and Mahopac	$1,380,000 00	$1,236,101 22	$115,539 01	$521,195 58
Alexander Swift & Co.	River and harbor monitors Oneota and Catawba	920,000 00	665,757 22		322,849 08
Snowden & Mason	River and harbor monitor Manayunk	460,000 00	339,025 00		166,582 24
Miles Greenwood	River and harbor monitor Tippecanoe	460,000 00	349,455 33		173,327 84
Harrison Loring	River and harbor monitor Canonie	460,000 00	267,709 40	38,513 00	102,963 22
J. B. & W. W. Cornell	Turrets, &c., Miantonomoh and Tonawanda	232,050 00	461,777 72		292,657 93
Atlantic Works, Boston	Turrets, &c., Monadnock and Agamenticus	265,000 00	427,323 64		280,322 18
Charles W. Whitney	Iron-clad Keokuk*
Snowden & Mason	Light-draught monitor Umquac	395,000 00	346,457 46		166,582 24
Merrick & Sons	Light-draught monitor Yazoo	395,000 00	234,676 14		175,725 19
Wilcox & Whiting	Light-draught monitor Koka	386,000 00	305,425 21		165,638 53
Donald McKay	Light-draught monitor Nauset	386,000 00	314,768 93		192,110 98
William Perine	Light-draught monitor Naubac	395,000 00	287,470 93		127,440 00
A. & W. Denmead & Sons	Light-draught monitor Wamsaw	395,000 00	321,360 91		198,587 32
George C. Bestor	Light-draught monitor Shiloh	386,000 00	364,073 55		207,311 00
Atlantic Works, Boston	Light-draught monitor Casco	395,000 00	234,067 78	4,852 58	132,702 57
Curtis & Tilden	Light-draught monitor Shawnee	386,000 00	333,138 20		196,319 70
C. W. McCord	Light-draught monitor Etah	386,000 00	364,073 55		207,311 00
McKay & Aldus	Light-draught monitor Squando	395,000 00	337,329 46		194,535 70
George W. Lawrence	Light-draught monitor Wassuc	386,000 00	210,069 62		169,815 37
Aquilla Adams	Light-draught monitor Chimo	395,000 00	377,243 20	4,852 58	225,445 52
Alexander Swift & Co.	Light-draught monitors Klamath and Ruma	780,000 00	678,446 34		415,970 68
M. F. Merritt	Light-draught monitor Cohoes	395,000 00	318,735 99	4,852 58	201,968 28
J. O. Underhill	Light-draught monitor Modoc	395,000 00	214,435 72		127,669 35
Tomlinson, Hartapee & Co	River monitors Sandusky and Marietta	376,000 00	314,850 36	15,171 00	94,079 14
Donald McKay	Iron double-ender Ashuelot	275,000 00	81,447 50		22,415 92
T. F. Rowland	Iron double-ender Muscoota	275,000 00	71,505 21		21,642 83
Zeno Secor	Iron double-ender Mohongo	275,000 00	84,144 13		32,882 23
Harrison Loring	Iron double-ender Winnepeg	275,000 00	70,443 16		23,132 24
Paul Curtis	Wooden double-ender Chicopee	75,000 00	20,292 96		5,739 85
George W. Lawrence	Wooden double-enders Agawam and Pontoosuc	150,000 00	50,987 95		10,377 00
Larabee & Allen	Wooden double-ender Iosco	75,000 00	25,914 90		7,368 68
Edward Lupton	Wooden double-ender Lenape	75,000 00	70,493 94		5,923 48
Daniel S. Mershon, jr.	Wooden double-ender Mingo	75,000 00	31,593 34
J. J. Abrahams	Wooden double-ender Etaw	$75,000 00	$17,412 66		$200 00
Curtis & Tilden	Wooden double-ender Massasoit	75,000 00	17,398 82		4,918 41
Daniel S. Mershon, jr.	Wooden double-ender Cimarron*
Thomas Stack	Wooden double-ender Port Royal	100,000 00	20,758 79		57 00
A. & G. T. Sampson	Wooden double-ender Mattabessett	75,000 00	20,377 49		3,723 30
Curtis & Tilden	Wooden double-ender Osceola	75,000 00	16,225 63		4,485 41
F. Z. Tucker	Wooden double-ender Mendota	75,000 00	25,398 71		4,631 53
Thomas Stack	Wooden double-ender Metacomet	75,000 00	27,769 80		4,081 27
J. Simonson	Wooden double-ender Chenango	75,000 00	19,969 98		3,523 17
Globe Works, Boston	Steam-machinery of ship Guerriero	400,000 00	30,508 02		14,149 27
William Perine	Iron tug Triana	128,000 00	47,773 22		5,142 22
William Perine	Iron tug Maria	80,000 00	31,049 88
Poole & Hunt	Machinery of wooden double-ender Mackinaw	82,000 00	11,844 96	$3,694 81	943 89
J. P. Morris, Towne & Co.	Machinery of wooden double-ender Tacony	82,000 00	27,518 57		8,494 57
Total		14,201,000 00	10,184,592 50	157,475 55	5,302,847 91

* Not considered as within the province of the board.

† Not considered as within the province of the board.

J. B. MARCHAND,
Commodore and President of Board.
J. W. KING,
Chief Engineer and Member of Board.
EDWARD FOSTER,
Paymaster and Member of Board.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., November 26, 1867.

Letter of the Secretary of the Navy, communicating report of the board appointed July 6, 1867, to "examine the claims of certain contractors for the construction of vessels of war and steam-machinery," under act of Congress approved March 2, 1867.—December 4, 1867. Read, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, December 4, 1867.

SIR: An act of Congress approved on the 2d of March last directs the Secretary of the Navy "to investigate the claims of all contractors for building vessels of war and steam-machinery for the same, under contracts made after the 1st day of May, 1861, and prior to the 1st day of January, 1864," and to "report to Congress a tabular statement of each case, which shall contain the name of the contractor, a description of the work, the contract price, the whole increased cost of the work

To carry this act into effect the Secretary of the Navy, on the 6th of July, 1867, appointed a board consisting of three officers of the Navy, including its chief engineer.

These claims were before the board in detail, as also such information as the records of the Department furnished, including correspondence and the reports made from time to time to the Department by its agent charged with the superintendence of each work of the progress of the same. One member of the board at least was personally familiar with the facts involved in these inquiries by reason of his official relations with the execution of the several contracts.

The important inquiry, being the same raised in the first instance and on which the extra allowances had been made, was "what was the increased cost of the vessel or machinery caused by the action of the Government?" This was clearly the proper inquiry. These parties were certainly entitled to demand and receive from the Government the contract price for their vessels and machinery; and any increase of the cost to them of the vessels or machinery occasioned by the action of the Government, the Government was bound to pay. This was the real inquiry which the act of March 2, 1867, directed the Secretary of the Navy to make. It furnished the basis on which the Secretary of the Navy had in the first instance allowed and paid the extra compensation to the amount of $5,302,847.91.

This board made their report, which was transmitted to Congress by the Secretary of the Navy, and which is embodied in the following table:

over the contract price, and the amount of such increased cost caused by the delay and action of the Government aforesaid, and the amount already paid the contractor over and above the contract price."

To comply with the requirements of this act, it became necessary to convene a board of officers for the examination of the several claims presented. Commodore J. B. Marchand, Chief Engineer J. W. King, and Paymaster Edward Foster were assigned to this duty, and their report is herewith transmitted.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

GIDEON WELLS,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. BENJAMIN F. WADE,
President pro tempore of the Senate.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, November 26, 1867.

SIR: We have the honor to report that, in obedience to your order of July 6, 1867, we have carefully scrutinized each of the claims presented under the act of Congress approved March 2, 1867, "to investigate the claims of certain contractors for building vessels of war and steam-machinery," and respectfully beg leave to inclose herewith the tabular statement called for by said act of Congress.

Messrs. Harlan & Hollingsworth, of Wilmington, Delaware, did not present a statement of their claim for delays occasioned by the Government while constructing the harbor and river monitor Saugus and light-draught monitor Napa; but in a letter to you, under date of October 12, they claim to be entitled to the same sum for the Saugus that the board may award to the Tecumseh, and also to the same sum in case of the Napa that may be awarded to the Casco.

After examination, the board finds that Messrs. Harlan & Hollingsworth are entitled for the Saugus to the same sum that was awarded to Mr. Harrison Loring in case of the Canonieus, namely, $38,513, but do not find anything due in case of the Napa.

We have the honor, sir, to be, very respectfully, your obedient servants,
J. B. MARCHAND,
Commodore and President.
J. W. KING,
Chief Engineer and Member.
EDWARD FOSTER,
Paymaster and Member.

Hon. GIDEON WELLES,
Secretary of the Navy.

It will be seen that this board found that there was no increase of the cost of constructing the vessels and machinery involved in this inquiry occasioned by the action of the Government, except in seven instances, and Congress in the passage of the act entitled "An act for the relief of certain Government contractors," approved July 13, 1868, (Statutes at Large, volume 15, page 379,) seems to have ratified the action of the board.

It is proper that the undersigned should bring, in this connection, to the attention of the House the fact that prior to the passage of the act of March 2, 1867, under which the said board was organized, the Senate had on the 9th of March, 1866, passed the following resolution, namely:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to organize a board of not less than three competent persons, whose duty it shall be to inquire into and determine how much the vessels of war and steam-machinery contracted for by the Department in the years 1862 and 1863 cost the contractors over and above the contract price and allowance for extra work, and report the same to the Senate at its next session; none but those that have given satisfaction to the Department to be considered.

Under this resolution of the Senate a board of three officers of the Navy, including its chief engineer, was appointed, whose action is embodied in the following tables submitted with their report, namely:

DECEMBER 23, 1865—10 o'clock a. m.

The board met pursuant to adjournment; all the members present.

The proceedings of yesterday were read over.

The board, after a critical examination of the bills of cost presented by the several contractors for vessels and steam-machinery contracted for in the years 1862 and 1863, who have appeared and made sworn statements, has determined the excess of cost in the several cases, over and above the contract price and allowance for extra work, to be as follows:

DOUBLE-ENDERS, WOODEN HULLS.

Name of vessel.	Contractor.	Excess of cost determined by board.
Iosco.....	Larrabee & Allen.....	$11,708 97
Agawam.....	G. W. Lawrence.....	8,610 77
Pontoosuc.....	G. W. Lawrence.....	8,610 77
Massasoit.....	Curtis & Tilden.....	4,128 29
Osceola.....	Curtis & Tilden.....	4,128 29
Chickopee.....	Paul Curtis.....	4,128 39
Mattabesett.....	A. & G. S. Sampson.....	4,015 38
Metacomet.....	Thomas Stack & Co.....	16,351 36
Chenango.....	J. Simonson.....	16,441 81
Lenapee.....	Ed. Lupton.....	18,576 52
Mendota.....	F. Z. Tucker.....	14,473 84
Mingoe.....	D. S. Mershon.....	11,500 00
Wyalusing.....	C. H. & W. M. Cramp.....	3,831 93
Eutaw.....	J. J. Abrahams.....	12,576 10
Pontiac.....	Hillman & Streaker.....	5,041 22
Total.....		144,123 84

WOODEN DOUBLE-ENDERS—MACHINERY.

Iosco.....	Globe Works.....	$29,789 00
Massasoit.....	Globe Works.....	29,789 99
Agawam.....	Portland Locomotive Company.....	40,433 73
Pontoosuc.....	Portland Locomotive Company.....	40,433 73
Mattabesett.....	Allaire Works.....	25,119 07
Shamrock.....	Allaire Works.....	25,119 06
Chickopee.....	Neptune Works.....	20,331 81
Tallapoosa.....	Neptune Works.....	20,331 80
Ascutey.....	Morgan Works.....	25,826 34
Chenango.....	Morgan Works.....	25,826 33
Otsego.....	Fulton Works.....	22,366 61
Metacomet.....	South Brooklyn Works.....	30,617 75
Mendota.....	South Brooklyn Works.....	30,617 75
Lenapee.....	Washington Works.....	29,161 24
Mingoe.....	Posey, Jones & Co.....	5,817 36
Wyalusing.....	Posey, Jones & Co.....	5,817 37
Pontiac.....	Neale & Levy.....	22,434 50
Mackinaw.....	Poole & Hunt.....	44,015 84
Osceola.....	Atlantic Works.....	20,513 73
Massasoit.....	Atlantic Works.....	20,513 72
Pooria.....	Etna Works.....	61,732 51
Pawtuxet.....	Gardner & Lake.....	35,325 74
Total.....		614,974 91

IRON DOUBLE-ENDERS—HULL AND MACHINERY.

Name of vessel.	Contractor.	Excess of cost determined by board.
Suwanee.....	Reany, Son & Archbold.....	$28,974 18
Waterloo.....	Reany, Son & Archbold.....	34,161 63
Shamokin.....	Reany, Son & Archbold.....	33,992 97
Muscoota.....	T. F. Rowland.....	82,460 95
Winnipeg.....	Harrison Loring.....	63,715 41
Mohongo.....	Zeno Secor & Co.....	113,543 78
Total.....		356,848 92

IRON-CLAD—MACHINERY.

Miantonomoh.....	Novelty Works.....	$35,832 04
------------------	--------------------	-------------

IRON TUG-BOATS—HULL AND MACHINERY.

Pilgrim.....	Posey, Jones & Co.....	$4,793 38
Triana.....	William Perine.....	52,472 81
Maria.....	William Perine.....	43,586 98
Total.....		100,853 17

IRON-CLAD PROPELLERS—HULL AND MACHINERY.

Milwaukee.....	James B. Eads.....	$30,438 24
Winnebago.....	James B. Eads.....	29,174 20
Total.....		59,613 04

IRON-CLAD—HULL AND MACHINERY.

Onondaga.....	G. W. Quintard.....	$85,203 91
---------------	---------------------	-------------

HARBOR AND RIVER MONITORS—HULL AND MACHINERY.

Tecumseh.....	Z. & F. Secor.....	$119,020 57
Mahopac.....	Z. & F. Secor.....	119,020 57
Manhattan.....	W. Perine, Z. F. Secor.....	119,020 57
Catawba.....	Alex. Swift & Co.....	114,069 94
Oneota.....	Alex. Swift & Co.....	114,069 94
Manayunk.....	Snowden & Mason.....	71,569 42
Total.....		656,651 01

LIGHT-DRAUGHT MONITOR—HULL AND MACHINERY.

Naubuck.....	William Perine.....	$36,533 44
--------------	---------------------	-------------

Comanche.—Donahue, Ryan & Secor, $179,993.80.

In the case of the Comanche there is an additional sum of $96,550 now in the courts, which the contractors consider as a part of the cost of the vessel, but which the board have not embraced in their award.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

THOS. O. SELFIDGE,
Commodore and President of Board.
MONTGOMERY FLETCHER,
Chief Engineer.
CHAS. H. ELDREDGE,
Paymaster.

Hon. GIDEON WELLES,
Secretary of the Navy.

It will be observed that this resolution, under which this board was organized, required the board "to inquire into and determine how much the vessels of war and steam-machinery cost the contractors over and above the contract price and allowances for extra work."

The undersigned submit that the information and conclusions furnished on this basis were of no practical value; and that for that reason the true and just basis of adjustment was laid down by the act of March 2, 1867, namely, "the increased cost occasioned by the action of the Government."

To indicate the nature of the inquiry under the Senate resolution, the committee submit all the testimony taken by this board, as reported by them, touching certain of these claims, namely:

"Appeared before the board Gustavus Rieker, resident of Cincinnati, Ohio, and authorized agent of Alexander Swift & Co. and the Niles Works, on the part of said firm and works, contractors for the harbor and river monitors Catawba and Oneota. Under oath states that the contracts for these vessels were dated by the Navy Department respectively September 15, 1862, and October 13, 1862, in which they were allowed six months from the date of contract to complete and deliver them to the Government; but they were not so completed and delivered until on or about the 1st of June, 1865. This delay was caused by alterations being made by order of the Department and the scarcity of labor. The excess of cost is accounted for in being obliged to raise the vessels eighteen inches, extensive alterations in turrets, and increased size of boilers over stipulations of contract; that the total cost, including bill for extra work paid in full by the Government, namely, $322,849, was $1,470,865.88; that the contract price paid for both vessels was $920,000; received for extra work, $332,849; total received, $1,242,849—leaving a balance, the excess of cost to them over and above the contract price, of $228,019.88; that there is no charge in the bill (annexed to this record, marked No. 26) for any condemned material or faulty workmanship, and that it shows the actual cost of labor and material.

"Appeared before the board Zeno Secor, one of the firm of Secor & Company, and Perine, Secor & Company, contractors for the iron-clads Mahopac, Tecumseh, and Manhattan; and also appeared James F. Secor, employé of said firms. Under oath they state that the contracts for these vessels were dated by the Navy Department September 1, 1862, in which they were allowed six months, or until March 1, 1863, to complete and deliver them to the Government, but the Tecumseh was not so completed and delivered until March 28, 1864; the Manhattan until May 23, 1864, and the Mahopac until August 20, 1864. The cause of this delay was owing to alterations and additions to original specifications required by the Department; that the total cost of hull and machinery, including bills of extra work, was $2,270,447.63; received from the Department on contract price, $1,371,836.55; reserved by Government on contract, for patent fees, $8,163.45; received for extra work, $516,218.41; total amount received, $1,888,054.96—leaving a balance, excess of cost to them over and above contract price, of $382,392.67. That the excess of cost over and above contract price is mainly due to alterations and additions made, and the rise in price of material and labor; that there is no charge in the bills annexed to this record, marked No. 33, for any condemned material or faulty workmanship, and that it shows the actual cost of labor and material."

The undersigned have not deemed it necessary to inquire whether on the one hand these contracts, as finally executed and fulfilled, were of value to the Government, or on the other whether, independent of the action of the Government, the contracts resulted in loss to the contractors. While it is to be regretted that any enterprise involving the industry of the country, whether entered upon under contract with the Government or otherwise, should result in loss, the undersigned are of the opinion that the Government, like other contracting parties, should only be expected to carry out its contracts in good faith; and your committee submit that this rule is imperatively demanded by a sound public policy. They further submit that while to enforce contracts against itself it was clearly the part of a wise and just government to open to its citizens a tribunal of justice, at the same time a law of limitation of actions—a statute of repose, such as would be deemed reasonable as between citizens—should for obvious reasons be applied in behalf of the Government.

Among the reasons, therefore, against these claims are the following:

1. These claimants have already been heard, their demands investigated again and again by the officers authorized by law, in the mode prescribed when their claims originated, and since, in pursuance of a special act of Congress in their favor, in the mode which they accepted.

The awards made in their favor cannot be disregarded and new demands sanctioned without impeaching the intelligence, fidelity, or justice of the officers who have already passed on these claims.

2. These contractors and claimants are men of more than ordinary intelligence and business capacity. They had a right by law to sue in the Court of Claims when all the facts could be readily ascertained. They did not do so. Now, Government officers who may be presumed to have had full knowledge of the facts, have in part died, or gone out of office, or are no longer accessible, or have forgotten many facts which may be material to protect the Government. Where this is the case there is much more reason and justice for saying claims barred by the statute of limitations should remain barred, than in actions between living individual persons, whose interests will more certainly secure the memory and evidence of material facts better than in the case of a Government whose officers are too frequently changing. And it cannot be denied that there is a vigilance in watching private interests which is rarely ever secured for the Government.

These claims are barred by the statute of limitations, and now to open them up to a suit will put the Government at a great disadvantage and give the claimants a great advantage.

3. These intelligent claimants, with a full knowledge of their rights, not only declined to sue the United States when they had a right to do so, but they actually settled all disputed matters with the proper officers and gave a receipt in full to the United States of all the claims which they now seek to recover.

Congress should be just, but it has no right to surrender the rights of the United States, violate the limitation laws made for the protection of the people and to secure the ends of justice, and tax the whole public to pay stale claims, the payment of which no law sanctions, and full satisfaction of which has already been acknowledged.

4. If a special privilege is now given to these claimants to sue the United States, it will invite a multitude of other claims, and great injustice may and doubtless will be done to the Government. There should be an end to all demands of this kind. Claims should not be immortal while men are only mortal in this sphere of action.

5. In the case of Choteau vs. The United States, decided in the Court of Claims, involving a claim in one of the so-called "iron-clad claims," the court has already decided against the claimant.

There are other considerations against some of the claims which may be worthy of consideration, but it seems to us enough has already been said to show that the claimants have no rightful demand on the Government.

The undersigned, therefore, after a very careful examination of all the facts, are of the opinion that the bill should not pass, and recommend its indefinite postponement.

Respectfully submitted.

WM. LAWRENCE.
WM. S. HOLMAN.
JAMES WILSON.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention of the committee for a little while, I desire to submit some considerations which seem to me worthy of the attention of the committee in support of this bill; and it is not my purpose to occupy any great amount of time myself in this discussion.

The reports of the majority and the minority of the Committee on War Claims have been read in the hearing of the committee; and I presume the discussion will follow substantially in the line of those reports. So far as I am personally concerned, I desire to say that none of these claimants reside in my district; I have little or no acquaintance with any of them; and in what I may say in support of this bill and in urging its passage upon this committee and upon the House, I do not appear as the advocate or champion of these claimants in any sense whatever.

The other day when I undertook to procure a suspension of the rules for the passage of the Senate bill on this same subject my friend from Pennsylvania inquired as to the amount of money this bill would take from the Treasury; and I suggested in answer to his interrogatory that in my judgment it would save the Treasury a very considerable amount of money. It is with that view and upon that theory that I advocate the passage of this bill.

The proposition is not to allow a dollar to these claimants; it is not to indorse by action of Congress their claim for one dollar; it is, in a word, to do this: to take these cases out of Congress, where they cannot be judicially investigated, and send them to a court where they may be judicially investigated, and where the rights and interests of the Government may be protected.

I have not had as much experience in this House as many who hear me; but I have had enough to warrant me in saying that this is the worst tribunal in the world for investigating a claim. There are no facilities provided to the committees of Congress for making an investigation of claims against the Government. The testimony upon which committees act is in its very nature ex parte. It is utterly impossible, as every gentleman who ever had any experience on any of the claim committees of the House will testify, to give to claims that consideration or investigation which is absolutely necessary to protect the interests of the Government. I undertake to say that no matter how vigilant your committees may be, no matter how vigilant Congress itself may be in considering cases of this class, it is absolutely impossible to protect the Government and the Treasury from fraud and imposition. It is upon this theory and no other that I say this class of cases ought to be taken out of Congress and sent to the Court of Claims, where they can be judicially investigated, where evidence pro and con can be submitted, and where the rights of the Government as well as the interests of the claimants may have some show of being protected. I do not know that a dollar is due to a single one of these claimants.

Mr. SCOFIELD. What is the round sum claimed?

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. It is impossible for me to say what the round sum of the claim is, but I will intimate in the course of my remarks what was found as the aggregate sum by the Selfridge board. That is all I can say.

Mr. SCOFIELD. How much do the claimants themselves ask?

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. It is impossible to say, but it is a considerable sum.

Mr. SCOFIELD. One million or five millions?

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. More than one and probably more than two million dollars. But I will state what I have to say in regard to that in the progress of my remarks.

I was going on to say, Mr. Chairman, that I do not know a dollar is due to any one of these claimants. I hope it may turn out upon investigation that not a dollar is due; but I do assert that it is in the interest of economy, in the interest of protecting the Treasury against imposition, that these cases shall be taken out of these halls and sent into a court where they may be examined into.

I may be pardoned for briefly alluding to the history of these claims. Enough may have been gathered from the reading of the report to put the committee in possession of the essential facts which are the groundwork of these claims. They grow out of the fact that these claimants contracted for certain vessels of war known as iron-clad or iron-armored vessels during the war of the rebellion for the Government. These vessels were constructed under a contract made with the Navy Department of the Government, and it so happened that this class of work was in its very nature an experiment, about which neither the contractor nor the officers of the Government had any definite information. Indeed, the officers of the Government were as ignorant as the contractors themselves; and in the progress of this work under the contracts which were entered into by the proper officer of the Government changes had to be made from time to time. The officers of the Government were acquiring information from time to time, under which and in view of which they were constrained to vary the specifications of the contracts which had been entered into by these parties, and, as a consequence resulting from these facts, delays were occasioned and the character of the vessels to be constructed essentially changed; and pending these delays all the labor and materials entering into them had advanced in price very considerably. The skilled mechanical labor requisite in their contracts had advanced very materially. So at the completion of the work it was found by these contractors they had been subjected to great loss and damage, in many cases to ruinous losses, in consequence of these changes made in the manner I have indicated.

Under these circumstances, in March, 1865, these parties came to Congress for relief, and on presentation of their cases the Senate appointed a board, known as the Selfridge board, to examine into them. That board organized and cited these claimants to appear before them, and they did appear. Seven months were given to the investigation, and an award was made by that board in favor of a large number of these claimants; not all of them, but nearly all of them. That report was submitted to the Senate in the closing days of the session, and after some discussion a proposition was made by Senator Grimes to pay these parties in gross 12 per cent. upon the contract price for constructing these vessels. That proposition passed the Senate. It came to this House and was referred to the Committee on Claims, but it was so obviously unjust to some of the claimants, while it paid others in excess of their claims, that it was unanimously rejected both by the Committee on Claims and by the House. Consequently another board was organized to make a similar investigation, known as the Marchand board, and it prosecuted its work of investigation; but, as is claimed by these parties, they were refused the privilege of making their proofs and presenting to the board the grounds upon which they asked for relief. But seven of all these contractors were awarded any relief by the Marchand board. Then the cases were thrown again into Congress, and were considered by the committee of the Senate and subsequently by the committee of the House. I state what I believe to be true, that no committee of the Senate, no committee of the House has ever decided or reported adversely upon these claims. On the contrary, they have been indorsed over and over again by the committees of the Senate and the committees of this House having these cases in charge.

Now, I desire to submit here in this connection remarks made by Senator Hendricks, of Indiana, and by Senator Sumner, of Massachusetts, in support of some legislation in behalf of these claims when these cases were under consideration in the Senate some time ago.

Mr. SPEER. What year was that?

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. This was in April, 1866.

Senator Hendricks, after a full investigation of this subject, said:

I am of the opinion that these sums ought to be paid as a matter of justice and right by the Government to these contractors. Each case of course has its special merits or demerits. But, sir, I believe in the doctrine that where a man contracts to do a great and very important work for the Government he ought not to be allowed to be a large loser, and in some cases, as will be the result here, to be broken up by the contract he may have made, and especially in the case of contracts made at such a time as these were made and for such a work as they were made. I mean, of course, where he acts in good faith.

These contracts, it will be observed, were made pending the war. I submit to all Senators whether it was possible for a party making a contract with the Government in the months of August and September, 1862, to anticipate the enormous rise in labor and materials? For work that must of necessity run through a number of months, was it possible for a contractor to anticipate in the making of his contract with the Government the enormous advance in materials?

Referring to the same subject Senator Sumner said:

And now again I ask, are you ready to see these contractors who have done this service sacrificed? You do not allow the soldier to be sacrificed nor the national creditor who has taken your stock. Will you allow the mechanic to be sacrificed? There are many of them who without your help must suffer. One of the most enterprising and faithful in the whole country is a constituent of my own, who during the last year has been obliged to go into bankruptcy from his inability to meet liabilities growing out of the war, and at this moment he finds no chance of relief except in what a just Government may return to him. My friend on my right [Mr. Nye] asked you to be magnanimous to these contractors. I do not put it in that way. I ask you simply to be just. Do by them as you would be done by.

Now, then, Mr. Chairman, these are the sentiments which were held by these distinguished Senators upon the full and careful consideration of these cases. I read them because in my judgment they are entitled to weight in the consideration and disposition of the question now pending before this committee. Nobody can claim that these gentlemen could have been under any circumstances induced to advocate a "job." Nobody believes that they could have been deceived upon a proposition which was submitted to them. And therefore, I repeat, their views are entitled to great weight.

Now, Mr. Chairman, referring to the very matters which are touched upon in these remarks, I beg to say that I hold in my hand a list of the names of twenty-nine of the forty-nine contractors who entered into contracts with this Government to construct some of these vessels. Of the whole number of forty-nine contractors twenty-nine failed and were financially ruined in consequence of their losses—the losses they sustained by the taking of these contracts to undertake to do this work for the Government. It is unnecessary for me to repeat these names, but I state upon assurances upon which I can rely that three-fifths, more than three-fifths of all the contractors who engaged in this class of work failed in consequence thereof, and were financially ruined.

Now, then, it will be seen that there is a basis upon which these parties ask for relief. There is a basis upon which they come to Congress and ask that they may be allowed to go into the Court of Claims to have an investigation as to whether anything be actually due them or not. If it shall be found upon such investigation that they have been paid in full; if it shall be found that they have no claim against the Government, then let it be so adjudicated, and let this matter be ended in that way. But if it shall be found that something is due these parties upon a judicial investigation, then in conscience and in equity they are entitled to that. It does not become Congress, it does not become us as men of honor seeking to do justice between claimants and the Government to say that if these parties can demonstrate by competent proof in the courts of the country that they have a just claim against the Government for something, we will plead the statute of limitations upon them or we will refuse them arbitrarily, simply because we have the power, the right, and privilege of going into the courts of the country.

Now, then, the conditions under which these parties may present their claims to the court are defined by law and they are limited to a very narrow range. They appear in the act of March 2, 1867. This act is in these terms; it provides that the Secretary of the Navy—

Shall ascertain the additional cost which was necessarily incurred by each contractor in the completion of his work, by reason of any changes or alterations in the plans and specifications required and delays in the prosecution of the work occasioned by the Government, which were not provided for in the original contract.

Is not that a fair proposition? Can any gentleman on this floor say that there is aught unjust to the Government in that proposition? Is it not the familiar principle which is applied in every court of justice in the land in passing upon cognate questions?

This act goes further and provides by way of additional protection to the Government that—

No allowance for any advance in the price of labor or material shall be considered, unless such advance occurred during the prolonged time for completing the work rendered necessary by the delay resulting from the action of the Government aforesaid, and then only when such advance could not have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary prudence and diligence on the part of the contractor; and from such additional cost—to be ascertained as aforesaid, there shall be deducted such sum as may have been paid each contractor for any reason heretofore and above the contract price.

Mark the language—

Now, I understand, Mr. Chairman, very well that those who antagonize the passage of this bill claim that certain extra allowances were made to these claimants by the Navy Department, and that is true to a certain extent and as to some of these claimants; but I have proof before me to substantiate the statement that all these allowances were made upon the basis of the scale of prices embraced in the original contract or prevailing at that time, and that they did not contemplate, they did not take into account the advance in the price of both material and labor, and especially skilled labor, which occurred pending the delay occasioned by the Government.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I cannot be interrupted now. The gentleman will have his own time, in which he can answer me.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I only wished to ask whether the information of the gentleman is official?

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. My information is official, and I have the statement of the Secretary of the Navy on this subject which I will not take time to read, but will append to my remarks. It is official information from the Navy Department.

Now then I say, Mr. Chairman, that the theory of these claims proceeds upon this basis: that the allowances, the special allowances that were made, were limited to a scale of prices which existed at the time the contracts were entered into, and therefore it will be readily seen that they do not embrace the claims of these parties against the Government for the advance in the scale of prices of material and labor between the execution of the contracts and the completion of the work.

Sir, these advances were very large. I hold in my hand a Senate report from which I quote:

From August, 1863, till July, 1864, a period of eleven months, best flange iron rose from $4 to 10½ per pound; common iron from $80 to $205 per ton; American iron from $34 to $75 per ton; copper, in sheets, from 38 to 70; laborers from 14 to 22 cents per hour; smiths from 23 to 31 cents per hour; molders from 25 to 31 cents per hour; turners from 23 to 30 cents per hour; carpenters from 24 to 27; and boiler men from 23 to 32 cents per hour.

These are the advances in price stated in one of the official reports of the Senate, and I dare say will not be controverted by any gentleman on this floor.

Perhaps I have said enough in regard to the basis upon which these parties ask relief. I do not say, I do not undertake to claim, that a single dollar is due to these parties by the Government at all; but I do undertake to say that there is such a substantial groundwork for a claim against the Government as to entitle these parties to go into the Court of Claims for the purpose of having the question judicially investigated and settled, and that is all I do say in that regard. It was intimated the other day, as I see by the RECORD, by my friend the learned chairman of the Committee on War Claims, [Mr. LAWRENCE,] when a motion was made to suspend the rules and pass this bill—although I did not hear my friend say anything of the kind on the floor—I find on looking at the RECORD that he did say this: That this bill would take from three to five million dollars from the Treasury. That is his first point. Second, that the Government holds receipts in full for these claims. Third, that the Court of Claims has already decided against these claimants. So that you have here summarized the defense as stated by the chairman of the Committee on War Claims as the position occupied by those who oppose this bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. Has my friend ever found any member on this floor who heard the chairman of the Committee on War Claims say anything of that kind? The bill was up under a suspension of the rules, and no debate was in order.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I infer that the chairman of the Committee on War Claims did make those statements from the fact that I see them in the RECORD, and I presume he must have made them, although I did not hear him.

But I want to call attention to the position taken by my learned friend in opposition to this bill. If I comprehend his argument, it seems to me that it is the old case of the kettle over again, with which every gentleman on this floor is familiar. In the first place it will take a large sum of money out of the Treasury, in the second place the Government holds receipts in full, and in the third place the Court of Claims has already decided against the claimants; therefore he thinks that there is an immense job in this bill in proposing to send it to the Court of Claims, an adverse decision having already been made in the case. As a friend at my right suggests, he is afraid the Court of Claims, notwithstanding the receipts of these parties, notwithstanding the decisions of the court, will take from three to five million dollars out of the Treasury for the benefit of these claims.

I was inquired of a few moments ago by my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOFIELD] as to the amount of money really involved in these claims. I cannot state the precise amount. I know that the Selfridge board, to which I have already alluded, upon an investigation of the case, made an award of about $1,750,000. My honest belief is that if these cases can go to the Court of Claims and be there investigated, not more than from 30 to 50 per cent. of that amount will ever be allowed these parties.

I will state further, with the same sincerity of conviction, that unless these cases are taken out of Congress and sent to the court, and the lobby behind these claims taken out of these halls, in the end these claims will take out of the Treasury more than $1,750,000. I might say more than twice that amount. It is idle to suppose that you settle anything when you reject this bill. It is idle, it is childish to suppose that you have ended these claims, that you have put a quietus upon them when you have rejected this bill. By so doing you will only send these claims to the next Congress, and if they fail there, to another Congress. From my observation here as a member of Congress, and from my understanding of the status of these claims, indorsed as they have been over and over and over again by committees of both branches of Congress and by the most distinguished members of both Houses of Congress, I undertake to say that at some time, sooner or later, unless these cases are sent into court to be investigated and disposed of, they will be passed through Congress either together or singly, and will take from the Treasury three or four times what will ever be allowed them upon a fair and thorough judicial investigation.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I desire to ask a question for information, as I would like also to hear what my colleague [Mr. HOLMAN] has to say about the matter when he gets the floor. I find in a tabular statement contained in the report of the minority of the committee a column setting forth the amounts already paid to the contractors over and above the contract prices obtained from the Bureaus. I would like to know whether these amounts were estimated for additional work performed at the original contract prices.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I so understand.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Or whether anything was taken into consideration for the advanced cost of labor and material. I do not find in the report any information on that subject.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I understand that that report was made upon the schedule of prices adopted at the time the contracts were entered into. Indeed, according to my recollection (and if I am not correct some gentleman of the committee will correct me) one member of that board, Mr. King, so stated before our committee last winter.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Another question in that same connection. This other board made their report on the 26th of November, 1867. On the 23d of December, 1865, I believe the other report was made. Upon what basis was that report made?

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. That was made upon an investigation of the whole case; but that report was never acted upon. It simply fell to the ground. Had that report been acted upon by Congress, I have no doubt all of these cases would have been disposed of under the award made by that board. But it never was acted upon at all. As I said before, the Senate, upon the motion of Senator Grimes, added 12 per cent. in gross to all the contracts. That was so obviously unjust and indefensible that it was unanimously rejected by the Committee on Claims of this House, and nothing was ever done in pursuance of it. It is unnecessary therefore to inquire further in regard to the action of that board.

I have simply outlined in a general way the ground upon which these parties base their claims against the Government and the arguments upon which it seems to me this committee ought to conclude to send these cases to the Court of Claims for investigation. If it shall be thought that the interests of the Government require, if the officers charged with the duty of prosecuting these cases in that court shall desire, under the law an appeal can be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, where an investigation of the whole field may be had, where the proceedings of the Court of Claims may be reviewed by the highest court of the country. It seems to me there is not the least ground for apprehending that all the rights and all the interests of the Government will not be thoroughly cared for and looked after by the Court of Claims.

One thing further, and then I will yield to my friend from Connecticut, [Mr. KELLOGG.] It must not be understood that these gentlemen who are making these claims are to be prejudiced by the fact that they entered into contract with the Government to do this work. They do not come within the class of contractors who may perhaps be regarded as somewhat odious in the country; men who took advantage of their contracts to supply our Army with provisions, clothing, &c., and failed to perform those contracts in the spirit in which they were made. These men are mechanics of the country, many of whom were controlling and running ship-yards, doing a large and prosperous business, having no desire to take this work, but undertaking it at the instance of the officers of the Government, the work in many cases being pressed upon them, and they consenting to turn over their ship-yards and give their employes and machinery to the construction of these vessels, and to throw themselves upon the justice of Congress, upon the justice of the Government to protect them against serious loss.

Now, it seems to me they are entitled to some consideration; that at least they occupy such a relation to the Government that we cannot in honor refuse to give them a hearing; that we cannot in honor decline to allow them to go into the courts of the country to settle the question whether they have or have not any just claim against the Government.

I now yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. KELLOGG.]

Mr. BIERY. Before the gentleman from Wisconsin takes his seat I would like to put a question to him. The allegation is made that there was an award in behalf of these parties. I want to know whether they accepted the money that was so awarded.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. What award does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. BIERY. The award for their claim.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. What board?

Mr. BIERY. The allegation is made in the report of the minority that these parties accepted the award that was made and gave a receipt in satisfaction of their claim.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I do not know what award the gentleman refers to; but if he refers to the award made by the Selfridge board, I will say that the claimants never had any opportunity to accept the award of this board. If the gentleman refers to the allowances made by the Navy Department, I have already explained that when those allowances were made the Department considered itself limited by the scale of prices in existence at the time the contracts were entered into; and these parties doubtless gave receipts as required by that Department, and as they were compelled to do in order to receive the allowance. That is all.

I now yield my remaining fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. KELLOGG.]

[The following documents were referred to by Mr. HAZELTON in the course of his remarks:]

UNITED STATES NAVY DEPARTMENT,
February 16, 1875.

I hereby certify that the annexed is a true copy of Bureau of Construction and Repair to Nathaniel McKay, dated February 16, 1874, and of Bureau of Construction and Repair to Department, dated February 18, 1874, as appears by the records of the Department.

JNO. W. HOGG,
Chief Clerk.

Be it known that John W. Hogg, whose name is signed to the above certificate, is now, and was at the time of so signing, chief clerk in the Navy Department, and that full faith and credit are due to all his official attestations as such.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name, and caused the seal of the Navy Department of the United States to be affixed, at the city of Washington, this 16th day of February, in the year of our Lord 1875, and of the Independence of the United States the ninety-ninth.

[L. s.]

GEO. M. ROBESON,
Secretary of the Navy.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR,
February 16, 1874.

SIR: In reply to your letter of this date to the honorable Secretary of the Navy, referred to the Bureau, you are informed that from the summary of the accounts of the Squando on file in this office, (a copy of which is inclosed herewith,) it appears that no payments were made on that vessel for rise in labor and material caused by the acts of the Government.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. HANSCOM,
Chief of Bureau.

NATHL. MCKAY, Esq.,
Washington, D. C.

Summary of accounts of the Squando.

Dr.
Contract price of vessel.....	$395,000 00
Bills of extras to contract.....	101,135 70
Raising vessel 22 inches.....	90,000 00	$586,135 70
Cr.
By amount paid on contract.....	296,250 00
By amount paid on reservation.....	98,750 00
By amount paid on account of extras.....	72,847 52
By amount paid on account of raising vessel 22 inches.....	90,000 00
By machinery, &c., built for Chimo and turned over to Squando.....	14,220 09
By frames of two gun-carriages from Modoc.....	182 40
By fitting magazines at Boston navy-yard.....	153 92
By equipments furnished by Boston navy-yard.....	304 82
	572,708 75
Balance due contractor.....		13,426 95

1865.
July 13. Bills forwarded on account of extras for balance. $13,426 95 (Paid.)
Approved:

F. H. GREGORY,
Rear-Admiral.

No. 9.]

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR,
February 18, 1874.

SIR: In reply to the letter of the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives of the 16th instant, to the Department, referred to this Bureau, I have the honor to state that there is nothing on the records of this Bureau which shows the payment "to any contractor for building iron-clad vessels of war any sum or sums on account of the rise or advance in the prices of labor or material during the period of delay caused by the action of the Navy Department."

It appears, however, by the report of a board of officers appointed by the Secretary of the Navy under authority of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1867, (Executive Document No. 3, Senate, second session Fortieth Congress,) that the following sums were allowed to the contractors for building the vessels below named as the portion of "increased cost caused by the delay and action of the Government," namely:

To Secor & Co. and Perine, Secor & Co., on the Mahopae, Tecumseh, and Manhattan, river and harbor monitors, $115,539.01; to Harrison Loring, on the river and harbor monitor Canonicus, $38,513; to Atlantic Works, on the light-draught monitor Casco, $4,852.58; to Aquila Adams, on the light-draught monitor Chimo, $4,852.58; to M. F. Merrill, on the light-draught monitor Cohoes, $4,852.58; to Tomlinson, Hartup & Co., on the river monitors Sandusky and Marietta, $15,171, and to Poole & Hunt, on machinery of wooden double-ender Mackinaw, $3,694.81.

These sums, under the act of Congress approved July 13, 1866, (15 Statutes at Large, 379-380,) were paid by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The sum of $38,513 also seems to have been allowed and paid to Harlan & Hollingsworth on the river and harbor monitor Sanguis. Mention is made of this in the report of the board above referred to, but it does not appear in the tabular statement accompanying it.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. HANSCOM,
Chief of Bureau.

Hon. GEO. M. ROBESON,
Secretary of the Navy.

UNITED STATES NAVY DEPARTMENT,
February 17, 1875.

I hereby certify that the annexed is a true copy of the following papers on file in this Department: Telegram of William W. Wood to McKay & Aldus, dated June 23, 1864; letter of same to same, dated June 23, 1864; letter of F. H. Gregory to McKay & Aldus, dated September 16, 1864.

JNO. W. HOGG,
Chief Clerk.

Be it known that John W. Hogg, whose name is signed to the above certificate, is now, and was at the time of so signing, chief clerk in the Navy Department, and that full faith and credit are due to all his official attestations as such.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and caused the seal of the Navy Department of the United States to be affixed, at the city of Washington, this 17th day of February, in the year of our Lord 1875, and of the Independence of the United States the ninety-ninth.

[L. S.]

GEO. M. ROBESON,
Secretary of the Navy.

[Telegram.]

NEW YORK, June 23, 1864.

McKAY & ALDUS,
East Boston, Massachusetts:

Suspend work on Squando until further orders, which you will receive in a very short time.

WM. W. W. WOOD,
For the admiral general superintendent.

GENERAL INSPECTOR'S OFFICE,
New York, June 23, 1864.

GENTLEMEN: By order of the rear admiral superintending, I forwarded you the following instructions by telegram this day:

Suspend work on Squando until further orders, which you will receive in a very short time.

I am, respectfully,

WM. W. W. WOOD,
General Inspector of Steam-machinery for the Navy.

Messrs. McKAY & ALDUS,
East Boston, Massachusetts.

NEW YORK, September 16, 1864.

GENTLEMEN: Your letter of acceptance of the 14th instant, to make the changes proposed in the light-draught monitor Squando, namely, to raise that vessel twenty-two inches and place in cross-floors, stiffening plates in water compartments, and raise the boilers, in conformity to the plans and specifications submitted by Chief Engineer Wood, and work incidental thereto, for the sum of $90,000, has been received. The sum named is satisfactory, and you are hereby authorized to proceed with the work, and to hurry the same to the earliest possible completion. The payments for this work will be made as it is completed, certificates being forwarded by the local inspector to the general inspector certifying as to the amount done.

I am, respectfully,

F. H. GREGORY,
Rear-Admiral, Superintending.

Messrs. McKAY & ALDUS,
East Boston, Massachusetts.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this question has been so thoroughly discussed by my friend from Wisconsin, [Mr. HAZELTON,] who has charge of this bill, that I do not expect to occupy the whole of the fifteen minutes allowed me.

As the report shows, a majority of the Committee on War Claims, comprising all but three members of that committee, (and this is about as near as you can ever expect to approach a unanimous report from that committee,) have reported in favor of this bill, sending all these claimants to the Court of Claims, with a right on the part of the Government as well as the claimants to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States to settle by due legal proceedings whether these gentlemen have any just claim against the Government or not. The committee thought this a fair way to try the question; and with that view they reported the bill.

I find an impression prevailing in some parts of this House that there have been two awards made by boards appointed by the Navy Department in favor of these claims, and that they have been settled in that way. The very year the war closed it was conceded on the part of the Government itself that these contractors would not receive anything like adequate compensation at the contract prices, owing to changes in construction ordered by the Navy Department. The whole matter of iron-clads was an experiment at the outset. The Navy Department made these contracts in pursuance of acts of Congress, and required the contractors to do just as they were instructed. The Department drew up the plans and specifications, and directed just how everything should be done. The attempt was to make a light-draught iron-clad vessel. They did the best they could, but they did not know how such a vessel should be successfully constructed for the purposes for which they were designed; and the very first vessel of that kind that was launched went down so near the water's edge that all of them had to be built over again. Congress was then appealed to for relief. The Selfridge board, as it was called, was organized, and that board made an award, which I presume would have satisfied some of these parties, though it was an ex parte board; but when the award came before the Senate that body rejected it, and refused to make provision for paying what this board, organized by the Navy Department itself, said these parties were entitled to receive, and the Senate proposed to pay all of them 12 per cent. advance, without regard to whether their claims were just for more or less than that. In other words, if you consider this board as a court, the Government of the United States organized a court to consider these cases, and after that court had made a decision the Government itself refused to abide by that decision, and ordered a new board, called the Marchand board. That board was well characterized by my friend from Maine, who made a report on this subject in the last Congress, as simply a star-chamber board, taking such evidence as the Secretary of the Navy laid before them, and only a part of the evidence that had been laid before the Selfridge board, without any provision, authority, or power on the part of the contractors to file any new evidence or to be heard before the board. The board never heard the parties at all.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I would like to ask the gentleman whether these contractors were allowed to be heard by testimony before that board?

Mr. KELLOGG. If the gentleman means the second board, I answer not at all, except as they took such evidence as was laid before them by the Navy Department and not by the parties. Chief Engineer King, one of the members of the Marchand board, and one of the most competent men there probably, appeared before our committee and testified that the board had before them nothing except the old papers which had been on file in the Navy Department. They had no chance to consider new evidence or a part of the old evidence. I may state further that Chief Engineer King testified before our committee that, as a member of the board, he was satisfied that these parties were entitled to more than they had received under the award of that Marchand board; but that under the instructions and provisions of the act of March 2, 1867, directing the claims to be submitted, and the regulations of the Navy Department under that act, the board could not award more than they did—

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Were those instructions laid before the committee?

Mr. KELLOGG. I will tell the gentleman about that. The act under which the Marchand board was convened is found on page 4 of the report:

Under that act the Secretary of the Navy convened the Marchand board, which held its sessions in Washington. It reviewed the report and evidence before the Selfridge board, without however permitting the contractors to be heard in their own behalf or to rebut the adverse testimony or report of any Government official.

Now, what has been the action of Congress upon these claims? Since the matter has been brought before Congress, every committee in each branch that has examined the subject has reported in favor of such a measure as this or of paying the claims. In the Forty-first Congress, when Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, now a Senator, was chairman of the Committee on Claims, they reported a general bill sending these parties to the Court of Claims. That bill passed the House January 30, 1871, under a suspension of the rules, the vote being yeas 140, nays 52; and among those voting in the affirmative I find even the chairman of the Committee on War Claims of this House, [Mr. LAWRENCE,] who was a member of the Forty-first Congress. That bill was vetoed by the President, because there was no limitation or restriction in it to prevent payment for increased price of labor and materials when the contractors were in default, because of the contractor's own negligence. Such limitation ought to have been included in the bill, and it was properly vetoed by the President on the ground that it was a departure from the basis fixed by the act of March 2, 1867. In the last Congress the Committee on Claims, of which Mr. Blair, of Michigan, was chairman, undertook to report all of these cases in separate bills. They reported bills for some eight or ten of these parties. Three of them passed this House separately and were sent to the Senate. However, one only of the number went through the Senate. A Senate bill in favor of Mr. Bestor was passed also, appropriating $125,000, and he died at your very doors before he got his money, although he had been waiting for ten years or more from the execution of his contract and died in waiting for his Government to do him justice. The other was in the case of Miles Greenwood, of Cincinnati. Now, what we propose to do is simply this: to send these parties to the Court of Claims where you have sent Miles Greenwood; and I will send up an amendment upon which I will claim to be heard very briefly when the question comes up to be voted on, to substitute it for the pending proposition. It is the bill which was passed by the Senate without opposition, and is the same proposition upon which we voted on last Monday, the vote being 133 in the affirmative to 99 in the negative. That bill which I will offer as a substitute not only guards against the objection because of which the President vetoed the bill in the Forty-first Congress, but in my judgment guards against every possible objection. If Secor & Co. or anybody else has got more than his pay upon the claims heretofore made—and I do not think they ever got more than they were entitled to, and the report to this House last Congress proves this—it is provided by my amendment that the United States may recover judgment against such parties for the amount of the excess paid them over their claims.

Mr. FRYE. I wish to ask the gentleman from Connecticut this question: The inquiry has been made by several members why these parties have not gone to the Court of Claims to press their cases?

Mr. KELLOGG. I am glad that the gentleman from Maine has asked me the question. It has been alleged against these claimants, I know, that they did not go to the Court of Claims to press their claims and present their proofs to the judgment of that court before the statute of limitations barred them there. The truth of the matter is that they did go there; but when these cases were referred to the Committee on Claims they were required by the chairman of that committee to withdraw their claims, which had been presented to the Court of Claims, before they could get a hearing from that committee. They did withdraw their claims in obedience to that requirement of the committee, and now, the time having expired, they cannot again present their claims to that Court under the law unless we pass this bill; and it is charged against them in the minority report that they should have gone there in time.

Mr. FRYE. Did not the chairman of the committee, Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, tell them that the committee would not consider any of these claims unless they had the whole of them before that committee?

Mr. KELLOGG. That is the fact, and it was because of that demand on the part of the committee that these claims were taken out of the Court of Claims. The chairman of that committee required it to be done, and the time has expired for presentation of their cases in the Court of Claims, and they cannot go there at all unless we pass this bill.

I do not know whether we owe these claimants anything or not. I do say, however, that this is the very last place in which to settle the amounts due, if any, these claimants. If they are honest claimants, in my judgment they should be sent into the Court of Claims for settlement. They cannot go into the Court of Claims for reasons I have stated, and therefore the majority of the members of the committee have reported in favor of sending them there. I have known but little about the matter until it was investigated before the committee of which I am a member. I am in favor of sending all these parties and all their proofs to the Court of Claims. Let them there establish their claims if they have any valid claims against the Government of the United States; and if they have not, then let the matter be settled once for all and let us not leave it as a legacy to future Congresses.

I move the text of the Senate bill, which was voted on last Monday, as a substitute for the pending proposition reported from the committee. I ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, however, That the investigation of said claims shall be upon the following basis: The said court shall ascertain the additional cost which was necessarily incurred by said contractors for the building of said vessels of war and in the construction of steam-machinery, in the completion of the same by reason of any changes or alterations in the plans and specifications required, and delays in the prosecution of the work, which were not provided for in the original contract; but no allowance for any advance in the price of labor or material shall be considered unless such advance occurred during the prolonged term for completing the work rendered necessary by the delay resulting from the action of the Government, and then only when such advance could not have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary prudence and diligence on the part of the contractors: And provided further, That the compensation fixed by the contracts between the contractors and the Government for specific alterations shall be conclusive as to the compensation to be made therefor: And provided further, That all moneys paid to said contractors by the Government, over and above the original contract price for the building of said vessels and the construction of said machinery shall be deducted from any amounts allowed by said court by reason of the matters hereinbefore stated; and if the amounts so to be deducted in any case shall exceed the amount allowed by said court, judgment shall be entered for the excess against such claimant in favor of the United States; and said court is directed to certify such judgment and record to the circuit court of the circuit where such claimant resides, and said circuit court is hereby vested with authority to issue execution and to enforce its collection the same as if said judgment had originally been rendered therein: And provided further, That if any of such changes caused less work and expense to the contractors than the original plans and specifications, a corresponding reduction shall be made from the contract price, and the amounts thereof be deducted from any allowance to be made by said court to said claimants: And provided further, That all claims under the provisions of this act shall be presented within one year from the passage thereof and not afterward; and the claimants in their petitions shall stipulate and agree to accept and abide by all the provisions of this act.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. How much time have I left of my hour?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has five minutes.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not wish to take up any further time, but by and by, when the question comes up on my substitute, I will ask to be heard not more than five minutes.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin to yield to me whatever time he has remaining.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I yield the gentleman from Tennessee the five minutes I have remaining.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I offer the following amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. KELLOGG.]

The Clerk read as follows:

And provided further, That said court may hear and determine the question whether the action of the board organized by the Secretary of the Navy in ascertaining and allowing the amounts to which said contractors were respectively entitled for any failure upon the part of the Government or other cause, and the action of said contractors in accepting the award of said boards and the legislation of Congress thereon, does not estop and conclude said contractors from now demanding any further or other compensation from the Government.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Mr. Chairman, I would be very glad if I could consistently yield my support to this bill or to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. KELLOGG.] But my examination of these claims has convinced me that there ought to come a time at which the Government in justice to itself and to its citizens should say "halt." These claims were first presented to the Secretary of the Navy, and were passed upon by the officers of the Department. Then these contractors came before Congress, and in 1865 the Senate of the United States passed a resolution under which the Selfridge board was organized; and if I now understand the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KELLOGG] correctly, these contractors would have accepted the award made by the Selfridge board.

Mr. KELLOGG. Some of them would have been glad to do so.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Mr. Chairman, put a point in there, if you please. Under the Selfridge board about a million and a half of dollars were allowed, and I assume that was the amount then demanded by these contractors as the loss to which they had been subjected by reason of the misconduct or delay of the Government.

Now, mark you, the original contracts summed up $10,000,000. Then the Selfridge board allowed one and a half million dollars, making eleven and a half millions.

Again, sir, let us take a step forward and see the demand made by these contractors upon which the Marchand board was organized. These same men presented claims amounting to $14,000,000 instead of eleven and a half millions; and it appears that under the Marchand board over $5,000,000 were allowed these contractors, which sum of five millions they have accepted and given the Government receipts for it. Now, I hold and maintain, Mr. Chairman, that if this were a case between individuals they would be estopped and concluded by this action. And if they would be estopped and concluded as between individuals, much more so should they be when the case is between individuals and the Government, especially when we look into the character of these demands and when, as I am informed—I say it from hearsay—the most important witnesses on behalf of the Government have become superannuated and enfeebled in memory, and are unable to testify on behalf of the Government.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Chief Engineer of the United States Navy Department is a great deal smarter than the gentleman from Tennessee or myself, and knows a great deal more about it than the rest of the board that had to do with these claims. The Selfridge board was a one-sided board as well as the other. And those millions which the gentleman talks of have not been paid on account of the claims now presented nor under the award of the Marchand board at all, but for changes made by the Navy Department in the vessels for which the Department paid, and with which these claims have nothing to do. The gentleman is all in a fog about it. If he would look at the table in the minority report, he would see that the Marchand board allowed just $157,475.55, and no more—but a little over $150,000. The five millions the gentleman talks about is what the Department paid for changes made in the iron-clads; and the board had nothing to do with it. If the gentleman had examined the tables in the case, he would have made no such statement.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Mr. King, no doubt, is smarter than myself or the gentleman from Connecticut. But Mr. King was not in the Contract Bureau of the Navy Department, and was not acquainted with the facts in regard to the contracts. He was simply a member of the Marchand board. That was all he was; and he was then, if you please, "King" as one of the judges of that commission, and as such I put him against "King" a witness before the committee. The award made under oath precludes him from taking a different position now, and I do not think it becomes the gentleman from Connecticut to put him in that false position. There is such a thing as justice to the Government. These people were paid $10,000,000, and have been allowed and paid about 50 per cent. over and beyond their contracts; and now if any gentleman on this floor proposes to limit the amount to 8 or 10 per cent. more on the amount found by the Marchand board he will encounter the opposition of these contractors. And if no limit is given, there is no telling how much the Government may have ultimately to pay. This much I felt it due to myself to say.

Mr. HOLMAN, having obtained the floor, said: I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WHEELER] to move that the committee rise, in order that in the House he may move to go into Committee of the Whole on the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. HOLMAN. As it is of the highest possible importance that the appropriation bills should be passed, I yield the gentleman the floor for that motion.

The question being taken on the motion that the committee rise, there were—yeas 73, nays 62.

Mr. KELLOGG called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WHEELER, and Mr. HAZELTON of Wisconsin, were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 72, nays 66.

Mr. O'BRIEN. A quorum has not voted.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not necessary to have a quorum on the motion that the committee rise.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COX reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the Private Calendar, and especially the bill (H. R. No. 217) for the relief of certain contractors for the construction of vessels of war and steam-machinery, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. PENDLETON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 135) appointing managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the rules be suspended and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to resume the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, (Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3820) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. General debate on the pending bill has been closed. The bill has been read through for information, and the Clerk will now read it by paragraphs for amendments.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

For expenses of recruiting and transportation of recruits, $105,000. And no money appropriated by this act shall be paid for recruiting the Army beyond the number of twenty-five thousand enlisted men, including Indian scouts and hospital stewards. Nothing, however, in this act shall be construed to diminish the Signal Service, which shall hereafter be maintained as now organized, under the authority of the Secretary of War.

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to offer an amendment to that paragraph of the bill for the purpose of fixing the exact legal status of the Signal Service. I therefore submit the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. COX. I beg leave to say just here that when the committee last rose I had the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will give the floor to the gentleman from New York whenever he desires it.

The Clerk read the amendment offered by Mr. WHEELER, as follows:

In line 13 strike out the words "Nothing, however, in this act shall be construed to diminish the Signal Service, which shall hereafter be maintained as now organized, under the authority of the Secretary of War," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Nothing, however, in this act shall be construed to prevent enlistments for the Signal Service, which shall hereafter be maintained as now organized and with the line of enlisted men now provided by law.

Mr. WHEELER. That defines the legal status of this corps.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to amend that clause by striking out in line 12 the words "twenty-five" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "twenty-two."

I make this motion, basing it upon the fact brought to the attention of the House during the last session of Congress as to the extent to which our Army is employed on the frontier and stationed in the various sections of the country east of the Mississippi River. It will be remembered that the report which came to the House from the Committee on Military Affairs demonstrated very clearly that quite a large portion of the Army is stationed at various northern points, in the city of New York and at various other military posts, while a portion of the Army only is employed on the frontier service. The argument in favor of an increase of the Army beyond the proper peace establishment at sixteen thousand men was based upon the extent of the frontier which was to be protected by the military forces from Indian depredations, and the argument in favor of granting lands to railroads west of the Mississippi River was based upon the advantage accruing to the Government from the facilities for the rapid transportation of the Army from one point to another. The advantages which these artificial channels have furnished for the transportation of troops, coupled with the facts to which I have already referred, seem to me to justify fully a reduction of the Army. The present Army under existing law consists of twenty-five thousand men. It is against the spirit and genius of our institutions to maintain any considerable standing Army. It can be scarcely possible that in this period of profound peace the Army can be employed for any other purpose than that of keeping up the military organization and protecting the frontier settlements from predatory attacks from savages. The reduction of the Army to the lowest possible number is a result which the people of the country desire. There is an instinctive dread of a military power in all free governments, and the experience of the last few years has demonstrated the ability of our people, with that martial spirit which is inspired by free institutions, to organize at once on the spur of the moment the necessary military force to protect the Government. It seems to me impossible that any contingency could arise when the people would not be prepared to meet the emergency by that voluntary service which is in harmony with the genius of a government like ours.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WHEELER. I wish to say simply, in answer to the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] that the maximum legal standard of the Army is now fixed at thirty thousand men.

Mr. HOLMAN. Thirty-one thousand.

Mr. WHEELER. No; thirty thousand. The proposition made by the Committee on Appropriations at the last session and adopted by Congress has been very severely commented upon by the public press in certain localities and by the Army, and in some parts of the country by the people.

The Committee on Appropriations are satisfied that an Army of twenty-five thousand men is equal to all the legitimate demands of the country, and that the country with its widely extended frontier cannot get along with a man less.

There is no concealing the fact that during the present fiscal year the Army has been very hard worked.

If we are to reduce the enlisted force to a lower standard than twenty-five thousand men, it must of necessity break up company organizations. I want to say in justice to myself and the Committee on Appropriations that there has been no disposition whatever to interfere with the organization of the Army. We believe that when the Government invites men into its service and trains them for that service it is bound in good faith to sustain and support them, whether it gives them large or small commands. If we are to reduce the enlisted force of the Army below the standard of twenty-five thousand men, we must of course leave some officers without a command. And in the judgment of the Committee on Appropriations the enlisted force of the Army could not with safety be reduced below the standard fixed in this bill or the standard fixed at the last session of Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Army cannot be maintained for the purpose of furnishing commands for the officers of the Army. Certainly some mode can be devised by the Military Committee or by the Committee on Appropriations by which this supernumerary body of officers, the largest known to any nation in proportion to the number of the rank and file, can be reduced to some reasonable limit.

I do not think the Government should act harshly toward men who have been educated for the military service, or for any other special duty, and who desire to remain in the service of the Government. But I do think the industries of no people should be the subject of taxation simply to maintain a body of sinecures on any possible pretense. No man has a right to be a burden upon the industries of the people of any country, unless his services are required in the public service.

I have very little hope that my amendment will be adopted at this time. But I feel very confident that the demand of the people of this country is to-day first, that the Army shall be reduced down to the peace standard, which cannot reasonably exceed the number of men in the military service prior to 1861; and second, that the country will insist that some reasonable principle shall be adopted, doing no injustice to any one, by which the supernumerary officers of the Army shall be reduced, and that men performing no duties shall receive no compensation, rendering no service to the Government, and also relieving those men themselves from the unpleasant attitude of receiving year after year handsome salaries from the Treasury without any return whatever to the people upon whose industries those salaries are charged.

Mr. COX. I move to amend the paragraph just read by adding to it the following:

Provided, That the Army of the United States shall not be used to subvert the rights and liberties or interfere with the Legislatures of the States of this Union; and that no sum shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States until the United States troops now in the State of Louisiana shall be withdrawn from that State.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. Where will you send them?

Mr. COX. I do not offer this amendment with a view to speak on the merits of the Louisiana question. I hope that has been determined in the Senate in some way; though I am not advised. I refer to the Pinchback vote. May I not, however, call attention of gentlemen who are parliamentarians to the precedents showing the propriety of this amendment? In the session of 1855-'56, on the 29th of July, 1856, when the House had under consideration the bill making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1857, the first amendment offered was one repudiating the so-called territorial laws of Kansas, disavowing their authority and enforcement, and declaring that no part of the military force of the United States should be used for carrying out those laws. The proviso to that bill further asserts that no citizen of Kansas shall act as the posse comitatus for any marshal or sheriff, and that the laws "are null and void." (Journal 1855-'56, page 1302.) Perhaps gentlemen there are, now and here present, who will remember that that amendment in substance was offered again and again to the Army bill. It was advocated by republicans. In the Journal, page 1303, a more stringent amendment was offered and passed—91 to 86—on a party vote. It came back on a conference, (page 1531.) Again it was offered in another shape on the 30th of August, 1856, (page 1622,) and passed. I do not say that the merits of that proviso or my own should be discussed and decided on now. I only quote it now as a precedent for republicans to consider; for was it not made by themselves?

There are other similar precedents during that and other sessions. But at the end of that session a long proviso, on the motion of Lewis D. Campbell, of Ohio, was attached to this Army bill. That bill failed between the two Houses by reason of those provisos in respect to liberty and unauthorized legislation in Kansas. It may be known to the House that President Pierce by proclamation called Congress back. It met August 23, 1856. He proclaimed that such legislation "deprived the Executive of the power to perform his duty with respect to the common defense and welfare. That Congress finally passed the Army appropriation bill.

That bill at first failed. This bill will pass if my amendment is adopted, and the money goes to the Army, if just administration prevails.

As my amendment does not destroy the Army bill, but only says that until the liberties of the States of the Union, and the State of Louisiana especially, shall have immunity from Army outrages, no harm can come to the Army and much good to public interests and liberty. So long as the President insists upon putting the bayonet into Louisiana, so long shall this appropriation remain unused. The moment the President withdraws the Army, as the House will see, all these appropriations can be used. So that gentlemen need not be embarrassed if they act right.

I hope that I am speaking in a very proper spirit on this amendment. I speak for parliamentary law and against oppression.

This is not the only reason for the proviso I offer. I am glad my friend from Kansas [Mr. Kasson] is listening—

Mr. KASSON. Iowa.

Mr. COX. Or from Iowa; he is so near the line that I did not know but he had got over it; the gentleman once in a while almost gets into our party.

Again, gentlemen know very well that in 1865, at the end of that exciting session when the Army bill came up, one of the most eminent and eloquent men on that side of the House, Henry Winter Davis, of Maryland, offered an amendment to that bill. It forbade any application of the arbitrary processes of the administration as against men who had been arrested under war powers—arrested and imprisoned illegally. Our prisons were full of such men. The writ of habeas corpus was denied them. Men were arrested for civil crimes under military authority. Courts-martial and military commissions were at work in spite of law and liberty. Mr. Davis proposed to append to the Army bill a proviso, which I ask the Clerk to read. It required the discharge or delivery of those thus held. It came up on the 2d of March, 1865. (Globe, 1323.) That proposition was fought gallantly here some twenty days under the leadership of the most gallant republican then in this House. We fought, to be sure, in vain. After making his points for liberty and law against more money bills, he cried out against the frequent intrusion of military power and the high-handed disregard of habeas corpus. This was in the time of war, too. All I do now is to quote the precedent for my proviso, not to argue. I hope therefore that no point of order will be made, and that a vote may be taken on my amendment.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word, not that I regard it as necessary but in compliment to my colleague, [Mr. Cox.] I have been greatly surprised at his fiery zeal in this matter of the use of the Army.

Mr. COX. I never was so cool in my life.

Mr. WHEELER. That zeal was manifested a few weeks since when he introduced a resolution which I ask the Clerk to read.

Mr. COX. I hope the Clerk will first read the amendment of Henry Winter Davis which I have sent up. I presume my colleague [Mr. WHEELER] does not object.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Cox, by unanimous consent, submitted the following preamble and resolution; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed:

Whereas on the 4th of January instant officers and soldiers of the Army of the United States have interfered with and controlled the organization of the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana, and certain persons claiming seats in one branch thereof have been prevented from holding the same by said military force, which acts of military intervention and control resulted in dispersing the State Legislature and have received the sanction of the Chief Executive of the United States: Therefore,

Resolved, That in the deliberate judgment of this House such intervention and control were in violation of the Federal Constitution, inasmuch as said force was not used for the purposes defined by law, and could not be legally used except for purposes thus specifically defined; that such intervention and control were subversive of the principles upon which our system of government is founded, and have no precedent in our own history or the history of free government; that said intervention and control are defiant breaches of parliamentary privileges, and illegal and revolutionary infractions of legal government, chartered liberty, and solemn treaty obligations, and therefore are not only unjustifiable outrages upon the State of Louisiana and a menace to the liberties, rights, and dignity of every other State, tending to general demoralization and disorder by the overthrow of civil liberty by arbitrary power: We, therefore, in the name of the people of the United States, whose Representatives we are, demand the restoration of tranquillity, order, and civil discipline in said State by the immediate withdrawal of the military force of the United States from said State and the condign punishment of those guilty of this reckless usurpation.

Mr. WHEELER. Now, Mr. Chairman, my colleague tells us in that resolution that there is no precedent in the history of this country or in the history of civil liberty for armed interference in the organization of Legislative bodies. I want to draw a little on his failing memory, and to ask him whether he remembers the early history of the Territory of Kansas? Does he remember that a Missouri mob entered that Territory and usurped its Legislature? Does he remember that Colonel Sumner, an officer of the United States Army, under the direction of Jefferson Davis, then Secretary of War, came down upon that Legislature with his dragoons and drove it out? I now ask my colleague whether he did then or does now approve of that proceeding?

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman want an answer now?

Mr. WHEELER. I do.

Mr. COX. I did not at the time, and I always spoke against it.

Mr. WHEELER. You did not at the time?

Mr. COX. I took Judge Douglas's ground on that subject, and voted—

Mr. WHEELER. You say you did not approve it?

Mr. COX. I did not, sir.

Mr. WHEELER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask the Clerk to read what I have marked in the Congressional Globe.

Mr. COX. The gentleman puts his question to me in this way—whether I ever approved. [Cries of "Read!"] I think I know very well what the Clerk is going to read.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask the Clerk to read remarks made by my colleague [Mr. Cox] on the 24th of July, 1856, when there was pending in this House an amendment offered by some gentleman from the West to the Army appropriation bill—an amendment almost identical with the one which my colleague has offered to-day—forbidding the use of the Army in carrying out what was alleged to be the unlawful legislation of the Territory of Kansas. These remarks of my colleague were made after Colonel Sumner had dispersed the Legislature of Kansas, which was in peaceable session.

Mr. COX. The difference between that case and this is—

Many MEMBERS. Read! Read!

Mr. COX. Why this is a mob; you will have to bring the military in here.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BARBOUR. The gentleman misapprehends the object of the amendment. It is to declare void the laws of the Legislature of Kansas and all of the laws of the United States in force—

Mr. COX. That may be the avowed object here, but the effect of it will be to deny to the President the power of keeping the forces of the Government there until the laws are repealed by Congress. There are now two parties there—one declaring that the laws of the Territory are void, and that they will not obey them; and the other claiming that the laws of the Territory are valid and shall be obeyed. If you leave the Territory unprotected by the arms of the Federal Government, these parties will come into hostile collision, as they have done heretofore. There are men pouring in there from the different sections of the country—some from the North and some from the South—participating in this controversy; and the consequence will be, that by the increased numbers of participants in the strife, the flame of civil discord will be spread over the whole land.

I am in favor of encouraging the heart and of strengthening the arm of the executive power of the Government—

Mr. COX, (interrupting the reading.) What is the date of that?

Many MEMBERS, (to the Clerk.) Go on!

Mr. COX. I rise to a point of order.

Many MEMBERS. Read! Read!

Mr. COX. I know what I am about. I want the date of that speech, to know whether I made it or not.

The Clerk read the date—July 24, 1856.

Mr. COX. Well, sir, that is a speech of a Mr. Cox, of Kentucky—Leander M. Cox. Now, (turning to Mr. WHEELER,) are you not ashamed of yourself?

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. At any rate, he was a democrat. He belonged to the same party with the gentleman.

Mr. COX. I was not a member of Congress then. Captain Leander M. Cox, of Kentucky, was not a democrat.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. He was a member of your party.

Many MEMBERS. Read! Read!

Mr. COX, (taking the book from the Clerk.) Now, Mr. Speaker—Mr. WHEELER. Is it parliamentary for my colleague to take the book from the Clerk before the latter has finished reading what I sent up to be read?

Mr. COX. I want to say to my friend—

Mr. WHEELER. The gentleman can make his disclaimer when he gets the floor.

Mr. COX. I never made or heard that speech. It was made here by Leander M. Cox, a whig know-nothing member from Kentucky. I was not a member then. I know my colleague did not mean to be fool the House with such a trick. I will not attribute this to a fraud.

Mr. WHEELER. I was told that the gentleman made that speech.

Mr. COX. I did not.

Mr. WHEELER. If the gentleman had said he was not a member of the House at that time—

Mr. COX. Why, you would not give me an opportunity to say it. You howled me down.

Mr. WHEELER. Does my colleague say now that he was not a member of the House at that time?

Mr. COX. The record shows that that speech was made by Leander M. Cox, of Kentucky. I did not serve with my namesake.

Mr. WHEELER. Do you say you were not a member of the House at that time?

Mr. COX. In 1856?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes, in 1856.

Mr. COX. I was elected in 1856 and took my seat in December, 1857.

Mr. WHEELER. Then you were not in the session of Congress during July, 1856?

Mr. COX. No, sir; I was not. Do you require more information? Here is the Journal of that Congress.

Mr. WHEELER. Very well; then I withdraw it.

Mr. NIBLACK. The laugh is on our side of the House now.

Several MEMBERS. Read! Read!

Mr. KASSON. Has debate been exhausted on this amendment?

Several MEMBERS. Read! Read!

Mr. COX. Would it not be in order to censure the gentleman from New York?

Mr. KASSON. I rise to move to amend the amendment so that we may have an explanation of all this.

Mr. WHEELER. The book was handed to me. I did not go into any examination when the gentleman from New York stated he had voted and spoken against it. I did not think it was necessary to look further.

Mr. COX. That was during the Douglas era, when we wanted a free State in Kansas.

Mr. WHEELER. I was misled.

Mr. COX. I do not wish to find fault with my colleague.

Mr. WHEELER. The gentleman from New York knows very well I would not do him intentional injustice.

Mr. COX. The fault was on your side of the House. I do not know just what you meant. I hope well. There was so much noise and uproar and so much chuckling and tittering going on at my temporary expense, that I was not allowed any opportunity, at any one moment, to correct the gentleman. O! would that I could have saved my colleague from this mortification.

Mr. WHEELER. If I have done injustice to my colleague I now make the amende.

Mr. COX. My colleague has always been courteous and kind to me. There is no member on his side with whom I like better to serve or confer, legislatively or socially. He has only one fault, and I did not suspect that before. Sir, a member in charge of an appropriation bill covering $40,000,000 ought to be better informed on current history.

Mr. WHEELER. Then my friend ought to know better than to say that he spoke and voted against a measure of which he now says he knows nothing and with which he had no legislative connection.

Mr. COX. My reference was to what came up afterward in the next Congress on the Lecompton constitution.

Mr. WHEELER. But the gentleman was not in that Congress.

Mr. COX. We will not talk about it further.

Mr. WHEELER. I have done.

Mr. COX. And I am satisfied.

Mr. NIBLACK. I desire to ask a question before the vote is taken: whether the gentleman from New York himself indorses the action which the executive took at the time the Lecompton convention was dispersed?

Mr. WHEELER. Not at all; or on any other occasion.

Mr. NIBLACK. I am glad to hear the gentleman say so.

Mr. WHEELER. Did anybody on the democratic side approve of it? Did the gentleman from Indiana himself approve of it?

Mr. NIBLACK. I was not in Congress at the time.

Mr. WHEELER. Does the gentleman know any one who was in Congress at that time?

Mr. NIBLACK. Yes; my honorable friend here from Illinois [Mr. MARSHALL] was in Congress at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the pending amendment.

Mr. Cox's amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses of the Signal Service of the Army, purchase, equipment, and repair of electric field telegraphs and signal equipments, $12,500.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I move to amend by adding the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

And for extension of the Signal Service for the southern coast, $10,000.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I think this an important branch of the public service.

Mr. GARFIELD. I make the point of order on the amendment that it is new legislation. Provision for the Signal Service, excepting only for the force which is kept here at the center, is made in the sundry civil appropriation bill. No part comes in here. The passage here relates simply to officers of the Army employed in this city, and not to the general expenses for keeping up the service. The gentleman will see that his amendment belongs to another bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of the Army, and for allowances to officers of the Army for transportation of themselves and their baggage when traveling on duty without troops, escorts, or supplies, and for compensation of witnesses while on court-martial service; for traveling expenses of paymasters' clerks; for payment of postage on letters and packages, and cost of telegrams received and sent by officers of the Army on public business, $11,400,000: Provided, That hereafter only actual traveling expenses shall be allowed to any person holding employment or appointment under the United States, except marshals of the United States, and their deputies, and all allowances for mileage and transportation in excess of the amount actually paid, except as above excepted, are hereby declared illegal; and no credit shall be allowed to any of the disbursing officers of the United States for payment or allowances in violation of this provision.

Mr. TODD. I move to amend by adding the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

And provided further, That hereafter the instructors of the artillery service at Fortress Monroe, Virginia, shall be placed, in regard to pay, on the same footing with the assistant professors at West Point, to wit, mounted pay.

Mr. WHEELER. I make the point of order this is new legislation and not in order to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order that it is not germane to this paragraph and is besides new legislation.

Mr. TODD. I want to say a word on that subject. I shall have liberty, I suppose, to state the purport of my amendment before it is ruled out on the point of order. I regard this as not making a new appropriation, but simply as a distribution of the amount provided in this section.

Mr. WHEELER. Has not the Chair decided the point of order? This is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania on the point of order.

Mr. TODD. It is for the committee to determine whether this is new legislation, and not for the gentleman from New York. I contend this is not new legislation. This section provides that a certain amount of money shall be appropriated for specific purposes, among other things to pay the officers of the Army. Now, my proposition is that a grade of officers stationed at Fortress Monroe, performing specific duties, shall be paid a certain rate in accordance with the amount paid to officers who perform similar duties elsewhere. This does not ask for any increase in the appropriation, but simply for a distribution of the amount provided for in this bill. And under that view it strikes me that it is not new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk continued the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

For transportation of the Army, including baggage of the troops when moving either by land or water; of clothing and camp and garrison equipment from the depots of Philadelphia and Jeffersonville to the several posts and Army depots, and from those depots to the troops in the field; of horse equipments and of subsistence stores from the places of purchase and from the places of delivery under contract to such places as the circumstances of the service may require them to be sent; of ordnance, ordnance stores, and small arms from the foundries and armories to the arsenals, fortifications, frontier posts, and Army depots; freights, wharfage, tolls, and ferriages; the purchase and hire of horses, mules, oxen, and harness, and the purchase and repair of wagons, carts, and drays, and of ships and other sea-going vessels and boats required for the transportation of supplies and for garrison purposes; for drayage and cartage at the several posts; hire of teamsters, transportation of funds for the pay and other disbursing departments; the expense of sailing public transports on the various rivers, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic and Pacific; for procuring water at such posts as from their situation require it to be brought from a distance; and for clearing roads, and for removing obstructions from roads, harbors, and rivers to the extent which may be required for the actual operations of the troops in the field, $4,000,000: Provided, That no money shall hereafter be paid to any railroad company for the transportation of any property or troops of the United States over any railroad which, in whole or in part, was constructed by the aid of a grant of public land on the condition that such railroad should be "a public highway for the use of the Government of the United States free from toll or other charge," or upon any other conditions for the use of such road, for such transportation; nor shall any allowance be made for the transportation of officers of the Army over any such road when on duty and under orders as military officers of the United States. But nothing herein contained shall be construed as preventing any such railroad from bringing a suit in the Court of Claims for the charges for such transportation, and recovering for the same, if found entitled thereto by virtue of the laws in force prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to offer an amendment to come in after the paragraph which has just been read, and I call the attention of my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add after line 138 these words:

Provided further, That the foregoing restrictions shall not apply for the current and next fiscal years to roads where the sole condition of transportation is that the company shall not charge the Government higher rates than they do individuals for like transportation, and when the Quartermaster-General shall be satisfied that this condition has been faithfully complied with.

Mr. HOLMAN. It does not strike me from the hasty reading of the amendment that this proposition is wrong. On the contrary, it seems to be right. But I would suggest to the gentleman from New York that the difficulty arises from the words inserted in the appropriation bill of last year by the Senate, "or upon any other conditions for the use of such roads." Those words are repeated in this bill, and I think if they were stricken out the whole proviso taken together would be much less ambiguous.

Mr. WHEELER. Would not that defeat the very object which the gentleman from Indiana has in view? We have made permanent in this bill the proviso of last year. But the Solicitor-General has decided that where a road received a grant under any condition, no matter what, compensation for transportation must be withheld. Now, take the case of the Northern Pacific Railroad, where the only condition of the grant was that the company should charge the Government no more than it charged individuals for like services. Under that opinion of the Solicitor-General the Quartermaster-General or the Secretary of the Treasury is withholding compensation for transportation.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is not that the result of this language used in the bill as it passed last session? The words are:

Or upon any other conditions for the use of such road.

That language was not in the bill as it passed the House, but was inserted in the Senate, and it is under that provision that the difficulty the gentleman from New York refers to has arisen. All that is necessary to accomplish the purpose is to strike out those words.

Mr. WHEELER. But that will not meet the emergency for the current fiscal year. This bill only takes effect on the 1st day of July next; but for the current fiscal year the language in the law of last session applies and governs.

Mr. HOLMAN. The latter consideration perhaps ought to govern; and in that view I see no reason why the amendment should not be adopted.

Mr. BROMBERG. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 138 add these words:

And provided further, That no portions of the Army shall be used or detailed as posses of United States marshals, except to aid in executing the decrees of courts of the United States or the national revenue laws.

Mr. WHEELER. I raise the point of order on that amendment. The law now defines when troops may be used. This seeks to change it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BROMBERG. Before the Chair decides the point of order I would like to ask if any law allows the Attorney-General to command the Army of the United States.

Mr. WHEELER. I suggest to the gentleman that he examine the statutes to ascertain that. I have not time to read from them now. I refer the gentleman to the Revised Statutes.

Mr. BROMBERG. I do not think that this amendment changes the law.

Mr. WHEELER. If it be the law now, then the gentleman's amendment is not necessary.

Mr. BROMBERG. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York how large a portion of the expense of transporting troops has arisen from spreading them over so many points—in my own State thirty different points. This involves an enormous expense for the transportation by land and water.

Mr. WHEELER. I cannot inform the gentleman on that point. This bill appropriates a certain sum of money and puts this expenditure in the hands of the Secretary of War.

Mr. BROMBERG. Does the gentleman not know that this disposition of troops is made by the Attorney-General, and not by the Secretary of War?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not.

Mr. HAYS. I will answer my colleague, [Mr. BROMBERG.] It is for the purpose of maintaining and preserving the peace and good order of the State.

Mr. BROMBERG. I want to know how much of these expenses of the Army are legitimate and how much for electioneering purposes.

Mr. COBURN. I offer the following amendment. It is an amendment which costs the Government nothing, and is for the benefit of a very meritorious class of citizens. It is as follows:

And provided further, That hereafter when troops or officers change stations the officers' families shall receive transportation over land-grant and subsidy railroads which shall receive no pay from the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the amendment is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. It is too late to raise the point of order now.

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs if this amendment has ever been recommended by his committee?

Mr. COBURN. Yes; it is recommended by the committee and by the Quartermaster-General, and also by General Ord. The Government does not lose a cent by it, and it is a benefit to these men.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I desire to know if this amendment covers the families of soldiers as entitled to transportation in changing quarters?

Mr. COBURN. They are already carried without expense.

Mr. HOLMAN. It seems to me that my colleague should amend his amendment. If it be proper to say that the subsidized railroad companies shall transport the families of officers free of charge, it is upon the ground that upon the terms and conditions of the grant they were to transport troops and munitions of war. Now, if it is necessary to insert this provision, and if that includes the wives and families of officers, it is also necessary to insert some provision as to the families of soldiers, so as to relieve the Government from charge for their transportation. I therefore suggest to him, in order to relieve the Government from this charge for transportation, that he amend his amendment so as to insert a provision providing for the transportation of the wives and families of the rank and file.

Mr. COBURN. They go along with the soldiers without charge.

Mr. HOLMAN. This change is made upon the ground that soldiers and the families of soldiers are entitled to transportation over these roads as well as Army supplies and munitions of war, and I suggest to my colleague that he modify the language of his amendment so as to include the families of the rank and file.

Mr. COBURN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. BUCKNER. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "officers" and inserting "soldiers."

The committee will understand the object of this amendment. If these roads are under any obligation to carry these parties free of charge, as the gentleman says they are, upon what principle is it?

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. They do it under the grant.

Mr. BUCKNER. If it is in the grant, then we do not need any legislation on the subject. If it is not in the grant, then I take it that this legislation will have no effect at all. If under the grant officers and their families are entitled to transportation, they can get it now; but if that is not in the grant, then this is mere brutum fulmen, and amounts to nothing.

Mr. WHEELER. I think that the gentleman who last addressed the House is correct, that this was a specific contract between the Government and the railroad companies to carry a specific class of persons, and I do not think that either the families of the officers or the soldiers are included.

Mr. HOLMAN. The language of the law is "army supplies and troops," and that language would apply to all persons who properly pertain to the military organization.

Mr. WHEELER. When an army is in motion it is seldom accompanied by the wives and children of the soldiers.

Mr. COBURN. This covers everything. The clerks in the Quartermaster's Department and all persons connected with the Army are carried free over these roads. No railroad company ever thought of making a distinction between the civil and the military employes of the War Department. They all go together.

The question was put on the amendment offered by Mr. COBURN; and on a division there were—ayes 13, noes 29.

Mr. COBURN. I call for tellers.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Here the committee rose informally; and Mr. TYNER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore,

A message from the President, by Mr. O. E. BABCOCK, his Private Secretary, announced that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 4546) to correct errors and to supply omissions in the Revised Statutes of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 1317) to enable Ann Jennette Hathaway, executrix of the last will and testament of Joshua Hathaway, deceased, to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for the extension of letters-patent for improved device for converting reciprocating into rotary motion;

A bill (H. R. No. 1799) granting a pension to Angelica Hammond;

A bill (H. R. No. 2103) giving the approval and sanction of Congress to the route and termini of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad and to regulate its construction and operation;

A bill (H. R. No. 3424) for the relief of Thomas Winans and William L. Winans;

A bill (H. R. No. 4335) authorizing John Hazeltine to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for the extension of his patent for a new and useful water-wheel;

A bill (H. R. No. 3911) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 4535) providing for the distribution of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 2109) for the protection of the United States custom-house in the city of Louisville, Kentucky;

A bill (H. R. No. 3050) to authorize the Seneca Nation of New York Indians to lease lands within the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations; and to confirm existing leases;

A bill (H. R. No. 3825) to amend section 5240 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in relation to the compensation of national-bank examiners;

A bill (H. R. No. 4126) authorizing the Citizens' National Bank of Sanbornton, New Hampshire, to change its name;

A bill (H. R. No. 3915) to authorize the Secretary of War to give permission to extend the Hygeia Hotel at Fortress Monroe, Virginia;

A bill (H. R. No. 3658) for the relief of William J. Coite;

A bill (H. R. No. 4563) to make an appropriation to the contingent fund of the House of Representatives; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 148) authorizing the President to appoint a commissioner to attend the international penitentiary congress at Rome.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session and proceeded with the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. COBURN,] upon which no quorum voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WHEELER and Mr. COBURN were appointed.

The tellers took their places; but before completing and announcing the count,

Mr. WHEELER said: I will not insist upon a further count, but am willing to permit the amendment to be adopted.

The amendment was accordingly agreed to.

Mr. SYPHER. I move to amend the pending paragraph by adding that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad Company, a body corporate under the laws of the State of Louisiana, and now known as Morgan's Louisiana and Texas Railroad, is hereby authorized to relinquish all right, title, and interest to any lands granted, conveyed, or acquired by said company under "An act making a grant of lands to the State of Louisiana to aid in the construction of railroads in said State," approved June 3, 1856, except so much of said grant as said railroad company may have appropriated and occupied and may require for their right of way, road-bed, side-tracks, turn-outs, water stations and depots, not to exceed three hundred feet on each side of their road: Provided, That whenever said Morgan's Louisiana and Texas Railroad shall have made the relinquishment as aforesaid then said railroad shall be exempt and relieved from all conditions and obligations under existing law requiring said railroad to transport without compensation and free of charge any property or troops of the United States.

Mr. WHEELER. I raise the point of order that that amendment involves new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SYPHER. I desire to be heard upon that point before the decision is made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already decided that the amendment is out of order.

Mr. SYPHER. I desire to be heard a moment, if the Chair will permit me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman very briefly.

Mr. SYPHER. The paragraph of this bill now under consideration, as will be seen, relates to railroads that are declared under land-grant acts to be public highways for the use of the Government of the United States upon which to transport troops and property of the United States free of toll or charge. This amendment of mine is directly with reference to that point of transporting Government property and troops free of charge. My amendment relates to a railroad that is denominated a land-grant road; but it has received no benefits of the land grant owing to a discrepancy in the General Land Office. The Secretary of War has referred the subject to the House of Representatives in Miscellaneous Document No. 194 for its consideration. The case is this—

Mr. WHEELER. I must object to arguing the merits of this case upon a point of order. I did not object to this amendment upon the ground of irrelevancy, but because it involved new legislation.

Mr. SYPHER. It is directly in accord with the paragraph we are considering—the transportation of troops and property of the United States over all railroads that have received land grants.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is clearly of opinion that the amendment involves new legislation, and is not in order.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following:

For purchase and manufacture of clothing and camp and garrison equipage, and for preserving and repacking stock of clothing and camp and garrison equipage and materials on hand at the Philadelphia, Jeffersonville, and other depots of the Quartermaster's Department, $1,450,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend the paragraph just read by adding the following:

Provided, That no part of this sum shall be paid for the use of any patented process for the preservation of clothing from moth or mildew.

Mr. WHEELER. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

For engineer depot at Willet's Point, New York, namely, remodeling portions of bridge equipage, and for the current expenses of the depot, purchase of engineering materials for use in instruction of engineer battalion, and purchase and repair of instruments for general service of the Corps of Engineers, $9,000.

Mr. WHEELER. I send to the Clerk's desk an amendment to come in after the paragraph just read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For torpedo experiments in their application to harbor and land defense, and for instruction of engineer battalion in their preparation and application, $10,000.

Mr. WHEELER. The estimate for the usual annual appropriation for the manufacture of torpedoes was this year inadvertently omitted. I offer this amendment at the request of the Engineer Bureau.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why is it necessary to appropriate this sum of money in addition to the $150,000 which we have appropriated for a similar purpose in the naval appropriation bill that has already passed the House? I think that was the sum appropriated in the naval appropriation bill. After appropriating that large amount for this purpose, why is it necessary to appropriate this small sum in addition to be used by the Army?

Mr. WHEELER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] I presume knows that a series of experiments in the use of torpedoes are being made at Willet's Point, and at other points. I am assured by the Chief of Engineers that this amount is necessary for that purpose. In my own judgment these experiments relate more particularly to Army operations, and I think that it will now be assumed that we must hereafter rely more upon torpedoes for harbor defenses than upon our forts.

Mr. HOLMAN. We all seem to agree that the Army and the Navy are the proper departments of the Government to try these experiments, and I do not think there is any objection to the appropriation of a large sum for this purpose. It does not seem, however, that it is necessary to make appropriations to enable both departments of the service to perform the same experiments.

Mr. WHEELER. In the Navy they call for torpedo-vessels. As I have said, there is a series of experiments; and I will say frankly that for myself I would cheerfully approve a much larger appropriation than what has been asked for these torpedo experiments, because I really believe that in the future we must depend more upon the torpedo system than upon anything else as a means of harbor defense.

Mr. GARFIELD. My colleague on the committee [Mr. WHEELER] will allow me to say that the Committee on Appropriations have only been able to cut down the fortification appropriations to the low point to which they have been carried this year and last in view of the fact that they believe the torpedo experiments both in the Navy and the Army (being separate and distinct systems, yet working well together) will very largely supersede the necessity for the great annual outlay which we have hitherto been making for fortifications.

The Navy has a system of torpedo-boats and matters of that sort to attack vessels coming in, while the Army has a system of locating torpedoes at the bottom of harbors, so that by means of telegraphic wires they can be exploded under vessels. We think that this appropriation is perhaps the wisest of all our appropriations for coast defense.

Mr. HOLMAN. Whatever may be the need of a torpedo system for defensive purposes, it does not seem to me to require this everlasting duplication of appropriations.

Mr. GARFIELD. There is no duplication at all. One system is wholly under the control of the Navy, and relates to attacking vessels coming in by sending out torpedo-boats to meet them and exploding torpedoes against them. The other is a system of harbor defense by sinking torpedoes at the bottom of our harbors.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORT. I offer the following amendment:

For preparing, printing, and binding five thousand additional copies of the Medical and Surgical History of the War of the Rebellion, $50,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. An appropriation of that kind has been reported in the sundry civil bill now upon our tables.

Mr. FORT. Then I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill; the last paragraph being as follows:

For manufacture, at national armories, of the new model breech-loading musket and carbine adopted for the military service on recommendation of the board of officers convened under act of June 6, 1872, $100,000: Provided, That hereafter no money shall be expended at said armories in the perfection of patentable inventions in the manufacture of arms by officers of the Army otherwise compensated for their services to the United States.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Chairman, there has been an oversight in the estimates with reference to the expenditures at the Springfield armory; and while the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. GARFIELD] is preparing an amendment to correct that oversight I will explain the matter.

There has been expended every year at that armory about $500,000. The appropriation in the bill of last year was only $100,000; and that appropriation was followed in the preparation of this bill. But there was expended $400,000 from another source which is not available this year. All that can be available this year, if the bill should pass in this form, would keep in employ only half the number of men now employed in that armory. The rest would have to be discharged. The Committee on Appropriations had no intention to produce that result. Following the language of the bill of last year and not bearing in mind the fact that the Department was authorized to draw for this purpose upon the fund for arming the militia of the different States, the committee have fallen into this mistake. A provision now being prepared by the gentleman from Ohio will remedy the oversight. I have a communication from the Ordnance Department setting forth all the facts.

I now offer as an amendment the following proviso, which will meet the case, and to which I presume the gentleman in charge of the bill will not object:

Provided, That from the proceeds of sales of ordnance and ordnance stores now authorized by law an additional amount may be used in said manufacture; the whole amount to be used not to exceed the amount available for this purpose during the current fiscal year.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. How much does that make available?

Mr. DAWES. In all about $500,000, the amount available for this purpose under the act of last year.

Mr. CONGER. I think we have a law which requires that all money received from sales of public property shall be covered into the Treasury. That is a law of the land which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] himself has been very efficient in enforcing when it applied to anything else than Springfield armory. I make the point of order that this amendment contains new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands, the gentleman raises the point that this amendment proposes to change the law requiring all balances to be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. CONGER. The law now requires that all moneys received from sales of public property shall be covered into the Treasury to be reappropriated if required for any purpose. This amendment is certainly a very general way of appropriating all that might be received from sales of ordnance and ordnance stores.

Mr. DAWES. The amount is limited.

Mr. RANDALL. The law which this proviso proposes to contravene was designed to reach just such cases.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to state that I had not my attention called to it, or time to consult with the Committee on Appropriations, but one thing appears in reference to the Ordnance Department which I desire the House to understand. Last year there was available from funds on hand, balance available for this purpose, a sum of money which did not need to appear in the appropriation bill, and which made for that year as much more in addition to what the annual appropriation called for. We have followed the same plan this year in taking no account of unexpended balances. I do not know enough of the case to say how we should cover the unexpended balance into the Treasury, but the House should understand we are cutting down the appropriation for the manufacture of arms more than $200,000 from what was appropriated last year. There is hardly time in this hurried way to adjust it, so it may be best to let it go to the Senate as it is.

Mr. WHEELER. What is the question before the House?

Mr. ALBRIGHT. What becomes of my amendment?

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman from Pennsylvania I hope will withhold his amendment for the present, while I move to strike out "100" and insert "325," so it will then read:

For manufacture, at national armories, of the new model breech-loading musket and carbine, adopted for the military service on recommendation of the board of officers convened under act of June 6, 1872, $325,000.

I will now read what the Ordnance Department says on this subject:

(Memoranda.)

After a careful examination of the amount of money that will be available for the manufacture of arms at the Springfield armory during the next fiscal year I find that we will have from—

Arming and equipping the militia, from past appropriations still remaining on hand June 30, 1875.....	$75,000
Appropriation for 1876, for arming and equipping militia, one-half only available, the remainder needed for other ordnance stores for militia.....	100,000
Amount to be appropriated as per Army appropriation bill 1876.....	100,000

Total for 1876..... 275,000

During the present fiscal year the amount allotted to the armory has been as follows:

Appropriated for arms.....	$100,000
From arming and equipping militia.....	400,000

Total for 1875..... 500,000

This shows that unless the appropriation for the manufacture of arms is increased the work at the armory must be reduced one-half and about two hundred and fifty workmen discharged on the 1st of July next.

If Congress will not appropriate additional money it may authorize the Department to use an additional amount from "the proceeds of sales of ordnance stores," for instance, provided that the proceeds of sales of ordnance and ordnance stores may be used to replace the same by purchase or manufacture.

ARMAMENT FOR FORTIFICATIONS.

The President in his message recommended the appropriation of $250,000 for converting cannon into rifles, and $250,000 for experiments and tests of heavy guns, &c.

The House Military Committee have recommended $250,000 for converting guns and only $100,000 for experiments, &c.

The latter sum should be increased to $250,000. These experiments and tests are very costly, and there will be eight experimental guns ready for trial this summer, and it is absolutely necessary that the experiments be conducted without delay. The accompanying papers give all the details. To fully test our cast-iron lined with steel or wrought iron, one 10-inch and one 12-inch rifle should be manufactured at once; their total cost will be $40,000 and the cost of testing these two guns will more than double this amount.

To enable this Department to make all these tests $250,000 is the least that should be appropriated. Other nations have spent many millions in such experiments, and are spending large sums annually in the same direction. The Ordnance Department is held responsible for the proper armament for sea-coast defense, and the responsibility will be a heavy one if a war should find our harbors defenseless; and yet Congress fails to listen to our annual appeals in this regard.

Experimental guns that are to be tried under act of 1872: One 9-inch Sattelle breech-loading cannon and carriage; one 12-inch Thompson breech-loading cannon and carriage; one 9-inch Woodbridge cannon and carriage; one 9-inch Hitchcock wrought-iron cannon and carriage; one 9-inch converted with steel tube; one 8-inch converted with steel tube; one 9-inch converted with wrought-iron tube; one 8-inch converted with wrought-iron tube, (already tried.)

By adding $225,000 to the $100,000 already appropriated in this bill you will then have the amount appropriated last year, and the men employed at this Springfield armory will not be discharged. If you discharge these men you will break up the establishment; that is all.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, my friend from Massachusetts has put this thing now upon its naked merits. It has not been covered up by reference to other laws. I hoped he would be able inasmuch as in another capacity he is pressing upon the House taxation for the purpose of meeting the ordinary expenses of the Government—I hoped, I say, he would be able to show the absolute necessity of this appropriation for the manufacture of more small-arms. Sir, I deny there is any such necessity. This Government has already an accumulation of 118,687 breech-loaders. It has of muzzle-loaders an accumulation of 584,494. There is no necessity for it whatever.

My friend from Massachusetts says if you do not increase this appropriation a portion of the workmen at the Springfield armory must be discharged. What claim have the workmen at Springfield on the tax-payers of the country over and above any other locality?

But we are told the Ordnance Department asks it. What do they not ask? Like the daughters of the horse-leech, that Department is constantly crying, Give! give!

Let the committee look at the inventory of the useless ordnance stores on hand. Every page of the book is filled up with accumulation of useless ordnance stores on hand. Our armories are groaning to-day with accumulated arms.

We are called on every year, and this bill contains the appropriation, for from thirty to forty thousand dollars for cleaning, repairing, and keeping in order accumulated ordnance stores for which there is no earthly use whatever.

If I made a proposition I should say that with the eight-hour system of labor and with the endless round of superintendents on the part of the Government arms could be made by private establishments much cheaper. But, sir, as I said last year in the discussion of the Army appropriation bill, I would keep up this armory; I would keep up a small band of trained and skilled artisans there. Beyond that I would not go.

We give $100,000 for the next year for the manufacture of arms not needed and for the purpose of keeping up that armory, so that in the event of war it may prevent a monopoly on the part of private manufacturers. That is the only reason why in my judgment any appropriation should be made for the Springfield armory. I trust my friend will not urge, in the present condition of the Treasury and with this accumulated supply of ordnance stores, we should vote another dollar to this or any other armory.

Mr. DAWES. I am asked why I do not show the necessity of manufacturing the arms at the Springfield armory. I have nothing to do with that branch of the public service. I have nothing to do with that matter. That belongs to the gentlemen who have the Army appropriation bill in charge; and unless they see the necessity of this, it is not for me to urge it. I only want it to be distinctly understood that you are to discharge these men because you do not want more arms.

I believe it is good policy to take the arms we now have in the hands of the several States, which are not worth a copper in their present condition, because they are old-fashioned arms that cannot be used. I believe it is better to take them to the armory and replace them with an arm available for service; but let us not keep those arms idle in the several States. That is what this armory has been doing for a number of years. If there is no occasion to do that, then let it not be done. I am not asking the House to vote $500,000 to keep up an armory because it happens to be at Springfield, in my district. If it be a good policy to stop work at the armory, and to leave the arms in that condition in the hands of the several States, not worth anything because they are old-fashioned arms, then it is all right to stop your armory; but I submit that you ought to have a policy that is well understood and well defined.

My friend from New York [Mr. WHEELER] happens to be of the opinion that private armories can better manufacture the arms and arm the militia of this country than the Government can at these public armories, where it has spent so much money in the plans, in the establishment, and in the machinery. The gentleman acts according to his sense of duty when he proposes to starve out the armory at Springfield and give this over to private institutions. That is his conviction of the best way to do it. But hitherto up to this hour it has been the policy of the Government to manufacture their own arms, and they have just as much as they can do now at that work.

I do not care whether you vote one dollar to the Springfield armory or not. The Springfield armory is not essential to the happiness of the city of Springfield or the eleventh district of Massachusetts. I have merely called the attention of the committee to the fact that, while you have appropriated up to this year $500,000 to manufacture these arms and replace those in the hands of the several States, you propose this year to appropriate only $100,000.

Mr. WHEELER. With a permanent standing appropriation of $200,000, which gives this armory $300,000 for the next year.

Mr. DAWES. But that can only be made available in part; what I have read shows to what extent.

Mr. CONGER. Does the gentleman mean to say that Springfield has had this armory maintained at so great an expense for so many years, and still is not happy?

Mr. DAWES. Springfield did not have it at all. It was the Government of the United States that had it. Springfield is entirely happy, whether the armory goes up or goes down.

Mr. MERRIAM. There is one fact which ought to have some consideration when the committee votes upon this question.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the pending amendment.

Mr. MERRIAM. Then I move to amend by striking out "$325,000" and inserting "$200,000."

I was about to say to the committee that there was one fact which ought to have some consideration when voting upon this question. It is well known that there is not a day passes and scarcely an hour that there are not inventions and improvements made in our arms, making those which were made yesterday comparatively obsolete and worthless compared with those that are made to-day. And when we manufacture at the Springfield armory tens of thousands of arms which we do not require in times of peace like the present, and which we will never use, there is no possible advantage in it that I can see. It is almost a waste of money, and this, too, at a time when all our people dread increased taxation.

Mr. Chairman, my colleague who reports this bill has told us that we are now spending $25,000 a year for cleaning hundreds of thousands of unused arms and keeping off rust. Now you propose to expend $325,000 to manufacture and pile away many thousands more of them when we have no use for them, and increase the $25,000 perhaps to $35,000 for preserving them from destruction by rust.

And there is another point to be considered here. The Government in this matter of manufacturing does not do the work as well or as cheaply as it can be done by private enterprise. We can to-day produce a better arm at a private establishment for a less price than it is produced at the Springfield armory.

Then, again, if the time ever comes when we have use suddenly for a large quantity of arms, if by our large annual appropriations we shut out encouragement to establish new armories by filling the country with a larger overstock of arms all made at one place, and that a Government armory, there will be no new private armories established. Hence, when the time comes, if it ever does, that the country must enter the market to contract for large quantities of arms, there will not be the competition which would be if manufacturers were not now forced out of business or to idleness by Government doing this work—that is, these armories depending upon home Government work, and then you will find the Government left at the mercy of half a dozen manufacturers and forced to pay their own prices.

Mr. CONGER. What private armories would the gentleman encourage?

Mr. MERRIAM. All American armories outside of this one.

Mr. DAWES. What would be the price of arms at your private armories in case of war?

Mr. MERRIAM. Let me tell the gentleman from Massachusetts that during the war our private armories went to work and manufactured arms cheaper and better than they could be produced at the Government armory or purchased in other countries.

Mr. DAWES. That was because at the Springfield armory they turned out a thousand muskets a day to keep your private armories in check as to their prices.

Mr. MERRIAM. The gentleman forgets that one private armory at Iliou, New York, then turned out sixteen hundred breech-loading rifles every twenty-four hours, and but for the energy of the Remingtons greater delay would have followed the arming of our regiments, and I never heard that the Government complained of their prices for arms.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was upon the amendment of Mr. MERRIAM to the amendment of Mr. DAWES, so as to reduce the amount proposed from $325,000 to $200,000; and being taken, it was not agreed to; upon a division ayes 3, noes not counted.

The question was upon the amendment of Mr. DAWES to strike out "$100,000" and to insert in lieu "$325,000."

Mr. DAWES. I will modify my amendment so as to make the sum $225,000.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I move to amend the bill by adding to it the following:

That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, from any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $40,000, to be used under the direction of the Secretary of War in the construction of such walls or other works as may be necessary for the protection of the banks of the Colorado River at Yuma military depot, Arizona.

Mr. WHEELER. I must raise the point of order that this is an appropriation not authorized by existing law.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Hear me a moment.

Mr. WHEELER. That appropriation, if made at all, should be in the river and harbor bill, not in the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. It is not intended for the improvement of a river or a harbor, but to protect the principal military post we have in the Territory of Arizona.

Mr. WHEELER. Then let it come in as an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I was instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to move the amendment to this bill, because it is intended to protect and preserve quartermaster's stores. If it should be offered to the other bill, I presume it will be objected that it does not properly belong to that bill.

The Secretary of War, the Quartermaster-General, and all the officers who have examined this matter say that unless this appropriation is made and means taken to protect this property, the Government will lose these buildings. These buildings, when first erected, were at some distance from the river. Since then the current of the river has changed; the river has washed out the banks where these buildings are; and unless something is done to check the further encroachment of the river, these buildings will soon be destroyed. There is no other Government building there in which these quartermaster stores can be placed and preserved. It is our principal military depot there. I have here communications from the Secretary of War, the Quartermaster-General, and the subordinate military officers now in that country, certifying to the necessity of this appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not necessary that the gentleman shall debate the merits of the proposition on a mere point of order. The Chair is clearly of the opinion that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I do not understand that the gentleman from New York [Mr. WHEELER] insists upon his point of order.

Mr. WHEELER. I do insist upon my point of order that this is new legislation; that the law requires that no appropriation of this kind shall be made until a survey has been made; and it is not pretended here that any survey of this work has ever been made or any estimate made.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I have it here.

Mr. WHEELER. By the Engineer Department?

Mr. ALBRIGHT. By the Quartermaster's Department.

Mr. WHEELER. Ah!

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. It must come in some bill, and why is it not appropriate to the Army appropriation bill?

Mr. CONGER. I want to make a remark on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already decided the point of order.

Mr. CONGER. It may still be open to remark.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] speaking promiscuously? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. CONGER. This proposition was sent to the Committee on Commerce, as if it were connected in some way with the improvement of rivers. The Committee on Commerce thought that the sole object of the proposed appropriation was to protect a military building and the stores therein, and they reported it back and asked to have it referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. The Committee on Military Affairs now ask that for the purpose of protecting a military building and military stores by preventing the encroachment of the river on its banks. I think it properly belongs to this bill, or else you might leave all the military stores and military buildings unprotected. If there is anything that the appropriations made by the Army appropriation bill can properly be used for, it is to protect the military buildings and military stores that are paid for out of those appropriations. I make these remarks and ask the Chairman to review his decision.

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the committee now rise and report this bill to the House.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Has the point of order been finally decided?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair adheres to his ruling on the point of order.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I would like to say a word on the point of order, not upon the merits of the amendment itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman briefly.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. It strikes me that this amendment is just as much in order on this bill as if an amendment was offered in relation to renewing or mending the machinery in a Government armory, or providing new underpinning necessary to preserve Army property. It seems to me that the point of order could be made against it everywhere except on this one bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Can the gentleman give a solitary precedent for an appropriation of this kind where there has been no prior estimate?

Mr. MCCORMICK. This is not a proposition to make a river or harbor improvement, but simply to protect certain military storehouses which it is estimated have cost the Government over $200,000. They were erected at some distance from the Colorado River, but that great stream, which has been denominated "the Mississippi of the Pacific coast," has a changing current and channel, and within two or three years has worn away the banks at Yuma so as to make requisite protecting walls. The citizens of the town of Yuma, adjoining the military depot, were authorized by the Legislature of Arizona to raise a special tax to build such walls in front of the town and the Government is only asked to protect its own valuable property.

The amendment now proposed I introduced at the last session of Congress as a distinct bill and it is now on the Calendar of the House, having been favorably reported in January last by the Committee on Military Affairs. The Secretary of War has twice called the attention of the House to the necessity of this appropriation, and if it is not now made and the buildings and their contents should suffer from the encroachments of the river, the responsibility will not rest upon the War Department, the Committee on Military Affairs, or the representative of the people of Arizona. The estimated cost is based upon the figures of the Quartermaster's Department sent to the House and printed in Executive Documents No. 154 and No. 261 of last session.

Mr. WHEELER. There seems to be an estimate made by the Quartermaster-General's Department. I told the Delegate from the Territory of Arizona [Mr. MCCORMICK] two months ago that this should be estimated for regularly and if that was done I would be willing to admit it. The estimate ought to come from the Engineer Department of the Army.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. We do not require an estimate every year for every quartermaster's shed that is built in the country, or whenever you put in a new sill or new underpinning under one already built.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair adheres to his ruling that the proposed amendment is not in order.

Mr. SHERWOOD. I offer the following amendment, which was made in order under a suspension of the rules:

Add to the bill the following:

In all contracts for material for any public improvement the Secretary of War shall give preference to American material; and all labor thereon shall be performed within the jurisdiction of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOWNDES. I offer the following as a new section:

SEC. — That the Quartermaster-General of the United States Army be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to examine and report on all claims now on file in his office for the use and occupation of private buildings and lands of loyal claimants that were held, used, and occupied by the military forces of the United States, and refer the same to the Third Auditor of the United States Treasury.

Mr. WHEELER. I make the point of order that this amendment involves new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the committee rise and report the bill.

Mr. CONGER. I move to amend by striking out the proviso of the last section of the printed bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is that motion in order? We have passed that section and considered other propositions.

The CHAIRMAN. That section has been passed.

Mr. CONGER. Then I move to amend the bill (we have not passed the bill) by striking out from the middle of line 214 to the end of line 218.

Mr. WHEELER. We have passed that.

Mr. CONGER. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. WHEELER] pretend that before the committee rises to report the bill it is not in order to go back and amend the last paragraph of the printed bill?

Mr. RANDALL. That section has been passed and new sections added.

Mr. WHEELER. The gentleman can propose to add a new section, but he cannot go back.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan can move an addition to the bill, if he desires to do so.

Mr. GARFIELD. If it were in order for the gentleman to go back to that paragraph, he could go back to the first paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Chairman, I assert that the last paragraph of this bill has not been passed. It must be still under consideration.

Mr. WHEELER. I call attention to the fact that the committee has considered new matter, new propositions, since that paragraph was under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has voted on a proposition to add a new section.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. What is the question, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WHEELER] moves that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

Mr. CONGER. I insist on my right to offer my amendment. I desire to state that there was added to this section not a new section but an amendment by way of addition to the last printed paragraph. Now I propose still further to amend that paragraph. The Chair cannot recognize all gentlemen at once; and I am one of that unfortunate class that is generally not first recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled that the gentleman can add to the section, but he has not proposed to do so.

Mr. CONGER. I propose to amend the section, because we have not passed from it. The other amendments have been amendments to it. There has been no new section added.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. The section requiring materials of American manufacture to be used in public works has been adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that the gentleman from Michigan may move an addition to the bill. A motion has been made to add a new section, but it has been voted down. The gentleman from Michigan has moved to strike out the proviso in the printed bill; and the Chair holds that motion not in order. Does the gentleman from Michigan propose a new section?

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman will please send it up.

Mr. CONGER. I will state it now and afterward reduce it to writing. I move to add as a new section the following:

Sec. 3. The proviso on page 10, line 214, shall not take effect until January 1, 1879.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to make a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment must first be reduced to writing.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point that the amendment nullifies what the committee have already adopted.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Sec. 3. That the proviso in this bill, being the last proviso of section 1 of the bill, shall not take effect till January 1, 1879.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to occupy the attention of the committee for a moment. I will not speak about the inaccuracies in the language of the proviso I have moved to strike out, because it is probably not expected that every committee in its reports to this House should use good grammar. But here is a proviso which restricts any experiments upon any inventions in regard to fire-arms that may possibly be patented—in regard to which there is a possibility of their being patented! It confines experiments in arms to the old kinds of arms—those that have either been patented heretofore or that are not worth patenting. Why should it be proposed that in an organization like the Army, where the perfection of our arms is desirable, and in regard to which we make large appropriations for experiments, there should be no experiments upon new inventions which might possibly be patentable?

Mr. WHEELER. Point out the grammatical inaccuracy.

Mr. CONGER. I will let the grammarians and the scholars of the House attend to that. I ask why we should prevent experiments or inventions simply because they may hereafter or now be patentable?

Mr. WHEELER. I will turn my friend from Michigan over to my friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONGER. He has already told the House that he has nothing at all to do with these things, and that it is the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to attend to them. I regard the whole committee has been misled by the influence of the gentleman from Massachusetts, Senator-elect.

Mr. WHEELER. I wish to say to my friend from Michigan, having due regard for the modesty of my friend from Massachusetts, I suppose the intent of the proviso was that whenever the Government compensated the officer fully for his service it was entitled to all his skill in perfecting these patentable articles.

Mr. DAWES. That was not it.

Mr. CONGER. It is as I have said, gentlemen have been misled on this whole subject by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. DAWES. I will state the object of the proviso if I can have the floor.

Mr. CONGER. I hope this will not come out of my time. After I am done the gentleman from Massachusetts can explain.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan has one minute left.

Mr. CONGER. That is plenty for my purpose. This proviso says no money shall be expended in the perfection of inventions of arms or in the perfection of patentable inventions in the manufacture of arms by officers of the Army—that is the grammatical part of it to which I have referred—otherwise compensated for their service to the United States. Why should not experiments be made on all inventions? Why should the officers of the United States, whose whole lives have been devoted to the perfection of arms, be precluded from such experiments? Why should any experiments be denied which might possibly lead to the perfecting of patentable inventions of arms? Why should they be denied to the skill and genius of the officers of the Army more than any other citizens of the United States.

I have only suggested these things. It seems to me to be the most ridiculous proviso ever inserted in any appropriation bill, and I call upon gentlemen to say why experiments should not be made or inventions whether patentable or not?

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Chairman, it is correct that this was in the Army appropriation bill last year, and I will tell the House how it came to be put in there. Army officers are apt to devote their time to making inventions in fire-arms. It is natural they should, and they make useful ones. Hence, when an Army officer gets to work on an invention on fire arms, he is in the habit of having himself detailed to one of our armories where he can carry on his experiments at the expense of the United States.

A MEMBER. For the benefit of the United States.

Mr. DAWES. No; not for the benefit of the Government of the United States, for when he gets it perfected he steps outside, and the Government of the United States cannot have the use of it unless it pays him. It came to the knowledge of the House last year that one or two Army officers had got detailed to armories for the purpose of using the machinery of the armories and their tools and their men to perfect their inventions. They had applied for patents at the Patent Office, so that when they got their patents they were independent of everybody, the United States as well as anybody else. It was supposed that if an Army officer made an invention he should not have an advantage over a citizen making one, that is, that the United States should not furnish him with the materials, the machinery, and the time of its men to perfect an invention of which he was to have the sole benefit when it was perfected. This proviso therefore was put into the Army appropriation bill. Several officers were at once relieved from detail and sent back to their regiments who were at the armories having the benefits of their appliances and to that extent an advantage over all other citizens.

The gentleman from Michigan does not understand it if he understands it deprives the officers of the United States of the privilege of making experiments or trying to improve their inventions. The object was not to give an Army officer any advantage over anybody else in making experiments by furnishing him with machinery and tools and employes of the Government, when after it was done he was to have the entire control of it. That was the purpose of it. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MERRIAM. I move to strike out the last word, and yield my five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.]

Mr. CONGER. I wish to say a word or two more. The gentleman from Massachusetts knows there is in this House and has been for a long number of years a disposition to refuse to any inventor of fire-arms or anything else which was for the benefit of the Government, made by an employe of the Government, any compensation whatever.

I say there has been a disposition to refuse to a skilled officer of the Army, who made inventions that if made in other walks of life would have been worth thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars to the inventor but are only useful in the Army and Navy—there has been a disposition to refuse him any compensation whatever. The Government has seized the brain labor of its officers without any compensation to the value of millions of dollars. It has refused them all compensation whatever for their genius and invention and their skill in bringing their inventions to perfection. And this would prevent them from even experimenting in the armory where they are stationed. Now, it seems to me that from whatever source an invention of this kind may come, the armory is the very place to experiment, the very place to perfect it, and the only place to perfect it. It seems to me that is what the armory is for, and to say that the officer's invention shall not have the same rights with the citizen's invention seems to me a reflection upon their skill, upon their knowledge, upon their experience, and deprives the Government of their service. In my judgment that proviso will prevent benefits to the United States in the manufacture of new inventions in fire-arms and ordnance far beyond the value of the time taken in trying to experiment upon these inventions. It is for that reason I oppose that proviso, and I hope it may be stricken out.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. This subject has received more or less discussion by gentlemen of the House during the present session, not perhaps on the floor, but in the proper forum.

I take it that this proviso does not amount to a prohibition of experimenting on new inventions. I do not understand that, by any construction of the proviso, the experimenting on new inventions is in the least prohibited or affected. But it is for the purpose of taking from these officers the special opportunities that they have for invention in giving to them the materials, the skilled labor, and the capital of the country for their own special benefit to make an invention at the public expense and then reap the whole reward.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. How is it that an officer of the Army, unless he is allowed to go to one of these armories to perfect his invention, can obtain the necessary tools and machinery for his purpose? A civilian might obtain them in private shops, but an officer of the Army cannot go outside the line of his duty. And in consequence of this prohibition the Government cannot derive the benefit of his skill and invention.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. That is not the question. The question is whether we shall give to these men a special privilege which we give to nobody else; whether we shall have a class here to whom we shall give privileges that shall not be enjoyed by any others. Because a man has been educated at the public expense, because he has been commissioned by the Government of the United States, because he is paid a salary for life—this does not give to him the extraordinary consideration that he shall have the whole power of the Government, of its revenues, of its skilled labor, of its materials, to gather to himself a reward that no other man can enjoy in any way whatever.

Mr. MAYNARD. Will the gentleman allow me to suggest there—

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. I decline to be interrupted at this point. Now, whenever a man is educated by the General Government, whenever he is commissioned by the General Government, whenever he is given a life office by the General Government, and want is thereby kept from him and his family, I take it that he enters into an obligation that the very best services of which he is capable shall be rendered for the benefit of the Government and not his own benefit. If this proviso were of such a character as to apply to all classes of citizens and that any other person could have like facilities, like privileges, and like opportunities, there could be no objection to it. But it goes further than any provision that I know of that has yet been seriously proposed in the legislation of this country; it goes further than the patent-right laws; it says to this man "We absolve you from your obligation to the Government by your education; we absolve you from your obligation to the Government as an officer, and we give you in addition to this absolution these remarkable and exclusive privileges." These are privileges that no man on this floor enjoys. The greatest inventor of the age is cut out by this. The greatest inventor of fire-arms cannot for a moment come in competition with this man, who has all of these revenues, all of this skilled labor, all of this material at his own disposal, at his own free will.

I take it, sir, that we ought to limit this power and say to these men that when they receive an education at the cost of the Government and when they receive their commissions from the Government they agree in honor that they will give the highest possible fruits of their genius to the public. I say we ought not to give to them this extraordinary privilege—this privilege unheard of anywhere else.

Let me call attention to another point. By actual and specific legislation we have prohibited the employes of the Patent Office from applying for a patent during their employment in that office. And why is it, sir, that we do this? It is because they have there peculiar facilities which nobody else enjoys.

Now, why should we prohibit our examiners in the Patent Office and the clerks in the Patent Office from applying for patents, and still leave to the officers of the Army a greater privilege and right, for there can be no greater privilege than that of experimenting in patents at the expense of the Government.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was taken on the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to strike out the last word.

Many MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair supposes that the motion of the gentleman is to strike out the last word of the bill.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to strike out the last word in the proviso, and I do it for the purpose of saying this: that it seems to me that as the amendment is drawn it does not accomplish what gentlemen seem to desire.

Mr. FORT. As the Chair has held that a motion to strike out the whole proviso is not in order, I submit that it is not in order to strike out a part of it.

The CHAIRMAN. This is merely a pro forma motion.

Mr. MAYNARD. I do not wish to discuss the question if it has been decided, but I understand that the subject is still under consideration. Then I offer the following amendment as an additional section of the bill:

Sec. —. That the several sums by this act appropriated shall be and remain available for the several objects of appropriation until the same are exhausted, and no part thereof shall be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. WHEELER. I make the point of order that that changes the act of 1872.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is compelled to sustain the point of order.

Mr. MAYNARD. It occurs to me that this amendment does not come within the purview of the rule. This amendment is merely applicable to the present appropriation. It merely provides that the appropriation now made shall be available for specific purposes, and shall not be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. WHEELER. The act of 1872 provided that not one dollar of the appropriation should be expended except during the current fiscal year.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and, the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3820) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, and with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill passed.

Mr. WHEELER. I call the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHEELER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask the gentleman to modify that motion so as to allow me to move that the Committee on the District of Columbia shall have an evening session on Monday next instead of this evening.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will do so.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Has not the Committee on the District of Columbia a right to a session for to-night?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that they desire to have the evening of Monday next instead of this evening. Is there objection to the change?

Mr. MERRIAM. I object.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I object because I want them to have this evening.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that they want Monday evening instead of this evening.

Mr. GARFIELD. We have been here nearly every night for a long time, and I think that the proposition is a reasonable one.

Mr. MYERS. I have no objection if the House will allow the Committee on Naval Affairs to have Tuesday evening.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. BOWEN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to print in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD some remarks upon current affairs. (See Appendix.)

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SHANKS. I wish to give notice of a resolution which I shall offer on Monday next.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I understand that the gentleman from New York [Mr. MERRIAM] is willing to withdraw his objection to the change proposed according to the Committee on the District of Columbia Monday evening instead of this evening.

Mr. MERRIAM. I withdraw my objection, because I understand that one of the members of the Committee on the District of Columbia is sick.

The SPEAKER. On account of the illness of one of the members of the Committee on the District of Columbia and the inclemency of the weather, that committee ask that in place of this evening they be allowed an evening session on Monday next. Is there objection?

Mr. MERRIAM. It was for the reason stated by the Chair that I withdrew my objection.

No objection was made.

AFFAIRS IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. POLAND. I desire to report a resolution from the Select Committee on Affairs in Arkansas, that it may be printed and recommended. The committee recommend to the House the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the report of the Select Committee on the Condition of Affairs in the State of Arkansas be accepted, and that in the judgment of this House no interference with the existing government in that State by any Department of the Government of the United States is advisable.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I object to the reception of that resolution.

Mr. POLAND. I merely desire that the resolution shall be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I do not desire it printed anywhere.

Mr. POLAND. You cannot help yourself, for it will be in the RECORD now.

The SPEAKER. On what ground does the gentleman object?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I believe I have a right to object to the reception of the resolution. I believe that under the rules of the House a resolution even for printing cannot be reported except by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Vermont had a right to report at any time.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Is there not a question of higher privilege pending, the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not so understand. The Chair thinks that that motion was withdrawn.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The gentleman made his report some days ago.

Mr. GARFIELD. That did not exhaust his right to report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that this resolution is only reported for printing and recommitment.

Mr. POLAND. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. It will be printed in the RECORD, having been read as a part of the proceedings of the House.

Mr. POLAND. I now desire to say that at as early a day next week as is consistent with the public business I shall bring up the report, with this resolution, for the consideration of the House.

Mr. HYNES. Is this the report of the whole committee? Is there no minority report?

The SPEAKER. The form in which a minority report would come up would be in the nature of a substitute for the report of the majority. That would be the parliamentary action in such a case.

The resolution was recommitted to the committee and ordered to be printed.

Mr. POLAND. I have entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the report was recommitted.

Mr. TREMAIN. I desire to ask if the discussion on the Arkansas question will rise on the motion to reconsider?

The SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider opens the whole question, and gives entire latitude for discussion if the House so chooses.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Why did the gentleman from Vermont enter a motion to reconsider, if he had the right to report at any time?

The SPEAKER. He entered it in order to "make assurance double sure."

LEVI W. POND AND EAU CLAIRE LUMBER COMPANY.

Mr. CONGER, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Patents, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4818) to amend an act entitled "An act extending a patent to Levi W. Pond and Eau Claire Lumber Company," approved June 10, 1872; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. RANDALL. Not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

Mr. CONGER. I will consent to that.

POST-OFFICE BUILDING IN BALTIMORE.

Mr. SWANN, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted a report in relation to the erection of a new post-office in the city of Baltimore; which was ordered to be printed and recommitted.

STREET RAILWAY COMPANIES OF THE DISTRICT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

Under the requirements of section 6 of the act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, approved June 20, 1874, I have the honor to submit herewith a report of the board of audit upon the amount equitably chargeable to the street railroad companies, pursuant to the charters of said companies or the acts of Congress relative thereto, together with the reasons therefor.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 19, 1875.

The message, with accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PENDLETON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

- An act (S. No. 625) for the relief of Lemuel D. Evans, late collector of internal revenue for the fourth district of Texas;
- An act (S. No. 836) granting a pension to William Ira Mayfield;
- An act (S. No. 862) granting a pension to Margaret S. Hastings;
- An act (S. No. 1070) granting a pension to Margaret C. Wells;
- An act (S. No. 1080) granting a pension to J. W. Caldwell, of Marshall County, Indiana;
- An act (S. No. 1154) granting a pension to William Williams;
- An act (S. No. 1205) restoring to the pension-roll the name of Lydia A. Church, minor daughter of Nathaniel G. Church; and
- An act (S. No. 1213) granting a pension to Nathan Upham.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move that the House now take a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. MYERS. I ask unanimous consent that the session of Tuesday evening next be set apart for the consideration of reports from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Many members objected.

Mr. MAYNARD. Before the question is put upon the motion to adjourn, I desire to make a suggestion to the House. The impression prevails that there are several gentlemen who desire to address the House upon general subjects. I understand that there is no business assigned for to-night, and as this will probably be the only opportunity members will have to be heard, I propose that we have a session to-night for debate only, no business whatever to be transacted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will withdraw my amendment to adjourn for the purpose suggested.

The SPEAKER. It requires unanimous consent.

Mr. HAGANS. I object.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I renew the motion that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. ARMSTRONG: The petition of citizens of Sioux City, that the Black Hills in Dakota be opened to settlement, to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. BLAINE: Resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas, in relation to the appraisement of the Cherokee lands, to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas, asking Congress to establish and create a United States district court for the Indian Territory, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BURROWS: The petition of citizens of Michigan, for the improvement of the harbor at New Buffalo, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. CASON: Papers relating to the application of George A. Arnes for restoration to his former rank in the Army, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CLARKE, of New York: The petition of citizens of Albion, New York, in favor of Government aid to the Northern Pacific Railroad, to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

By Mr. COTTON: The petition of tax-payers in the District of Columbia outside of the cities, asking that the tax on property in the country be placed at seventy-five cents on the $100, and for other relief, to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. COX: Memorial of the Legislature of New York, in relation to the improvement of the East River, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. GUNTER: The petition of settlers upon the Hot Springs reservation in Arkansas, for relief, to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. LAWRENCE: The petition of L. Boyd, Daniel Wissenger, and others, of Clarke County, Ohio, for the abolition of official oaths, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LOWNDES: The petition of citizens of Washington County, Maryland, for the restoration of the 10 per cent. reduction of duties made in 1872 and against a duty on tea and coffee, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio: The petition of David Quinn, of Cincinnati, Ohio, relating to a machine invented by him for deepening the channels of rivers, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. SMITH, of Virginia: Memorial of the Tobacco Association of Richmond, Virginia, in relation to the proposed increase of tax upon tobacco, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. —: The petition of citizens of Jewell County, Kansas, for relief, to the Committee on Agriculture.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, February 20, 1875.

The Senate met at eleven o'clock a. m.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland, and Mr. LEWIS. I object.

Mr. MCCREERY. I would like to hear the Journal read this morning.

The Secretary resumed and continued the reading of the Journal of yesterday, and it was approved.

CREDENTIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented the credentials of Hon. Andrew Johnson, chosen by the Legislature of Tennessee a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1875; which were read and ordered to be filed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of members of the Legislature of Arkansas, in favor of the establishment of a mail-route from Marshall, in Searcy County, to Harrison, in Boone County, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas, in favor of the establishment of a United States circuit court for the Indian Territory; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution of the Legislature of Kansas, in favor of the passage of a law authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to appoint a commission to appraise the lands of the Cherokee Nation, as provided by the treaty of 1866; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CRAGIN presented a memorial of physicians of New Hampshire, praying for such legislation as will the better promote the efficiency of the Medical Corps of the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BOUTWELL presented the petition of the heirs of Walter Hunt, deceased, praying the extension of his patent for an improvement in the manufacture of a cotton fabric used for making paper collars; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. WRIGHT presented the petition of George Williams, of Iowa, in relation to the bill for the improvement of the Mississippi River, and asking that provision be made for letting the work to the lowest bidder and expressing his readiness if the contract is thus let to bid upon the same; which was referred to the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Sea-board.

Mr. CAMERON presented a memorial of merchants of Philadelphia, remonstrating against the annulling of the contract with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for the transportation of the mails between San Francisco, Japan, and China; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland, presented a memorial of merchants of Baltimore, Maryland, remonstrating against the annulling of the contract with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for the transportation of the mails between San Francisco, Japan, and China; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. INGALLS presented several petitions of citizens of Jackson County, Kansas, praying the passage of the bill (S. No. 456) for the sale of the Black Bob Indian lands in the State of Kansas; which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. FENTON presented a resolution of the common council of Long Island City, New York, asking an appropriation for the improvement of the channel of the East River and the removal of obstructions to navigation at Hell Gate; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. LEWIS presented a memorial of late soldiers of the United States volunteers, residents of Portsmouth, Virginia, praying that bounty be allowed to disabled soldiers; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. RAMSEY. I am directed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4734) to establish certain post-roads, to report it with amendments. I suggest that time will be saved by passing this bill at once.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota asks for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. PRATT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4668) for the relief of John W. Douglass, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1112) for the relief of B. P. Patterson, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MERRIMON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2689) for the relief of Emille Lapage, surviving partner of the firm of Lapage Brothers, reported it without amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DENNIS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1333) referring the claim of Jonathan L. Jones to the Court of Claims; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. INGALLS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1334) to allow pre-emptors to pre-empt an additional amount to aggregate one hundred and sixty acres of public, ceded, or Indian trust land; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CRAGIN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1335) for the relief of property-owners on squares Nos. 728, 729, and 731, in the city of Washington; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPENCER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1336) authorizing the appointment of a commission to proceed to the Territory of Alaska after the adjournment of the present Congress to inquire into the number of fur-seals killed on the islands of Saint Paul and Saint George and if an increased number could be killed without jeopardizing the perpetuity of the fisheries, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1337) to disapprove of an act of the territorial Legislature of the Territory of Dakota entitled "An act making the conveyance of homesteads not valid unless the wife joins in the said conveyance," approved January 14, 1875; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ALCORN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1338) for the relief of the overflowed districts of the Mississippi River; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

COMMITTEE TO VISIT INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. INGALLS. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee, consisting of five members of the Senate, be appointed to visit the Indian Territory during the recess of Congress, with authority to inquire into the condition of affairs in that country, the necessities of the various Indian nations and tribes there located, and to report at the next session of the Senate the results of their inquiry, and what legislation, if any, is needed to protect the interests and promote the welfare of the Indians of that Territory.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think that had better lie over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the resolution will lie over.

REORGANIZATION OF THE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. WRIGHT. This morning was assigned to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment by unanimous consent on Wednesday last.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that that special assignment was made. If no further resolutions be offered, that committee is entitled to the residue of the morning hour.

Mr. WRIGHT. Yesterday morning I reported, from the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, a resolution, and gave notice at that time that I should call it up this morning. I ask that the resolution may be read by the Secretary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read, being regarded as before the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of five members of the Senate be appointed, whose duty it shall be to examine and thoroughly investigate the several branches of the civil service with a view to the reorganization of the several Departments thereof, the reduction of expenditures, and to promote the efficiency of such service, and to report thereon at the next session of Congress by bill or otherwise.

Mr. WEST. I have no objection to the object contemplated by this resolution; but I rise to inquire of the Senator whether such duties would not more properly devolve upon the committee of which he is chairman, and could they not be exercised by that committee during the coming recess, or after the adjournment of the present Congress, just as well as by a committee specially appointed by the Chair?

Mr. WRIGHT. The Senator of course knows that our committees fall with this session. There will be none of the present committees existing after the session closes; and it is deemed better by our committee that there be a special committee of five who shall have this subject specially in charge.

Mr. WEST. It may be very proper, and I shall not interpose any further objection, merely calling the attention of the Senator to the fact that the body is to be convened in extra session and will have the power to recreate its committees. Still it may be better to reach it in this way.

The resolution was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Chair was authorized to appoint the committee.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 4817) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Sioux City, Iowa; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3820) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes.

CIVIL SERVICE EXAMINATION.

Mr. WRIGHT. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the House joint resolution No. 51, reported on the 15th of May by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN.]

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 51) in relation to civil service examinations was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in all cases under the civil service examinations for positions under the Government, when a disabled United States soldier, his wife, or the widow of a deceased soldier dying of wounds or diseases contracted in the line of duty as such soldier, or his orphan child, shall pass such examination at the standard fixed by these rules, such person shall have precedence for appointment to any existing vacancy, anything in the rules of civil service to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. BAYARD. Is this resolution sought now to be put on its passage?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution is before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, it always seems an ungracious thing to stand in the way of any act of intended beneficence; but at the same time in legislation it strikes me that the first duty is broad and impartial justice. The fact that a man has been disabled in the service of his country, whether he be a soldier or a sailor or a civilian, undoubtedly makes him an object of gratitude and arouses in the breast of every patriot a desire to assist and succor him; but I do respectfully submit to the sense of the Senate that we ought not to choose any one class, any single profession from the ranks of our fellow-citizens and say that it shall, in the way of obtaining governmental positions, have precedence over any other class.

It is difficult to imagine a service more deserving of reward than that of him who has in any way brought himself into a condition of permanent disability by serving the whole public. But, Mr. President, there are men who fall before the scythe of death doing their duty in civil posts as distinctly and certainly as those who fall upon the field of battle or who are crippled from wounds received in battle. There are hearts that have longed as earnestly, there are brains that have toiled as painfully, there are frames that have suffered as much in the service of the public who are not described in this class as any who are described. Being indeed not a mere professed but a sincere friend of all these persons who have given us protection by their courage and devotion, I do not think that I could serve them by picking them out and selecting them from their fellows as the especial and preceding class to be rewarded. It is not just to others, Mr. President.

If in those who have the appointing or the electing power in this country there shall exist that feeling of justice, all things being considered—the fitness of the applicant, his title to public thanks and private thanks for his services—then the parties referred to by this resolution will not be neglected, their claims will not be derided, but they will be recognized, and their full share of public patronage and support in the way of official power will be given to them.

I do not think that a proper consideration for these disabled soldiers or their widows or their orphans would dictate such a measure as this. I am sure there is a feeling—I have it, and I believe every Senator in the Chamber has it—a feeling of tenderness and compassion already existing toward a crippled man or toward the child of a man who has fallen in defense of his country in any branch of the public service that would induce us to favor their applications, to say the least.

The public service of the country ought not to be conducted solely with a view of individual reward. That theory is not sound. It is public service that is needed. The office is created for the benefit of the public; the work to be fulfilled is to be public work; and those who have the trust of public power committed to their hands have no right to consider aught but the public good in filling the appointments. I do not believe in this theory of claims for office. An office is simply a position to which duties are attached for the performance of which an adequate salary is supposed in theory to be awarded. If the person fulfills his duty, then he owes the country nothing; and the country again having remunerated him, compensation having passed from those who receive the benefit of his labors, the account is squared. I say nothing of public opinion; I say nothing of that respect of our fellow-men which is one of the most wholesome and the strongest incentives to proper action, that will follow an honest life and honest service in whatever capacity a man may be found acting. But I think it is an evil for the country that the offices, the public duties of which have to be performed by somebody, should be regarded as rewards or considered in the light of patronage.

I submit to those who desire to pass this resolution these very candid remarks. I think that they would create toward this especial and selected class of meritorious fellow-citizens of ours a jealousy which may interfere with a proper appreciation of their services. If, as I said, the feeling should exist which I believe does exist, which every man feels and which we see constantly recognized, there will be no necessity for a resolution of this kind that shall compel every other class of citizens to stand back until the prior claims of an especial class, a select class, a preferred class, have been passed upon before them. This strikes me as being a very defective principle. We are forbidden by the Constitution of the United States to hold titles; we are forbidden to have ranks. It is our pride and glory that under our form of government we stand equal before the law. Now here is a case of preference. It is proposed to be given to a class for whom I most unaffectedly proclaim my personal sympathy; but I consider the precedent a bad one. I consider the principle of this resolution an utterly unsound one. The popular choice regulates itself. That you cannot pretend to control by a resolution of this kind; but you are here attempting to control the discretion and the sound sense of duty of your Cabinet officers and what you may term your superior officers in civil service; and I do respectfully submit that the principle of this resolution is unsound, and it will in the end provoke a feeling of opposition to the very class that you design to favor and protect. That I do not wish to see. I prefer to allow them to retain the hold they have upon the kind feeling and sympathy of their fellow-men, and not to disturb them by an arbitrary law or a resolution which shall say they are to be preferred over any and all others. It is perfectly easy for any man to imagine not one case but a thousand in which the sense of justice of the country, the sympathies of the best hearts of the country, would be demanded just as positively for some one not within the class referred to in this resolution as for any within the class referred to.

Therefore, sir, I trust that this, no doubt well-intended resolution, may not receive the assent of the Senate. The parties for whose benefit it is suggested will not fail to receive all proper and due consideration; but it is not a wise thing or a just thing, or in my opinion according to the spirit of our Constitution, to select a class and give them precedence for appointment to any class of office whatever. Let them stand, each upon individual fitness, upon individual merit, and let the first thing to be considered be capacity for public service.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, Congress since the close of the war has by several votes declared that it is the duty of the executive officers to give a preference, all other things being equal, to soldiers who suffered by wounds in the civil war, their widows, and their orphans. These resolutions have passed generally by the unanimous assent of both Houses. Similar resolutions in terms have been passed by the political parties all over the country. This joint resolution is but a simple effort upon the part of the House of Representatives to give some point to that common resolution. This joint resolution I am informed passed the House of Representatives by a unanimous vote and has been sent here and reported back and stands upon our Calendar. It is not subject to the objections made by the Senator from Delaware. These wounded soldiers, their widows and their orphans, are not selected as a favorite class to be benefited. They are not selected as the only class from whom appointments should be made. They are given no advantage whatever except in a slight degree, and that is only where they are equal in all other respects to the requirements made both by the law and the rules of examination. This resolution does not single out these wounded soldiers, their widows and their orphans, as alone the proper subjects of executive favor. Far from it. On the contrary it subjects them to what are called the civil-service rules. No person under this resolution could have any claim to the preference granted by it unless he had complied with in every respect and come up to the standard prescribed by the civil-service regulations. Where a wounded soldier, his widow, or his orphan, has passed the requisite examination and comes up fully to the standard prescribed by law and the regulations of the civil service—in such cases only the person's wound or the loss of a father or the loss of a husband shall turn the table in the choice between that person and some civilian.

Mr. BAYARD. Will the Senator allow the resolution to be read?

Mr. SHERMAN. I may have it read before I am through. If we mean anything at all by the resolutions which have been passed from time to time in favor of the soldier, his widow, and his orphan, we cannot make that manifest in a less degree than by this proposition. Here the soldier, the widow, or the orphan subjects him or herself to a rigid examination. He or she must come up to the full standard of merit, to the full standard of qualification; and if he or she does, it seems to me it is saying but little that he or she shall have the choice as against some other equally meritorious person probably, but who has not suffered so much.

There is another thing to be considered, and the reason for this proposition is this: Most of these soldiers while in the service entered it in the younger years of their life; by their service they were deprived of the opportunities of education which would have been open to them probably if they had not entered the service. Where a wife lost her husband, probably she was thus left exposed to poverty and the misfortunes of life, her husband having died in the service of his country. These orphan children might have been deprived by the loss of a parent of the opportunities of an education, the means by which they could compete in all respects with more favored persons in private life. But if they have been able to overcome all these difficulties growing out of the service of the soldier, and if under all these circumstances they are able to pass the examination provided by your laws and the civil-service regulations, why should not their loss by the service of the parent or the husband or their own inability, occasioned probably by reason of this service, to obtain the full elements of an education, be counted if they are able to show by their examination that they have the substantial qualifications requisite to fulfill the duties of the proposed office?

Now, Mr. President, I hope this resolution will pass. My friend from Delaware I hope will assent to its passage. It can do no possible harm. It is a legal recognition of that obligation which we have so often complained in general terms has not been attended to. It will not interfere with the public service, but will give these people who have sacrificed husband or parent to the public service a positive recognition, more than a general stump resolution. I hope the resolution will pass by general consent.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I do not suppose the honorable Senator from Ohio intended it, but it seems to me it was scarcely just to appeal to me not to stand in the way of the passage of this resolution when he has based his only ground for it upon our human sympathy. Sir, I think I feel for these unfortunates quite as keenly as does any Senator in this body. I never have in passing through our public Departments here seen men with empty sleeves but that I felt rejoiced that they should at least have the means of procuring an easy livelihood. Nay, sir, I wish to say that I do not think there has been one-half enough of that. Where you find one of your fellow-citizens incapacitated to perform the ordinary avocations of life, why should not he have precedence for office requiring nothing in the world but honesty, integrity, and sobriety? I speak of the various messengers throughout our Departments, and I say to-day I wish they all were filled by men who wore upon their persons marks of duty to their country. It has not been done so to one-fourth of the extent that I would wish to see it done. I never have seen a man whose disability was the result of his patriotic action rewarded by a place which may be called a sinecure—and there are not a few of them—where my heart did not give a ready assent to it, and I rather envied the power that placed it in the hands of others so to reward deserving men.

But, Mr. President, the honorable Senator is mistaken when he says that this is not a selection of one class of citizens to the prejudice of another. Whatever this "civil service" is, and I admit it is rather a myth to my mind, I have never seen much practical operation of it, but on the contrary I have seen it derided over and over again since it has been talked of in the last few years; there is now a standard, they say, of examination. All can approach it; all must submit to it; and after that has been done, and after the child of any citizen, however deserving, has passed it, here is a rule that there shall be an especial class that shall have precedence over the other class. My friend stated he would read this resolution. He forgot to do so. Let me read it now:

That in all cases under the civil-service examinations for positions under the Government, when a disabled United States soldier, his wife, or the widow of a deceased soldier dying of wounds or diseases contracted in the line of duty as such soldier, or his orphan child, shall pass such examination at the standard fixed by the said rules, such person shall have precedence for appointment to any existing vacancy, anything in the rules of civil service to the contrary notwithstanding.

There is no getting over the effect of it. I only wish the Senate to understand that in my opinion it is legislating under sympathy just, honorable, natural, humane, but it is basing your legislation upon sympathy and not upon the broad rules of general and exact justice. Depend upon it that justice, the rarest of all human attributes, requires us constantly to watch our sympathies; and God knows here in the city of Washington there are enough of appeals to them. I know this, obscure as is my position in this body, unimportant as it is in all the circles where power prevails to make appointments to office, that even at my residence there are applications of widows, of gentlewomen who have known better days, the saddest of all sad classes, who come there asking for recommendation that they may be permitted in any way to earn their bread at public employment. They tell me, widowed women, of families of little children dependent upon them and their needles for support. Why, Mr. President, these cases which I speak of are not peculiar to me; I know there is not the heart of a Senator in this body that has not been appealed to and distressed by the repetition of such cases. Now, in view of this terrible misery and the amount of it prevailing in the community, I do submit that you have no right to select a class and say it shall have precedence. I make no empty professions. It strikes me as being unworthy to be professing extreme tenderness for any particular class. I can only say that it would be disgraceful not to have this sympathy; but I do say that your law should be founded upon a sense of broad and equal justice. If it be based upon mere sympathetic emotion, depend upon it, Senators, you have chosen a wrong precedent for your action. I shall not deny the kindness of your intent; I shall utterly deny the soundness of your basis of legislation.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, this resolution simply proposes that the disabled soldier, his widow or his orphan where he has died of disease contracted in the service, if they can stand the examination under the civil-service rules, shall have the preference in the appointment over any other person who was not a soldier or the widow or orphan of a soldier. Now is that based on mere sympathetic emotion, as described by the Senator from Delaware? If we regard the disabled soldier or his family as having any claims upon the public gratitude for wounds incurred in the service or for a husband or father lost in the service, if they have any claims that we are willing to recognize, I should like to know how we can vote against the resolution.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. President, I trust we shall have a vote upon the resolution. I only desire to say one thing: If it be founded on sympathy alone, I am for it; but it stands upon a higher and better plane than that even, because it is the clearest justice. Both because it appeals to our sympathies, if you stand upon that ground, and because it is pre-eminently just, I trust the resolution will pass.

Mr. ALCORN. Mr. President, I shall vote against this resolution, and I desire to give the reasons why. To express the sympathy that I have for the soldiers who suffered during the period of the revolution I scarcely deem it necessary. I think that they are entitled to the thanks and the consideration of the nation, and that upon all proper occasions they should be preferred for positions which are to be occupied in the discharge of duties belonging to those who transact the affairs of the Government of the United States. But I propose to leave this matter precisely where at present it belongs: with the executive and administrative departments of this Government. I propose not to suggest to officers of the Government of the United States in this general way whom they shall take into their offices. They are responsible to the people for the discharge of the duties of their several offices; to them belongs the responsibility; and it is not for Congress to suggest to any public officer who has the responsibility of the discharge of duties upon him as to whom he shall take into his employment.

But, sir, there is another view of this case. This resolution practically excludes the Southern States from any participation in the offices of this Government. But, sir, statesmanship demands that all the people of this nation shall be recognized; that none shall be by law excluded; and however contemptuously Senators may treat this suggestion, I say that the highest duties of statesmanship demand that the southern people who participated in the rebellion, but who stand to-day ready to go forward under the Constitution, under the laws, and under the demands of that patriotic duty which they owe to the Government, should be recognized, and that they should be permitted to share in the offices of the nation. Up to this time they have been almost totally excluded, and the effects of that exclusion are to-day apparent in the land. If you leave this patronage precisely where it now is, with the Executive and the subordinate Departments of the Government, there is no question but that they will discriminate sufficiently for all practical purposes, sufficiently for all the demands of humanity, in favor of the widows of the soldiers of the late revolution. I propose to leave there the discrimination. There can be no question but that the Union soldiers, their widows and orphans, will be awarded with a liberal hand, as they should be, their proper share of the public offices. Those who suffered most and did most to protect and defend the life of the nation should not nor will they be overlooked. I trust I shall not be wanting in my duty in this respect.

I do not propose to vote for any law, nor do I propose to support any resolution in this or any other Congress whereby the people of my State shall be excluded from the Departments at Washington. Practically they are now excluded, but I do not propose to dignify the wrong by giving it the indorsement of the Congress of the United States. If the principle of the resolution is good here, it applies as well to the State governments. Carry the suggestion out in its comprehensive scope, and you must give the governments, State and Federal, to Union soldiers only, and let others stand aside.

Mr. FENTON. Mr. President, I shall vote for the resolution, though I have no idea that the appointing power or the party that would disregard the superior claims of the soldiers in the spirit of the resolution without law would pay much regard to the superior claims of law. I have no idea that it will be of much value; still I shall vote for it because I think it is a discrimination, if it can be made, in the right direction.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. EDMUNDS and Mr. WRIGHT called for the yeas and nays on the passage of the joint resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 36, nays 8; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Boutwell, Chandler, Conover, Dorsey, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Gordon, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Jones, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Patterson, Pease, Pratt, Ramsey, Robertson, Scott, Sherman, Spencer, Stewart, Wadleigh, Washburn, Windom, and Wright—36.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Cooper, Dennis, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, McCreery, Saulsbury, and Sprague—8.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Boggs, Boreman, Brownlow, Cameron, Carpenter, Clayton, Conkling, Cragin, Davis, Eaton, Ferry of Connecticut, Goldthwaite, Ham, Ilton of Texas, Harvey, Johnston, Kelly, Lewis, Logan, Morrill of Maine, Norwood, Ransom, Sargent, Schurz, Stevenson, Stockton, Thurman, Tipton, and West—29.

So the joint resolution was passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour having expired, the Chair calls up the unfinished business of yesterday, being the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. WRIGHT. I desire to say before that business is taken up that the morning hour has been consumed in the passage of two matters reported from the committee of which I am chairman. There are two or three other matters of great importance which I do not propose now to antagonize with the appropriation bill, and will not at any time; but there are two or three matters to which I shall ask the consideration of the Senate when I do not antagonize the appropriation bills.

Mr. WINDOM. I call for the regular order.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 3820) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes; was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMENDMENT TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 4740) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

HOOR OF MEETING OF THE SENATE.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask leave to offer the following order; which may lie over until Monday:

Ordered, That the daily hour of meeting of the Senate shall be ten o'clock in the forenoon until otherwise ordered.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3821) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. HITCHCOCK to add to the first section of the bill the following item:

To reimburse white settlers for losses and destruction of property by depredations of Indians $4,700,179.30, said sum being the amount of such claims examined by the Secretary of the Interior and officially reported to Congress.

Mr. WINDOM. There was a point of order made upon this amendment last night and the Chair ruled that the point of order was well taken, and upon that the Senator from Nebraska appealed from the decision of the Chair. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I hope the Senator will not insist upon that motion.

Mr. WINDOM. I think the Senator from Nebraska was justly entitled in the condition of things last night to his five minutes. So I waive the motion to lay on the table for that time and will ask the Chair to recognize me to renew it when the Senator concludes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I have no desire to consume the time of the Senate in discussing at any length either the merits of the amendment which I offered last night or the point of order which was raised. I offered the amendment, however, in perfect good faith. The Senator from Minnesota seemed to assume that I was joking and raised the point of order that this was a private claim and had not been submitted to any committee and reported by the Committee on Appropriations and was therefore out of order. I insist that this is not a private claim nor an aggregation of private claims in the sense in which the Senator used the term and in the sense which would rule the amendment out of order, and I insist that it is in order in accordance with the rules, being an appropriation to be made in accordance with the provisions of law; and to sustain that point I desire to read section 7 of the act approved May 29, 1872, which is as follows:

SEC. 7. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to prepare and cause to be published such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary or proper, prescribing the manner of presenting claims arising under existing laws or treaty stipulations for compensation for depredations committed by the Indians, and the degree and character of the evidence necessary to support such claims; he shall carefully investigate all such claims as may be presented, subject to the rules and regulations prepared by him, and report to Congress, at each session thereof, the nature, character, and amount of such claims, whether allowed by him or not, and the evidence upon which his action was based: Provided, That no payment on account of said claim shall be made without a specific appropriation therefor by Congress.

In accordance with that provision the Secretary of the Interior has reported a list of claims amounting in the aggregate to $4,700,179.30, and to carry out his recommendation and in accordance with his action and in conformity to law I offer this amendment, and I insist that it is in order and cannot be ruled out of order.

I do not expect of course that such an amendment will be adopted now. I do not expect that an aggregate of nearly $5,000,000 will be appropriated for this purpose at this time; but I desire that it shall go upon record. I desire that the Senate and the country shall understand that there is another side to this Indian question which is very rarely heard on this floor. We have had the usual annual appropriations for the benefit of the Indians; we have had the usual annual eulogies upon the character of the Indians, the usual annual wail over Indian wrongs and sorrows and sufferings, and the usual annual denunciations of the outrages of the savage white man who has penetrated to the sylvan retreats and disturbed the peace and beautiful life of those noble red men. I desire it to go at the same time upon the record that there are to-day $5,000,000 of claims for the destruction and loss of white men's property which this committee did not report upon, but which they were bound to report and consider in accordance with the provisions of law.

Mr. WINDOM. After listening to the reading of the statute by the Senator from Nebraska I withdraw my point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. WINDOM. I now move to lay the amendment on the table, and I make this motion based upon the statement of the Senator from Nebraska himself that he does not expect the amendment to prevail; and if so we had better not spend any more time in discussing it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is moved that the amendment lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENSON. I now offer this amendment, to come in at the end of section 10:

And each Indian agent shall keep a book of itemized expenditures of every kind, with a record of all contracts, together with the receipts of money from all sources, and the books thus kept shall always be open to inspection, and the said books to remain in the office at the respective reservations, and not to be removed from said reservations by said agents, but shall be safely kept and handed over to his successor; and true transcripts of all entries of every character in said book shall be forwarded quarterly by said agent to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs: Provided, That should any agent make any false entry in said book or in the transcript directed to be forwarded to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, or shall fail to keep a perfect entry in said book as herein prescribed, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction before any United States court having jurisdiction of such offense shall be fined in a sum not less than $500 nor more than $1,000, at the discretion of the jury, and shall be rendered incompetent to hold said office of Indian agent after a conviction under this act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the amendment by inserting the word "knowingly" before the word "make."

Mr. STEVENSON. I accept the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And also to insert the word "knowingly" after the word "shall," because otherwise the person might be punished for making an innocent false entry.

Mr. STEVENSON. I think that is very proper, and accept the modification.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be so modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOGY. I offer an amendment recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. It is after the word "dollars," in line 1898, to insert—

To enable the said Kaskaskias, Weas, Peorias, and Piankeshaws to buy seed and grain for farming purposes, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from their invested funds the sum of $10,000, and pay the same to them as a per capita payment.

This is not an appropriation. It takes $10,000 of the funds now belonging to those Indians, they having in the Treasury a large fund, to enable them to farm this year. They have suffered exactly as the people of Kansas have and are in the same condition—perfectly destitute. Their crops are destroyed there by grasshoppers or by drought. Now, they want to use $10,000 of their own money, and it is recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WINDOM. Is the amendment reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. BOGY. Yes, sir.

Mr. WINDOM. I make no objection to it then.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOGY. On page 33, in relation to the Miami Indians, I have an amendment of the same nature. I move to strike out from line 802 down to line 820 and insert what I will read. I will state that the Miami Indians have now in the Treasury something like $160,000. They are in a destitute condition, owing to the same reason which I gave in regard to the other Indians. Their crops were either destroyed by grasshoppers or prevented by drought. Under the treaty of the 5th of June, 1854, they are entitled this year to $11,500, and the bill provides that it shall be paid for a miller and other purposes which are specified. They need neither a miller nor a gunsmith. The object of the amendment is to pay the money per capita, so that they shall be enabled to buy grain and seeds for this year. In lieu of the words I propose to strike out I move to insert:

That the sum of $11,500, due the Miami Indians under the treaty of the 5th of June, 1854, be paid to said tribe of Indians per capita, so as to enable them to pay for seeds and grain for farming purposes.

This is recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs. It is a necessity, a matter of charity. It is not an appropriation of Government money; it is their own money which they desire to have applied in this manner so as to enable them to buy grain and seeds for this year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the recommendation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs read.

Mr. BOGY. I have not the recommendation with me, but it is in the room of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then let me suggest to the Senator that striking out these items leaves the treaty obligation still in force, and some friends of the Indians next year may come forward and say, "To be sure, you gave us that, but we are still entitled to what the treaty calls for," and so we may be obliged to pay double.

Mr. BOGY. I have in my hand the request of the Indian chief himself who is in the city.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the Indian chief cannot waive the rights of his nation in the Senate. He must communicate with the executive head of the Government, who would communicate to us whether the terms on which we have engaged by this treaty to act are to be varied or not. We cannot bind the Indian nation by any direct arrangements with them here. I submit that we do not know in this way the authenticity of the authority which may be produced. We ought to have it in the regular way.

Mr. BOGY. I will state that it has been customary to make appropriations for a miller, but in point of fact there is not a miller among those Indians. The tribe consists of only one hundred and ten or one hundred and fifteen Indians. There is not a miller or a gunsmith with them; and this money is not needed for education, because they have a sufficient fund without it for that purpose.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask my friend from Missouri not to press the amendment. I think it ought to have fuller consideration. I do not know what the treaty stipulations are with these Indians. The proposition has not received that consideration which I think it ought to receive before being placed in this bill.

Mr. INGALLS. If I understood the Senator from Missouri correctly, he said that this amendment and the one previously offered by him had received consideration by the Committee on Indian Affairs and been acted upon favorably by them. It must have been during my absence from the committee, for I am not aware that either of these amendments has been acted on by the committee.

Mr. BOGY. The Senator is correct; he was not there. The Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON,] the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. McCREERY,] and myself were there.

Mr. INGALLS. At the same time it is my judgment that the interest of these Indians would be subserved by the adoption of these amendments; and inasmuch as they do not provide for any additional appropriation to the bill, they are not liable, as it seems to me, to the point of order, and I trust the Senate will consent to their adoption.

Mr. HARVEY. I appeal to my colleague that these amendments are truly for the good of the Indians; and inasmuch as they make no additional appropriation, I hope the Senate will adopt them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. INGALLS. Upon the 17th of this month I submitted an amendment to the bill which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I now offer it and ask that it be read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

SEC. —. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to pay to the treasurer of the Cherokee Nation of Indians, at his earliest convenience, the sum of $300,000, from the trust funds held by the United States, belonging to said nation of Indians, arising from the sales of the Cherokee lands lying south of Kansas and west of the ninety-sixth meridian of west longitude, (disposed of to the Osage Indians;) said amount to be used by said nation in purchasing breadstuffs for said Cherokee Indians, rendered necessary to keep them from suffering in consequence of the destruction of their crops during the past season by the drought, grasshoppers, and chinch-bugs; and that said amount shall be distributed among said Cherokee Indians as provided by an act of the Cherokee national council approved November 19, 1874.

SEC. —. That said amount shall not be paid to the said treasurer of the Cherokee Nation until the Secretary of the Interior shall have received in his office a duly certified copy of the said act of the national council of the Cherokee Nation, approved by the principal chief of said nation.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask the Senator if that has been considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs and received its approval?

Mr. INGALLS. It has not been before the Committee on Indian Affairs, but was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not like to make a point of order on a proposition of that sort.

Mr. INGALLS. I can hardly conceive that the amendment is amenable to a point of order. It does not provide any additional appropriation in the bill, and therefore is not open to an objection that the Senator from Minnesota might presume. It is simply to transfer a certain portion of the funds belonging to the nations themselves, in accordance with the request of their own legislature, the proceeds to be disposed of in accordance with the terms of the amendment.

In this connection I will send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, dated the 30th December, 1874, a communication from B. H. Ross, W. P. Adair, and J. H. Scales, of the Cherokee Nation, addressed on the 24th of December, 1874, to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and also a certified copy of an act passed by the legislative council of the Cherokee Nation on the 19th of November, 1874, in relation to the subject mentioned in this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, in the chair.) The Chair understands that the proposed amendment does not increase the appropriation and that one day's notice of it has been given. It is therefore in order.

Mr. INGALLS. It was referred to the committee, and makes no additional appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. WINDOM. If that amendment is to be adopted, it seems to me the amount ought to be stated.

Mr. INGALLS. The amendment is entirely well guarded, as it seems to me, by requiring the money to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. I will ask, however, that the amendment may be so modified as to render the appropriation immediately available.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and that modification will be made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. I have an amendment to offer to this bill, to which I very earnestly invite the attention of the Senate, because it seems to me to be a matter of very great importance. I move to strike out all of the seventh section from the beginning down to and including the word "provision," in the ninth line. I ask that it may be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "that," in the first line of section 7, down to and including the words "and that" in the ninth line, in the following words:

All appropriations made for teachers, millers, blacksmiths, engineers, carpenters, physicians, and other persons employed in the Indian service, and for various articles provided for by treaty stipulations, may be diverted to other uses for the benefit of various Indian tribes, within the discretion of the President, and with the consent of said tribes expressed in the usual manner, and that he cause report to be made to Congress, at the next session thereafter, of his action under this provision; and that.

So that it will read—

Mr. THURMAN. That is sufficient. The provision which I move to strike out puts it within the power of the President of the United States, with the consent of the Indian tribes respectively, expressed in the usual manner, whatever that may be, to divert all the appropriations for the purposes named in this provision, from the uses declared by the treaties with the Indians and apply them to such other uses as the President and the tribes, respectively, may agree.

Now, how much is covered by this provision? This bill in its aggregate appropriates about five million one hundred and some odd thousand dollars, and of those $5,100,000 nearly the entire amount is covered by this provision. This provision covers, I am safe in saying, not less than four millions and three-quarters if not $5,000,000 of the $5,100,000 in the bill. Thus it is proposed to allow treaties made with the Indians by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to be wholly set aside, so far as the use of these $5,000,000 is concerned, by agreements made, not by the President in person, for he cannot make them, but by the various Indian agents and the Indian tribes, they giving "their consent," as it is said, "in the usual manner." What that "usual manner" is we do not know, but we may infer that it is simply such assent as the Indian agents can obtain from them and report to the President. Thus the Senate is to be ousted of all its jurisdiction in this matter, the treaties made by and with the advice and consent of the Senate are to be set aside by bargains made by Indian agents thousands of miles from here, with the tribes or such members of the tribes as they may represent as giving the consent of the tribe in the usual manner.

Mr. President, I am aware that something of a similar character has been in Indian appropriation bills before; I remember opposing just such a provision on a former occasion; but I do say that it is monstrous that we should legislate in this manner. In the first place, it is monstrous to put at the absolute discretion of the President the distribution of these $5,000,000. Even if he could exercise his own discretion it would be altogether wrong, and in my judgment unconstitutional, too, for a reason which I will state in a moment. But when we come to consider that the President cannot act of his own knowledge, that it will be simply the action of the various Indian agents, the idea of dispensing with the provisions of treaties or allowing money, or provisions, or goods or the like, which the treaties require shall be furnished to the Indians, to be disregarded and set aside and other provisions, or money, or the like to be given them instead, is to me entirely shocking.

Let me call the attention of the Senate to this provision of the Constitution:

No money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in consequence of appropriations made by law.

Is it a compliance with that provision in its true spirit and essence to make an appropriation for the fulfillment of treaty stipulations and then put it in the power of the President utterly to disregard every one of those treaty stipulations and expend that money precisely as he may see fit to expend it with only the limitation that an Indian agent shall obtain what he calls the usual consent of the Indian tribes? I say that it is a clear violation of the spirit of the Constitution. The Constitution means that our appropriations shall be specific, so that the money shall be expended for the purpose for which we appropriate it. When we appropriate money to carry out the purposes of a treaty, the requirements of the treaty, the Constitution means that that money shall be thus expended; and it does not mean that you shall appropriate $5,000,000 at a time to be expended according to the discretion of any man whatever.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. THURMAN. I hope that this amendment of mine will not be resisted.

Mr. HAMLIN. I do not know what has been the practice in this body in relation to the appropriation bills heretofore; I have not looked to see whether they have contained an appropriation similar to this or not.

Mr. WINDOM. The bill last year did.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am told by the Senator from Minnesota that the bill last year did contain a provision like this. I have only to say that I think the statement made by the Senator from Ohio is one which ought to commend itself to the judgment of this body. I do think that this clause in the bill is pernicious to the last degree. Look at it. We have certain treaty stipulations with the Indian tribes, under which we are obliged to provide them with certain specified things, and it is for those provisions and to furnish the precise articles called for by the treaties that we are called upon to make the appropriations. When you depart from that you may as well incorporate in a bill a provision that you will appropriate a given amount of money in gross, without specifying the objects and purposes for which it shall be used, and then say the President shall have control of it. Everybody here knows as well as he knows anything that neither the President himself nor the Secretary of the Interior, nor any one who might be responsible, would be the party to control it. It would be controlled by some other individual and that other individuals in connection with the tribe of Indians. I take it that none of these tribes, however advanced in civilization, are remarkable for their economy or their use of means placed in their hands, and I apprehend that it would not be difficult to find chiefs of tribes who would divert this money from useful purposes and expend it for purposes that would not be useful.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. May I ask the Senator from Maine a question?

Mr. HAMLIN. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Does not the Senator also think that if any of these appropriations were applied to a different purpose from that agreed upon in the treaties the Government of the United States would be liable to be called upon to reimburse the amount?

Mr. HAMLIN. If the Senator had not asked me the question and had waited one single moment longer, I should have come to that precise point, for it was distinctly in my mind, that under these treaties, if we divert the appropriations which we are obliged to make, if we spend the money in a different way, they may come at least with an equitable claim, and ask us to fulfill hereafter stipulations which we have failed to fulfill by diverting the appropriations to another purpose than that provided for in the treaties. I think that is a very pernicious clause.

I will not refer to the constitutional argument which the Senator from Ohio makes, but I think there is at least much force in it. Taking it, however, upon a simple economical view, I think the Senate ought to strike out this clause in the bill.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not wish to debate this question or to make any resistance to the motion of the Senator from Ohio. All I want to do is to state what the object of this provision originally was as it came from the House either one or two years ago; I am sure it was in the bill of last year. There are in all the various treaties provisions for the employment of blacksmiths, carpenters, and other employes, and for the purchase of useful articles for the Indians which they may need. The design originally was, as we were bound to supply a certain amount under the treaty, to give it in such a way as would really benefit the Indians. If there be any serious objection suggested by gentlemen, I will not resist the amendment; I will only say that the clause was in the bill of last year, and I know of no difficulties having arisen from it. It is to be regretted that we are compelled to appropriate under treaty for the purposes of Indians, nor can we by the adoption of this amendment avoid that. I am not certain but that there are dangers connected with it which should justify us in amending it. I make no resistance to the proposition, but submit the question to the Senate.

Mr. BAYARD. I would ask the attention of the honorable Senator who has charge of this bill. May I ask from him the amount of the appropriations referred to in section 7?

Mr. WINDOM. I have not footed them and cannot tell. I think the Senator from Ohio has overestimated the amount to be covered by this provision very largely.

Mr. THURMAN. I state that amount on consultation with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. He gave me the figures.

Mr. WINDOM. There is a very large amount of money here appropriated for fulfilling treaties to be paid in money. The clause certainly would not cover that amount, which is more than $100,000. It may not be a very large amount.

Mr. THURMAN. It is over four millions and a half anyhow.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I think the Senate and the country are indebted to the Senator from Ohio for the suggestion that he has made upon this question, and I am glad to find his views indorsed by so experienced and able a Senator as the Senator from Maine. It strikes me very fairly and very forcibly that this is really an appropriation so utterly indefinite, so vague as to its object, that as a matter of law it fails. You have made appropriations for teachers, millers, blacksmiths, engineers, carpenters, physicians, and others employed in the Indian service. These are all well-defined occupations. Under treaty stipulations with these Indians you are obliged to supply them; but after having made this appropriation to them, which is perfectly correct and no doubt made with due examination as to the propriety of the amounts, you change the whole appropriation, you take the very heart out of the law, which is in its definition and distinctness, and declare that all this money may in the discretion of another branch of the Government be diverted to other uses.

Mr. President, such a charity would be incapable of execution in law if made in a man's will; it would be declared void. The very essence of law, especially under a limited government, is that it should be certain and it should be limited. Now, here there are appropriations to a very large amount, an amount of itself so important as to make us pause; but an amount also accompanied by a principle which I think is fatal to a law, and that is one of definition. I do not believe it is within the power of Congress, under the meaning and intent of the clause of the Constitution referred to by the honorable Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] to appropriate money to an indefinite end. Otherwise you may divert this fund to other uses in the discretion of any one. I care not how virtuous or high or large the individual is, I consider that you have departed from that certainty of limitation which is the measure of your power in a republic. We should in all these cases consider the principle upon which we act in legislation. I think the Senator from Ohio has rendered important service in pointing this out, and I am very glad to find that his proposition meets with the assent of the honorable Senator from Maine. I trust that his amendment, therefore, may be made, and that the committee in making their appropriations will define the objects for which they are made, and that the money will be so appropriated that it shall not be capable of diversion to any other purpose.

Mr. WINDOM. I have no doubt that the money appropriated in many cases will be used much more advantageously for the Indians with the provision as it now is in the bill, because there are, as I said a moment ago, a great many cases under the treaties in which the money is not really needed for the purposes specified in the treaty, and yet we are bound to pay it. This provision simply leaves a discretion, not with the President of the United States but with the President and the Indians, expressed in the usual way. That usual way I suppose would be by treaty with them for the purpose of diverting their funds. I know of no other way, and the same sanctity exactly that has been given originally to the treaties would extend to these arrangements.

Mr. THURMAN. That cannot be contemplated, because a treaty requires confirmation by the Senate.

Mr. WINDOM. Perhaps I should not call it a treaty but an agreement with the Indians.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator must also be aware of the fact that really under this provision we appropriate beyond the requirements of our existing treaties. For instance, the existing treaty requires us to keep up a blacksmith-shop at Chicago. That is a treaty obligation to-day; at least it was when the last Indian appropriation bill was under consideration. Now we cannot do that specifically, but we make an appropriation for keeping up a blacksmith-shop in Chicago and then allow an Indian agent to commute that for what sum he wishes, and of course the Indians will be glad to get the money.

Mr. WINDOM. What suggestion has the Senator to make about that?

Mr. THURMAN. Not to appropriate for a blacksmith-shop at Chicago.

Mr. WINDOM. Although the treaty may require it?

Mr. THURMAN. Because the use has become extinct. That is only one instance out of many.

Mr. BAYARD. Does the honorable Senator think that it is competent for Congress to make appropriations to the extent of treaties that do not now exist?

Mr. WINDOM. To be expended as may be agreed upon with the Indians, the persons who are to receive the benefit.

Mr. BAYARD. I apprehend that our present laws are made to carry out our present treaty stipulations. The honorable Senator says that appropriations may be diverted to totally different uses, in the discretion of the President and with the consent of the tribes expressed in the usual way, and that consent is to be expressed by treaty hereafter to be made. It seems to me if that be the case we must wait until those treaties have been made before we can appropriate money under them. This is an appropriation bill to carry out existing treaty stipulations, and I submit that the point is very well taken by the Senator from Ohio in opposition to this view.

Mr. WINDOM. I will move, if it be in order, to perfect the section before it is stricken out, by striking out in lines 3 and 4 the words—

And for various articles provided by treaty stipulations.

That will leave but a small amount, so that it will obviate to a great extent the objection of the Senator from Ohio. It will leave but a small amount to be diverted in that way, and will really be for the benefit of the Indians. I submit it to the Senate.

Mr. THURMAN. It is very true that would reduce the amount, but it would leave the wrong principle and the wrong precedent, and the constitutional objection would remain just as before. It would have the further effect of which I spoke, that several of these appropriations, not a few of them, are for uses which have become obsolete and extinct and which we are therefore not bound by the treaty to provide for at all, as in the case I put, and in the case of certain schools to be kept at places where there are now no Indians at all, the Indians having been removed west of the Mississippi. Under cover of fulfilling those treaty stipulations, which are incapable of fulfillment, have become utterly obsolete and nugatory, it appropriates in effect a gross sum of money to be used as the Indian agents may see fit to use it.

I did not say before, for the reason that I had not time, what I now say, that I am assured that provisions of this kind, which allow a commutation, so to speak, or change of the uses declared in the bill, are one of the most fruitful sources of the frauds which are perpetrated by agents. We make an appropriation for a specific purpose. An agent is authorized to make a treaty between himself, in the name of the President of the United States, and the Indians, not a treaty such as the Constitution knows, not a treaty to be confirmed by the Senate, but a bargain, made a thousand or fifteen hundred or two thousand miles from here, that that money which we have appropriated for a specific purpose shall not be used for that purpose, but shall be used for the purpose that he and the head-men of the tribe may agree upon. I am assured by those who ought to know, by those who live where the Indians are, that this provision is one of the most fruitful sources of fraud and imposition by these agents. I hope that the whole will be stricken out. Of course I am in favor of striking out what the Senator from Minnesota moves to strike out, but I hope the Senate, if it carry that, will proceed further and strike out all that I have moved to strike out.

Mr. SPRAGUE. As one of the members of the Committee on Ap-propositions, I desire to express my gratitude to the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Ohio for proposing thus publicly the amendment which is now before the Senate. It has occurred to me in that committee frequently that the latitude conveyed in this provision is of such a character as to put the whole Indian appropriations at very loose disposal, and undoubtedly frauds committed under it can be increased indefinitely. I trust that the amendment of the Senator from Ohio will prevail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota to strike out the words "and for various articles provided for by treaty stipulations."

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is to limit the exercise of discretion in regard to the treaties. I am inclined to think that ought to be done.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio to strike out section 7 from the word "that" to the word "provision," in line 9, inclusive.

Mr. THURMAN. I hope that will be adopted.

Mr. BAYARD. Let the clause, as amended, which is proposed to be stricken out, be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter all appropriations made for teachers, millers, blacksmiths, engineers, carpenters, physicians, and other persons employed in the Indian service may be diverted to other uses for the benefit of various Indian tribes, within the discretion of the President, and with the consent of said tribes, expressed in the usual manner, and that he cause report to be made to Congress at the next session thereafter of his action under this provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is to strike out these words.

Mr. BOGY. It seems to me that the entire provision in the first line down to "law" in the fifteenth line should be stricken out.

Mr. THURMAN. The best way is to let the question be taken on my motion, and then the Senator can move to strike out the rest.

Mr. BOGY. The part to which I specially refer is in regard to contracts for goods and supplies.

Mr. THURMAN. Allow me to say to my friend that from the end of what I move to strike out in line 9 down to and including the word "law," in the fifteenth line, is a distinct matter from that which I move to strike out; it is on a distinct question; and I pray him not to confound the two together. Let the vote be taken on my motion, which I hope will prevail, and then the Senator can move to strike out further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BAYARD. The first fifteen lines of section 7 are, in fact, a repeal of the whole bill, or nearly the whole bill. What is the bill for? It is a bill appropriating moneys for teachers, millers, blacksmiths, engineers, carpenters, &c., and other persons employed in the Indian service. That is just what the appropriation bill is for; and all these preceding eighty-odd pages, with their infinite variety of sections, are for this very purpose, which by lines 4 and 5 of section 7 are virtually repealed. After providing that these vast sums for all these various purposes shall be and are hereby appropriated, you then say that they may be diverted from these to some other uses not provided for or stated by law.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Allow me to say one word in explanation?

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It must be remembered that this bill covers treaties dating back almost to the origin of the Government. It covers all the treaties for a period of seventy-five years. In almost all these treaties we have provided for this class or service, and the bill appropriates specifically for this service without any regard to the changed circumstances of the tribes. Some of these tribes have changed their relations so far as occupation is concerned, changed in their habits, changed in their position. Although we are obliged to appropriate for the purposes named in the treaties, it is found that a prudent discretion would require a different use of the money. We appropriate for so many blacksmiths, for so many employes, according to the language of the treaties, and we are bound to do it. Now, with the consent of the Indians, we provide that that money may be expended for other objects for their benefit. If it could be relied upon that that would be judiciously done, I think my honorable friend will see that it would be proper.

Mr. BAYARD. I can understand that practically this is the administration of a trust fund, and there is more or less of discretion required in the trustee. I recognize that to be the truth. I believe that a great deal of the injustice and trouble which have occurred in the course of this whole Indian business has arisen from the fact that we have been compelled to trust to the discretion of agents who have been selfish oftentimes; who have been warped by various causes from their duty to the Indians. But it does seem to me very plainly, and I submit it to my honorable friend, that this bill is contained in the seventh section, and all you want is a statement that so much money is to be appropriated for the benefit of the various Indian tribes to be expended within the discretion of the President and with the consent of the tribes, expressed in the usual manner, and that he cause report to be made to Congress at the next session of his action under this provision. If you pass that clause, it is enough; that is the substance of the bill as it is now. The controlling principle of this bill is found in that short language, and my honorable friend will see that we might just as well pass that short act as resort to this long bill of eighty-three pages of print. By the first fifteen lines of section 7 you provide a general appropriation of four or five million dollars to be spent in the discretion of the various Indian agents. If they have the power at any time to divert these moneys as they have under this section, it seems to me useless to go through the trouble of passing this large bill. I think that is substantially the result.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That remark is unanswerable in a certain sense, but it would apply to all the public service. It is rather in the nature of the budget of the British ministry.

Mr. BAYARD. My honorable friend does not mean to say that the budget, that is the sum total of the scheme of expenditure, is placed at the discretion of the officers charged with the disbursement?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It is appropriated according to the specific estimates, which are vastly more detailed than ours.

Mr. BAYARD. But here the President appoints the officers who make the expenditures.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Of course he does.

Mr. BAYARD. And the appropriations can be diverted to any other purpose in his discretion.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is to say we allow it in this instance. We adopt the other method. In our method of appropriations we require estimates, and in addition to that we prescribe specifically what shall be the disposition of the money.

Mr. BAYARD. That is the passage of a law and leaving it discretionary with your agents whether they will carry it into effect or not.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is true to a certain extent. We say that we make these appropriations specifically for this particular service, but if on taking into consideration the condition of that service it shall be found more advantageous to the Indians to receive the service which is due them in some other shape, we allow the exercise of that discretion in that particular instance. That is all there is of it.

Mr. HAMLIN. That being all there is of it, it is just so much too much in my judgment. You make a treaty with Indians and you have provided in that treaty that you will do certain things. Those things are enumerated. They are stated in this bill. You provide for teachers, for millers, for blacksmiths, for engineers, for carpenters, for physicians. Now we are told in the progress of time the tribes arrive at that point when they do not want a miller, when they do not need a blacksmith, and consequently the money which is not needed by the tribe for either of these purposes or any other may be better diverted to another object and will be more useful to the tribe in that way. Well, I concede all that; but when you divert it from the specific article named in the treaty to another purpose, the bill and the bill only should state that purpose, and it should not be left to the discretion of the President nominally, but actually of a person, whom my colleague and nobody else will know, who will do that work; and that money may be every dollar of it used at a hunting frolic or a war-dance.

Therefore the latitude of that section is unsafe. The very moment you divert the money from any specific purpose named in the treaty to any other, that other purpose not being required by treaty, you should state specifically in your bill what is to be done with it and leave it to the discretion of no one. That is safe legislation according to my judgment; the other is unsafe and wrong in principle, not to say that it is unconstitutional. For that reason I think this clause ought to go out.

We appropriate money under a treaty for blacksmiths. They are not wanted; they are not needed; it will do no good if it is appropriated to that purpose. Very well; still are we not obliged to appropriate that amount of money, having agreed to it in the original treaty? If so, then if it becomes wise to divert it to another purpose, state it and state it specifically, and let it be for schools or for some purpose that we shall know and that the law will define.

There has been a great deal said about the looseness of the expenditure of Indian appropriations. I do not know very much about it; but I do know enough to believe that we may not exercise too great care here in placing safeguards around the manner in which these appropriations shall be expended; and it does seem to me that this latitude is an unsafe one, and one which Congress ought not to justify under any state of circumstances.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOGY. I now move to strike out of section 7 all down to line 15 including the word "law."

The section as it is now reads:

That all appropriations made for teachers, millers, blacksmiths, engineers, carpenters, physicians, and other persons employed in the Indian service.

That includes these appropriations entirely amounting to millions of dollars.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will observe to the Senator from Missouri that the last motion which was agreed to has stricken out of section 7 all down to line 9. The section now reads:

That hereafter no purchase of goods, supplies, &c.

The Senator will bear in mind that there is nothing in the section now from line 1 to line 9.

Mr. THURMAN. I hope the Senator will explain his amendment, because I really do not see objection to the clause from line 9 to 15.

Mr. BOGY. I move to strike out these words:

That no purchase of goods, supplies, or farming implements, or any other article whatsoever, the cost of which shall exceed $3,000, shall be paid for from the money appropriated by this act, unless the same shall have been previously advertised and contracted for as heretofore provided by law.

I cannot see any diverting of money there, and yet I can very well see that it is nearly impossible to comply with the law. If the law can be complied with, the appropriation might lapse, and that would suit me very well. I therefore will not raise any objection to that claim.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator withdraw his motion?

Mr. BOGY. Yes; I withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If no further amendment be offered—

Mr. BOGY. On pages 33 and 34 I offered an amendment awhile ago, which was not adopted, in relation to the Miami Indians of Kansas. The bill as it now stands appropriates for various purposes for these Indians $11,500. It was objected to awhile ago by the Senator from Vermont, because he thought it would be a violation of treaty obligations, and at his request I have drawn an amendment which removes the objection. I now move to strike out from line 802 to line 820, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

So as to enable the Miami tribe of Indians to buy seeds and grain for farming purposes this year, the President of the United States may, with the consent of said Indians, use the sum of $11,500, being the amount due them by treaty of 5th June, 1854, for this purpose, and this shall be taken as a compliance with the terms of said treaty.

It is carrying out the treaty as to the amount, but diverting the sum because the Indians are in a destitute condition, and this is at their own request. The appropriation cannot be made in this way unless it is done by the action of the President after obtaining the consent of the Indians. I submit the amendment.

As I said before, this is a matter of great importance to these Indians. They are in the condition of the people of Kansas; their crop has been entirely destroyed either by drought or by grasshoppers; and as we know that large sums are being raised all over this country for the relief of the citizens of Kansas, why should not these poor Indians who have money in the Treasury obtain this small sum? It is theirs, and they have asked for it. The provision is guarded sufficiently, so that there can be no trouble hereafter that the treaty stipulations were not carried out. I therefore hope the amendment will meet with no opposition. It is proper and just.

Mr. WINDOM. I would ask the Senator from Missouri if this amendment has been submitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs and received their approval?

Mr. BOGY. I will state to the Senator that an amendment differently worded was submitted to the committee and met their approval; but this has been submitted to the individual members of the committee now in the Senate and meets their entire approbation.

Mr. WINDOM. As this is a question of policy, and the Committee on Indian Affairs has indorsed it, I shall make no opposition to the amendment. I desire, however, to say to my friend from Ohio, and also to my friend from Delaware, that I think the Constitution is in danger again. This is precisely the same principle that alarmed our friends a few moments ago, as I understand.

Mr. THURMAN. I beg to correct my friend. If I understand the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, it makes a specific appropriation. It specifies the object. It does not leave it to anybody's discretion.

Mr. WINDOM. It specifies the object, but the diversion is to be made, as I understand the amendment, with the consent of the Indians, and the money is to be applied under a new agreement to be made hereafter. That was one objection urged by the Senator from Delaware; I do not know that it was by the Senator from Ohio.

One word further before I sit down. I think that our friends on the other side are a little confused about the Constitution, because the clause that we have just stricken out, if I may be allowed to refer to action elsewhere, is a pet amendment of a good democratic gentleman from Kentucky. It seems our friends are a little confused on constitutional questions, and do not quite agree among themselves. I have no objection to this amendment, however.

Mr. INGALLS. I heartily concur with the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri. While it has not been formally acted upon by the Committee on Indian Affairs, I may say that it receives the sanction and approval of every member of the committee. I am also authorized to say informally that the subject has been referred to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and that he also approves of it. I trust there may be no further delay in its adoption.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I offer the following amendment, to come in after line 1723:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized to remove all bands of Indians now located upon the Alsea and Siletz Indian reservation, set apart for them by Executive order dated November 9, 1855, and restored to the public domain by Executive order of December 21, 1865, and to locate said Indians upon the following described tract of country, namely: Beginning at a point two miles south of the Siletz agency; thence west to the Pacific Ocean; thence north, along said ocean, to the mouth of Salmon River; thence due east to the western boundary of the eighth range of townships west of the Willamette meridian; thence south with said boundary to a point due east of the place of beginning; thence west to the place of beginning; which is hereby set apart as a permanent reservation for the Indians now occupying the same, and to be hereafter located thereon. And all the balance of said Alsea and Siletz reservations is hereby thrown open to settlement under the land laws of the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. I want to know if this comes from any committee. It is just by such amendments as this that the Indian appropriation bill has been made what it is—a mass of undigested legislation. I raise the point of order, if the chairman of the committee does not do it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the point of order?

Mr. SHERMAN. Whether this amendment comes from a committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no appropriation in the amendment, as the Chair understands.

Mr. SHERMAN. This makes a new commencement of expenditure—the removal of Indians from reservations.

Mr. MITCHELL. Not at all. I will explain to the Senator and to the Senate the object of this amendment in a very few words.

Mr. INGALLS. Are there any white settlers on the tract proposed to be set apart as a reservation?

Mr. MITCHELL. There are not. In 1855 a treaty was made with these Indians that never was ratified by the Senate. Consequently that failed. In November, 1855, by Executive order a reservation was set apart for these confederated bands of Indians. That reservation extended for a distance of ninety miles along the Pacific Ocean, extending from Cape Lookout down the coast that distance, and extending out in an easterly direction twenty miles, creating a reservation of eighteen hundred square miles. In 1865, by another Executive order, twenty miles in width in the center of this reservation which under the former Executive order was designated as the Coast Range reservation, was relieved from the former Executive order and thrown open to settlement, thus creating two reservations, the one called the Siletz on the north, the other the Alsea on the south. Heretofore and at the present time we have and have had two agents, one in charge of the Siletz Indians and one in charge of the Alsea Indians. On the Alsea reservation there are about two hundred Indians. On the Siletz reservation there are about twelve hundred Indians. There is no necessity whatever for the Government paying two agents, as it is now doing. The Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs are very anxious to have the authority to transfer the two hundred Indians of the Alsea reservation to the Siletz reservation and have a permanent reservation declared, and throw the rest of the country open to settlement. That is all there is in the amendment. Instead of taking anything out of the Treasury, it simply saves the amount that the Government is now paying in keeping up the Alsea Indian reservation.

I will say further that this measure is strongly recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and by the Secretary of the Interior, by letters which I have here, and also by a telegram which I have received this morning from the Secretary of the Interior, urging that this be done even though no appropriation be made. He thinks there ought to be an appropriation, but I am advised not to ask any appropriation.

Mr. THURMAN. I ask the Senator whether his proposition has been considered by any committee?

Mr. MITCHELL. I will state that it was submitted to the Committee on Appropriations about the time this bill was reported, and since that time I think I am justified in saying that I have had the consent of a majority of the Committee on Appropriations and also a majority of the Committee on Indian Affairs to offer this amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Indian Affairs considered this matter very fully and first objected to it simply because there was an appropriation asked of $25,000. Afterward the Committee on Appropriations inserted for the benefit of this tribe $15,000 with the understanding that these two reservations should be consolidated into one. There is no law authorizing it, but the Commissioner of Indian Affairs stated distinctly to us that no additional appropriation would be required if these reservations were consolidated. I think they ought to be consolidated.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to say a few words in regard to the character of this legislation. I can give the Senate some examples where this kind of legislation has brought us into trouble. Here is a proposition compulsory in its character without consulting the Indians to remove two hundred from one reservation to another, and the reason given for it is to save the expense of an Indian agency. That is a very small matter. The expense of removing these Indians according to the estimate of the Department is $25,000. That is too much to pay to stop one agency.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is an entire mistake on the part of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me—

Mr. SHERMAN. If I have the floor I want my five minutes; I do not wish to be interrupted. The Senator from Oregon himself said that the Secretary of the Interior had estimated for this service $25,000, but finding he could not get the appropriation or that there was doubt about it, in order to get a mandatory clause in the law for the removal of the Indians he was willing to do it without an appropriation. It was just such an amendment as this to an Indian appropriation bill that caused the Modoc war that cost us $8,000,000.

A mandatory provision was made in an appropriation bill to compel the removal of a little band of Indians not two hundred in number. This is a serious matter.

Mr. THURMAN. Can my colleague tell us how much the Modoc war cost?

Mr. SHERMAN. Between eight and nine millions, I think, according to the War Department; but I am not certain. It was a great sum of money, and many men were killed in that war. The famous Choctaw claim arose under a resolution offered by a Senator from Arkansas, Mr. Sebastian, which was debated just about ten minutes. An objection was made to it, but Mr. Sebastian turned it off with a few words; and upon that award as it was said to be, a mere resolution of the Senate, was founded the famous Choctaw claim which was defeated in the House of Representatives only a few days ago and which held this very Indian bill for two or three days. The famous award upon which that Choctaw claim rests was made in ten minutes in the Senate and on the motion of a single Senator presenting the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

If we are to consider this question of removing Indians from one reservation to another, it ought to be treated as a serious matter, which it may at any time become. It seems to me that it is sufficient answer to this proposition that it is not reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, it is not accompanied with the necessary appropriation to carry it into execution, which of itself is a suspicious circumstance; and the reasons for it are not given in a written report. It is manifestly the purpose to disturb this Indian reservation in order to extend the white settlements over a portion of this reservation, a part of it having already been taken, and this mandatory provision requiring the removal of these two or three hundred Indians is to be carried out by money paid out of an appropriation made nominally for some other purpose, perhaps made for the education and support of these very Indians, which will be used in removing them forcibly against their will to some other portion of this same reservation. That is the way it appears to me. I think provisions of this kind ought to be made after examination and upon the responsibility of a written report made from the Committee on Indian Affairs. Then I would not object.

Mr. ALLISON. These Indians are on this reservation wholly by executive order. They are not there under any treaty stipulation. They can be removed at any time by executive order without legislation; but as I understand the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon, it is to fix by law a reservation for these Indians. It is very easy to propose an amendment as suggested by the Senator from Ohio that these Indians shall not be removed without their consent being first obtained, and I think that would be a very proper amendment. Therefore, if he will allow me, I will offer such a proviso.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the proposition ought to come in due form from the Committee on Indian Affairs, and they ought to take the responsibility of it. I am not prepared to frame an amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I care nothing about the amendment itself here; I only make a suggestion in reference to it. I move to insert at the end of the amendment this proviso:

Provided, That these Indians shall not be removed until their consent has been obtained.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to say in answer to the honorable Senator from Ohio that he assumes that this whole proceeding, this recommendation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and of the Secretary of the Interior has been without any investigation of the matter on the ground, without any reference to whether or not the consent of the Indians has been obtained. I will state for the benefit of the Senate that this matter has been investigated not only by the agents of the two reservations but by two Indian inspectors, and their reports are on file in the Indian Department, and upon them the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner based their recommendation.

As the honorable chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs states, that committee have considered this matter, and the only objection they found was the fact that the original proposition referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs asked for an appropriation of $25,000, not for the purpose of removing these Indians, but for the purpose of providing for them after they should be removed, mainly for the purpose of constructing grist and saw mills on the Siletz reservation. That is what the Commissioner of Indian Affairs wanted $25,000 for, but the Committee on Appropriations in this bill have provided for that. Consequently there is no necessity for an appropriation in this amendment.

Again, I call the attention of the Senate to this provision in this bill already agreed to:

For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Oregon, including transportation of annuity goods and presents, (where no special provision therefor is made by treaties) and for paying the expenses of the removal and subsistence of Indians in Oregon, (not parties to any treaty,) and for pay for necessary employés, $50,000.

So that a general appropriation is already made by the provisions of this bill, a part of which may be applied to the removal of the Indians; and the cost of removing two hundred Indians twenty miles certainly cannot be very much.

Now, I hope the amendment will be adopted, inasmuch as the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs says it has been considered and that the only objection raised by that committee has been obviated by the withdrawal of any demand for an appropriation.

Mr. INGALLS. When this amendment was before the Committee on Indian Affairs my objections were based upon the fact that it involved an appropriation for purposes which I believed to be unnecessary. The Senator from Oregon has endeavored to make the amendment palatable to the Senate by striking out the clause which provides for an appropriation. Upon turning to page 70 of the bill, under the head of incidental expenses of the State of Oregon, to which the Senator from Oregon has just called our attention, I find that the amount of $40,000 originally passed by the House has been raised by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate to $50,000. If the object is to induce the Senate to adopt this amendment by striking out the appropriation, concealing the fact that the appropriation has been placed in another portion of this bill, I for one am unwilling to be a party to any such transaction. If the Committee on Appropriations have raised the sum for incidental expenses in Oregon from $40,000 to $50,000 to enable this amendment to be put into effect and at the same time to appear to be without expense to the Government, I think it is not exactly a fair transaction. I should like to hear from the committee whether that is the fact or not.

Mr. MITCHELL. In the absence of any answer from any member of the committee, I will state that I know that had no reference whatever to any contemplated amendment of this kind. The amount was raised on the recommendation of the Department, because the amount inserted in the House bill was wholly insufficient to meet the expenses.

Mr. INGALLS. Can I have the attention of the Senator from Minnesota for a moment?

Mr. WINDOM. Yes, sir.

Mr. INGALLS. I wish to inquire upon what ground the Committee on Appropriations raised the sum for general incidental expenses in Oregon from $40,000 to $50,000.

Mr. WINDOM. I understand it was for the purpose of removal and general purposes of the Indian service there. The amount appropriated was not enough.

Mr. INGALLS. Did it involve the expense of the contemplated consolidation of the Alsea and Siletz reservations?

Mr. WINDOM. I think it did not. We had a request from the Secretary of the Interior for a larger amount in addition to that, and the amount estimated was much larger than the amount appropriated for the Indian service in Oregon.

Mr. ALLISON. As I understand the matter, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs did state that if this amount was raised to $50,000 it would cover the expenses of removal; and if it is not intended to remove these Indians and consolidate them, I think the amendment enlarging the appropriation ought not to be agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. This is a matter which will come up again in the Senate, I suppose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. If it is in order, I would move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, yesterday agreed to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations in line 1792, on page 73.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest that the Senator can arrive at his object by reserving in the Senate the question of concurring in that amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL. Very well.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate concur in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to reserve the amendment which adds one to the number of agencies.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question will be on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. They will be acted on in gross except those reserved. The Senator from West Virginia reserves one.

Mr. MITCHELL. I reserve the one I just now indicated.

Mr. INGALLS. I reserve the amendments on page 9 in reference to the Apaches of Arizona and New Mexico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any other reservation?

Mr. INGALLS. I reserve also the amendment on page 68 under the head of general incidental expenses of the Indian service in California, and the amendment on page 70 in relation to the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Oregon. I want a further examination on that point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will put the question on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole except those which have been reserved for a separate vote.

The unreserved amendments were concurred in.

Mr. DAVIS. In line 10 on page 1, sixty-nine special agencies were provided for in the House bill. The amendment is to make it seventy. I understand that there is a change of two from one section to another. I was not present in committee when this particular subject was passed upon. The committee proposed to add one agency in gross, effected by changing two as I understand and dropping one. Adding an agency or changing an agency costs a good deal more than the $1,500 paid as compensation to the agent. Where an agency is changed or an agent added there is not only added the salary of the agent but $10,000 for expenses of that agency may be expended. Then there are buildings such as mills, blacksmith-shops, and houses, &c. The changing of agencies, unless there be great necessity for it, is very expensive. The necessity for adding an agency I do not understand at all. I am of the opinion that the change ought not to take place and that one ought not to be added. However I will wait to hear from the Senator who has the bill in charge.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment striking out "sixty-nine" and inserting "seventy."

Mr. DAVIS. What explanation has the Senator to make?

Mr. WINDOM. The explanation is that two agencies were added in Dakota, and one reduced in the Indian Territory. That makes an addition of one agency in the aggregate, and hence the change from sixty-nine to seventy. The two added in Dakota are for the Black Hills and White River agencies. The authority upon which that was done was a very urgent recommendation from Bishop Hare of the Episcopal Church. He has charge of the Indians so far as under church arrangements any one but an agent can have charge in that region. Bishop Hare has devoted several years to that service, and the church which he represents has taken so much interest in the Indians there that its members have expended of their own money as I am informed about $40,000 for the civilization and benefit of the Indians. Bishop Hare is very anxious for the establishment of these agencies and believes that it will be conducive to the best interests of the Indians. The Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs concur with him, and the Committee on Appropriations, acting upon the best information they had on the subject, have recommended it. Bishop Hare was present in the city, as I am informed, and went before the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Appropriations of that House and personally urged it. The Senate committee have left it precisely as it came from the House so far as these two agencies are concerned, except that we have changed the name of the Brulé to White River agency—a mere verbal change.

Mr. DAVIS. So far as the change of agencies is concerned the Senator has spoken, but as to the addition of an agency I do not recollect that he said a word.

Mr. WINDOM. I stated that there were two added in Dakota and one dropped in the Indian Territory. I have not gone over the footings, but there is one agent added to the original number, and, as I am informed, the aggregate increase is made up in that way.

Mr. DAVIS. My understanding is that there are two changes and one addition, and in that I think I am right; but I may not be. These changes always are expensive, and unless there is a necessity for them they should not be made. The addition of one agency will cost the Government for the first year perhaps thirty or forty thousand dollars and afterward eight or ten or twelve thousand dollars annually. I hope the amendment changing sixty-nine to seventy will be non-concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 15, noes 16; no quorum voting.

Mr. WINDOM. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WINDOM. At the risk of repeating the very brief statement I made a moment ago, I will say again that I think the Senate does not consider or has not well considered the authority upon which this amendment was made. The Episcopal Church has taken a great deal of interest in this question. One of their bishops is on the ground and I think really, if we will stop for a moment to consider, may be supposed to understand as well as we can here in our places what is for the best interests of these Indians. He made the journey from Montana here, largely for the purpose of impressing upon Congress the necessity of doing this thing. If that church organization relied wholly upon the Government to spend the money to take care of these Indians they would not come to us with as strong arguments as they now do; but the fact is as I stated a moment ago, that they have spent $40,000 of their own money and more a great deal than they would ask the Government to appropriate for this agency, and I think are entitled to some consideration.

I will not multiply words on the subject.

Mr. DAVIS. I object to increasing the number of agencies, not only on account of the salary of $1,500, but it is well known that buildings have to go up wherever there is an agency established, such as a blacksmith-shop, a mill, and other buildings, and $10,000 is allowed each agency for the expenses of the agency for labor, &c. Whenever there is an additional agency authorized anywhere, it remains. That has been our history; and instead of lessening hereafter, it will always keep up to the full number.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 26, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Boreman, Boutwell, Clayton, Cragin, Dorsey, Edmunds, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Ingalls, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Pease, Pratt, Ramsey, Sargent, Stewart, Wadleigh, Washburn, West, Windom, and Wright—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Boggy, Cameron, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Gilbert, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Norwood, Robertson, Saulsbury, Sprague, Stevenson, Stockton, and Thurman—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brownlow, Carpenter, Chandler, Conkling, Conover, Cooper, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Jones, Lewis, Logan, Morton, Patterson, Ransom, Schurz, Scott, Sherman, Spencer, and Tipton—25.

So the amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next reserved amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 9, in lines 204 and 205, the appropriation was increased from $300,000 to $375,000; in line 206, from $100,000 to $125,000; in line 206, from $400,000 to $500,000; so as to make the clause read:

For this amount, to subsist and properly care for the Apache Indians in Arizona and New Mexico who have been or may be collected on reservations in New Mexico and Arizona, namely, for those in Arizona, $375,000; and for those in New Mexico, $125,000; in all, $500,000.

Mr. INGALLS. I discharged a duty yesterday that I believed I owed to the Senate and to the country in calling attention to the reckless and extravagant, and, as I believe, unwarrantable expenditures in this branch of the Indian service. I alluded to the fact that during the last fiscal year an original and deficiency appropriation amounting to nearly $1,000,000 had been made for the subsistence of these Indians alone; that during the same time two regiments of infantry and two of cavalry had been maintained in those two Territories for the express purpose of keeping this tribe of Indians in subordination, at an additional expense of nearly $4,000,000. I referred also to the further fact that there were no accurate estimates upon which this approximation was based; that the number of Indians assumed to be upon reservations and requiring subsistence had been grossly exaggerated; that the entire number in both Territories did not exceed seventy-seven hundred; and that assuming that even were all upon reservations, that they were all entitled to subsistence, that the price of an adult soldier's ration was fifteen cents per day, even at that sum computing these all to be adults, the sum that is demanded was largely in excess of the actual amount required for that purpose.

Nor, sir, did I fail to refer to the additional fact that there had been in connection with the administration of the Indian Department in these Territories a habitual disregard of the requirements of law; that in every year since I have been here they had exceeded the appropriations made and had evinced a total disregard of the requirements of legislation upon that subject; that they had expended whatever sums they saw fit to expend, and applied the ensuing year for a deficiency appropriation in the full confidence that whatever sum they asked for would be granted. I also stated that the sum of $400,000 had been agreed upon in the lower House; that it came here as it came last year with a much lower sum than is now asked, and that it was very extraordinary that we should be called upon here in the Senate to increase this appropriation from $400,000 to half a million without any testimony whatever being submitted.

I do not desire to go further into this subject, but shall content myself with calling for the yeas and nays upon concurring in the amendment, for the purpose of letting the country know who is in favor of voting these appropriations without any satisfactory estimate.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, I remember the great length which the Senator took to elaborate the assertions which he has made this morning, assertions entirely unfounded, as was shown in the debate of yesterday, in every particular that he assumed on this matter. As was shown by the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, as was shown by the Senator in charge of this bill, and by myself and others who spoke on this matter, his statements were entire misapprehensions of the subject. And in the statement which he has made this morning as to soldiers' rations and the basis of the number of Indians in these Territories, he does not come within a quarter of a million dollars of arriving at the correct facts.

The fact is it costs about fifteen cents a day to feed each Indian, and that is cheap at that distance. The fact further is that these Indians are gathered on reservations and there is not a ration issued to them except on a ticket presented by the Indian which is given to the individual and separate Indian. The further fact was stated here yesterday that these Indians were employed in labor, useful to themselves and the Government, in building irrigating ditches and thereby enabling themselves to become partially self-supporting. The further fact which the Senator entirely ignores is that two or three years ago there was a condition of war and desolation all through the Territory of Arizona, when, as was said here yesterday—but it did not seem to reach the dull ear of the Senator, or if it did it made no impression on his mind—there was an average of two men and women murdered in the Territory each day for the three hundred and sixty-five days of the year, and that has ceased entirely, so that there has come peace and security.

The statement further was made in his hearing, but of no value to him, that whereas the papers of the Territory formerly came up with one prolonged shriek over the conditions to which they were subjected, they now come up day after day stating that a condition of profound peace has been secured in the Territory; that the people are secure in their lives when they go upon the roads; that a man can cultivate his farm without danger of losing his life, and leave his family at his home without returning to a smoking ruin; and that this happy result has been wrought during the time that these appropriations have been made, and commenced with them.

The Senator speaks of the deficiency appropriations made last year. Those deficiency appropriations were for expenditures extending over three years, and were not deficiency appropriations for that year simply. There was a settlement of old accounts up to that date, and it was so stated on the floor of the Senate, and the appropriations made in the bill have year by year decreased. Last year, where there was an appropriation for that year and the current year, it was stated that there would necessarily be some deficiency. Next year the Commissioner says he can get along without any deficiency at all. But, as I said yesterday, it is worth $500,000 per annum to have the present condition of things in that Territory. How much may you estimate the life of an American citizen at? Is it worth one dollar or $500,000? At how much do you estimate the life of an American woman living in that country? How much do you estimate the life of one each day in the three hundred and sixty-five days? It is shown by the memorial of the territorial Legislature that over seven hundred were killed in one year. Is there any price that could be set on this thing? Senators sitting here in their comfortable arm-chairs, coming from States that have driven the Indians out into other regions and seized upon their lands, where they are no longer troubled with them, can ignore this terrible condition of things on the frontiers which is brought about by failing in this peace policy of the Government. I know it does not touch them. Their "withers are unwrung." So far as the people of Arizona are concerned, three-fourths of them go from my State, and I know they are good men. They do not want anything from Government except to be protected, and there is an obligation on the part of the Government to protect them in the peaceable pursuits of life there. There is a rich territory abounding in mineral wealth, although of limited agricultural capacity, held out as a reward for enterprising pioneering. These pioneers go there and make themselves homes; they themselves and their families reside there; children are born there. An incipient State is started, and by and by it grows up and becomes a State of the Union. But if you allow them to be the prey of the most ferocious savages when by the expenditure of the amount named in this bill you can maintain profound peace, then I say you are guilty of a crime against the civilization of the age.

If this were a mere experiment, if the last two or three years' experience had not demonstrated that I am entirely correct, then Senators might doubt and hesitate; but when I stand here and appeal to the experience of the past two or three years in that Territory and compare it with the bloody history of the dark battle-grounds there the years previous and for twenty years previous, then I say there is warrant enough in the history of the Territory itself for Congress to persevere in the beneficent course which it has up to this time adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. WEST. The Senator from Kansas pointedly called the attention of the Senate that it was about to put itself upon record on a clause of this bill which he characterized as reckless, extravagant, and unwarrantable expenditure; and he then branched off into a general charge of mismanagement of the Indian Bureau with a view, I presume, of getting supporters on his list of yeas and nays. In that view he makes a broad statement here that the appropriation hitherto made for these Indians was in one particular year something like a million dollars. The first time that these Indians ever were appropriated for, for the purpose of maintaining them in a peaceful condition, was in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874. The amount given on that occasion was $250,000. During the progress of establishing these Indians upon these reservations General Crook, as I mentioned yesterday, found that he was getting more Indians than he had money; that the appropriation of $250,000 was not adequate for their support. Consequently he called upon Congress, or the Indian Bureau did, for $350,000 more, which was granted in the deficiency bill of the spring of 1874. Therefore we have $600,000 used the first year for the support of these Indians. Then the next year we had $500,000, and this year we have again $500,000 upon an estimate of $750,000 by the Indian Department and the Secretary of the Interior.

Now, Mr. President, what are these Indians doing? What is done with this money? How is it distributed or disbursed recklessly, extravagantly, or unwarrantably? I will read from what General Crook says. First as to the general effects of this pacific policy he says that he is "making important reduction in the expenses of the Department." He says furthermore:

If the present peace with the Apaches remains unbroken, there will be a great reduction in the price of all kinds of meats furnished the troops in the future.

Again, the governor of the Territory says:

At no period in the history of Arizona have our Indian affairs been in so satisfactory condition. Comparative peace now reigns throughout the Territory, with almost a certainty that no general Indian war will ever occur again. General Crook, in the subjugation of the Apaches, has sustained his former well-earned military reputation, and deserves the lasting gratitude of our people. The agencies are generally in the hands of men who seem to be faithfully discharging their duties, and by harmony and concert of action between the branches of the Government having Indians in charge they can before very long be made nearly if not wholly self-sustaining, and sufficiently tamed and civilized to preclude the possibility of again becoming hostile.

The surveyor-general of the Territory corroborates that, and says:

With few exceptions the past year has been one of peace with the Apaches, and the beneficial influence thereof is exhibited in several ways. For this peace we are especially indebted to the energy and wisdom of General George Crook, commanding the Military Department of Arizona.

General Crook goes on to specify how this money, or the provisions purchased by this money, are distributed to the Indians. And remember the distribution of these supplies is not left to the Indian agent, it is done by the officers of the Army. General Crook says:

Each warrior is numbered and carries with him, day and night, his metal check, with the number and designation of his tribe stamped thereon. A corresponding record of each, the number of members in his family, and his own personal description is also kept by the officer in charge; and as issues are made on these checks, the Indians themselves are careful not to lose them and to be well known to the officer as No.—.

Then again:

If the Indians on these reservations are properly managed, kept at work, furnished with seeds and implements, and their present interest in raising stock and making themselves homes encouraged, there will be no further trouble with them and they will gradually become self-supporting.

In no instance within the experience of the management of the Indian Bureau has there been so satisfactory a result for the same amount of money attained as in this present case, and it is palpable according to the report made by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that to the number of Indians there—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. WEST. I move to amend by striking out the word "five" to conclude what I want to say, that to the number of Indians there the officers of the Army dole out these provisions to them by agents in such a way that there can be no possible fraud, and furthermore that the amount of fifteen cents a ration which the Senator speaks of as adequate for an adult soldier he is mistaken about. The amount is twenty-two cents per ration without transportation. This appropriation of $500,000 is to feed that number of Indians and to pay for transportation besides. If we do not do that, it would not be at all adequate. The amount has been estimated at $750,000 and the Senate have granted $500,000.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from California has seemed directly to refer to me. He has taken occasion to refer to what he calls the dullness of my ears. I shall not be pressed to put in any comparison as to the longitude of his, because I think that would be entirely unnecessary.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator might suffer by the comparison.

Mr. INGALLS. I said it would be unfavorable to the Senator from California.

But I desire to say that in the statement yesterday made by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] as to the necessity for the amount that is here asked for he did state, and his remarks will be found on page 40 of to-day's RECORD, that it was based upon a soldier's ration at $15.48 per hundred for seventy-two hundred and seventy-six Indians, the entire amount of which would be $411,108.55, exclusive of transportation. Every Senator on this floor who is familiar with Indian affairs knows that a very large proportion consists of beef, and that beef transports itself. It is driven there by the contractors and furnished to the posts where the supplies are distributed. The remainder of the ration, as is shown by the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, consists of bran and shorts, so that this estimate even is very largely in excess of the actual amount that is necessary to be expended for the subsistence of these Indians.

But I went on further to show, and I am substantiated by the report of the Commissioner, that the entire number of Apache Indians in these two Territories is about seventy-eight hundred; that not more than one-half are on these reservations; and that a very large percentage of that number even consists of women and children, who of course do not require an adult ration. So I think that, instead of being defeated or instead of being overthrown in my position, I am entirely substantiated by the facts in this case, and that there is no proof whatever upon which the Senate can base an intelligent vote for this enormous appropriation.

One thing further, since the Senator from California has seen fit to refer to the previous administration of affairs in that Territory and the deficiency appropriations that have been called for in previous years. Last year the amount that was solicited and reported by the Committee on Appropriation was $450,000, but I am informed and I believe that there is to-day a deficiency appropriation due for the expenditures of 1873 that has not been paid; that the sum expended in those Territories was so enormously in excess of the appropriations which have been made that the parties entitled to receive it did not dare to make the matter known to the committees of Congress; that there is to-day a deficiency of more than $100,000 in the expenditures of 1873 which we shall yet be called upon to appropriate. I make this statement upon information communicated to me by the Delegate from one of those Territories, and I think it is necessary to know if that can be substantiated. I say, therefore, before we are called upon to vote additional appropriations in excess of those reported by the committee, the Senate is at least entitled to more accurate and definite information than has yet been furnished.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator from Kansas is very well aware that last year when a deficiency was asked for, on account of his strenuous opposition, he fighting it as if it were a rattlesnake, the deficiency appropriations were cut down. There was no shrinking on the part of the Department in stating the true condition of affairs. It was well known that the inauguration of this peace policy cost a great deal of money. The exact figures were stated. It was debated here in the Senate, and debated with great heat by the Senator from Kansas, as if there were something urging him to that action more than appeared on the floor of the Senate. I do not suppose, however, that that was so, or that he had any information more than he disclosed. I do not think so. But I remember that with very great heat indeed he assailed those appropriations, undervalued the work done there by the military, and undervalued the work being done under the peace policy. He insisted that the old condition of things should continue, and that the Government should not pay the debt which had been created by means of this beneficent policy. He and some others helping him in the other House of Congress succeeded in cutting down the deficiency appropriations, against our protest and against our showing that the amount allowed would not be sufficient to pay the bills which had been honestly incurred, from $70,000 to a hundred thousand. But there was no concealment by the Department, by myself, or any one else, as he seems to intimate. We insisted that that cutting down would leave the deficiency he refers to now. The same argument, I have no doubt, will be brought forward again against the inevitable deficiency for the current year. Large amounts are paid for the expenses in this Territory, but the real fact is year by year the expense has been decreased, because the system of peace has been cheaper than war, and there has been an opportunity to get supplies more cheaply, both for the Indians and that portion of the Army kept there until they can be safely removed. There is now no necessity of transporting so much wheat and flour from long distances as before. Peace has enabled the people to raise many articles, and they are raising more and more each year. They have been able to become herdsmen and raise cattle without having their herds driven off by marauding Indians or the herders slain. Under this condition of things the appropriation of $450,000 for this present fiscal year, though not adequate, has come nearer to paying expenses.

But a deficiency comparatively small has occurred, which Congress must appropriate at this session, or there will be no provision whatever for the balance of the year. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs says a deficiency of probably fifty or seventy-five thousand dollars—I have not the exact figures—for the rest of this fiscal year. However, for next year, appropriating this $500,000, the Commissioner and Secretary of the Interior are of the opinion that they can bring the service within the amount of the appropriation.

All I want is that these Indians shall not be let loose upon the people of Arizona. I beg that we treat the people mercifully. If we do not, the result will be most disastrous to affairs in that Territory and most expensive to the United States Government, as well as cruel to its citizens. Instead of two regiments, you will have to go back to the old number and furnish four regiments, and at a cost of $5,000,000; instead of two companies of cavalry, you will have to double the number, at a cost of—I do not know how much, but it would be very large. In other words, it is very much cheaper to make this meager appropriation for these tribes in Arizona without the expense of war than to be compelled to turn loose those Indians on the arid plains and among the fastnesses of that Territory, from which they will sally out on ungarded emigrants and citizens and take their lives.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If I were to measure my duty in voting for or against this measure by the rules which seem to influence my honorable friend from California when he says that the Senator from Kansas at some other session of Congress spoke warmly about Indian appropriations, &c., I should be certainly compelled to vote against the recommendation of the Senator from California, for I think we have found as a general rule that the side of safety is the side of saying "no" about Indian appropriation bills. While I do not intend to interfere in defense of my friend from Kansas from any inference that might be raised from what the Senator from California has said, (because the Senator from Kansas is quite able to take care of himself,) I do think that it is not quite the just thing for the Senator from California, as an argument in favor of this appropriation, to hint that at some former session, or at this session, the Senator from Kansas has been particularly warm against Indian appropriations.

Mr. SARGENT. Will the Senator allow me a remark?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator usually understands that which is said in his presence. The Senator from Kansas said there was some concealment in all this, or that the parties did not dare to bring forward estimates and make known their claims. In reply to that I cited the fact that the exact figures were brought forward by the Department and advocated by myself; that there was no concealment; and the figures were cut down by the opposition made in the two Houses of Congress. I question no man's right to oppose an appropriation. I was repelling a charge of concealment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not understand the Senator to say that precise thing.

Mr. SARGENT. That is what the RECORD will show.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If that is what the Senator from California said, and that was all, then of course the observation I made is quite out of place; but I confess if I correctly understood the remark what I said I think was just, which implies no reflection upon him except that in the warmth of this debate he has perhaps forgotten all that is due to other men's motives as well as his own.

Now, Mr. President, to come to the merit of this thing, it does seem to me that, with the information we have, it is much better to keep this appropriation where it stood in the House bill and not to increase it. If it turns out when we get to the deficiency bill that the appropriations for this current year, which still run on to the 1st of July, are insufficient to keep peace and justice and all that in respect to these Indians, then we can provide for it; but to undertake to say in advance, for the period of twelve months from the 1st of July next, that there is to be required this increased appropriation, ought to warn us to insist, as the Senator from Kansas has said, upon the clearest proof of a pre-eminent necessity. I do not see that proof, and therefore having had some observation, not experience, in reference to Indian appropriations in the last ten years, I shall vote in favor of sticking to the House bill. That has gone far enough. There will be time enough to provide for what the Senator from California fears when we come to the deficiency bill this year, if there is any trouble until the 1st of July, and otherwise there will be time enough next December if any necessity then exist to provide for it.

Mr. SARGENT. Will the Senator allow me to call his attention to section 6? I would like to make one observation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. SARGENT. Section 6 provides:

That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior, and the officers charged by law with the distribution of supplies to the Indians, under appropriations made by law, to distribute them and pay them out to the Indians entitled to them in such proper proportions as that the amount of appropriation made for the current year shall not be expended before the end of such current year, so as to prevent deficiencies; and no expenditure shall be made or liability incurred on the part of the Government on account of the Indian service for any fiscal year (unless in compliance with existing law) beyond the amount of money previously appropriated for said service during such year.

Now, my criticism is this. If we appropriate the smaller amount, it being, under the sixth section, divided by twelve, we have a lingering starvation extended over twelve months, which we cannot expect the Indians to submit to. By this sixth section you cannot use up the appropriation in the first six months and then come in for a deficiency. You must pinch every month in the year. With this section in the bill the necessity becomes greater for an adequate appropriation, so that the monthly parts may each be adequate. So I think the Senator's reasoning fails.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no doubt the Senator so thinks, but he will give me leave to differ with him on this paragraph. If you divide this appropriation by twelve, then you have one-twelfth for each of the months of July, August, September, October, and November, in the year 1875. Now, if there is any period of the twelve months when the Indians could require less to induce them to be peaceable, it seems to me it is these very months, when a benign nature (as benign as they have it in that region) is smiling on everybody, when all the fruits of the earth, if there are, are ready for you, when the bitterness of cold is away, and when every means for people in every country that I know of getting on at the cheapest rate exists; so that if you divide it by twelve you will get a larger proportion than is necessary in the very months before we are required to meet again in December, than you will at any time in the year—

Mr. SARGENT. Will the Senator allow me a remark?

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator will pardon me until I finish my observation—so that the pinch will come, if it be any pinch at all, after the 1st day of December, 1875.

Then we shall be here, those of us who remain and shall live until that time. Congress will be here, whatever may become of persons, and Congress it must be assumed will be ready to do what the public good and humanity require. Now I will hear my friend from California.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator with his familiarity with appropriations knows that the deficiency bill is the last bill that Congress acts upon. It has not even yet been reported in the other House at this session, and here we are away along in February. The next will be the long session. At the last session it was in June before the deficiency bill passed. It was the last bill we passed. They will be through the severe months of the year without this relief and the Indians will be starving there, and any mischiefs from inadequate appropriations will already have happened.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very good. I am very glad the Senator has made that observation because to my mind it is so easy to answer. Then it appears we are remitted by this implied combination and force to next December before this supposed necessity is to arise. Very well; now the Senator says the deficiency bill does not get forward until the end of the session. Grant it; but if the public service and humanity require us in December to provide $200,000 or $500,000 for the Indians, does the Senator suppose that he cannot bring in a bill in December for a special appropriation, and does he suppose that Congress will not be ready to meet it in the spirit in which it is made?

Mr. SARGENT. I will say that, judging by the debate on this matter, I think not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator thinks not. Very well, then the Senator thinks or believes that Congress will not do what the public good and the interests of humanity require. If the Senator has that opinion of Congress, I think he ought to take some measures to try to reform it, and in some other way than this. If you cannot trust the Congress of December, then the Senator is perhaps quite right in supposing that he cannot trust the Congress of February, if this is February, and he had better give up this amendment.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not rise to continue the debate, but to ask that the five-minute rule may be enforced.

Mr. HAMLIN. Let us vote and stop talking.

Mr. WEST. I only wish to say one word with reference to the statement made by the Senator from Kansas that there were less than the number of Indians stated here to be on these reservations as reported by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. The Commissioner in his report, page 1, says there are nine thousand Indians, and on a subsequent page, page 106, he says there are seventy-eight hundred and twenty on the reservations. Then, with reference to the price of cattle there, let me tell my friend that the cattle there are all driven from Texas and are higher there a great deal than they are in Kansas. There is no place in the United States or any of the Territories of the United States where cattle are as high as they are in Arizona.

As for the proposition of the Senator from Vermont that the Indians will not be compelled by stress of weather to be fed in the fall of the year, let me tell him that there are no seasons down there affecting their subsistence at all. It is one uniform summer the whole twelve months round. His remarks originated perhaps from the cold climate of Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You are in quite a different climate. It is a universal summer in your country.

Mr. INGALLS. I wish to make one observation to the Senator from California. Like himself, I am here in the discharge of a sworn duty; and if upon any subject I speak with heat, it is because I feel indignation. I am not certain whether or not I understood him to say that he judged or supposed that the heat of my remarks on a former occasion might have been actuated by some other motive than a sense of duty. I trust before I sit down I shall hear him disclaim any such imputation.

Mr. SARGENT. I expressly stated that I did not make any such imputation, and the Senator will find it so recorded in my remarks.

Mr. INGALLS. I am very glad to hear the Senator say so.

Mr. HAGER. As I stated yesterday, I will vote against this increase of the appropriation to maintain the Indians on the reservations in Arizona and New Mexico. As I understand, that country is a barren waste of itself. It will not support the Indians, and, as a gentleman remarked to me, it would not support a duck, because it has neither grass nor water. These Indians have been in the habit of dwelling or living in the mountain fastnesses. They are now put upon this arid plain, and they are there confined by the soldiers of the United States. Necessarily they must be fed by the Government; but, as I understand, with all the appropriation that was made last year, they were not properly fed, and of course they break out from the reservations to obtain the necessities of life, and the result is that they are slaughtered, as I understand, by the soldiers.

Now as to the policy of having these reservations I am not disposed to discuss it. It is an experiment as I understand. I doubt myself whether it will be successful; but what I do complain of most is the manner in which this fund is managed and manipulated. It is intended for the benefit of the Indians. As I said yesterday, I rely upon the information that I obtained from one of the honorary commissioners, who are gentlemen above reproach, who were acting without salary as an advisory board. When they ascertained that it was impossible, as one of them told me, to effect any reform or to correct any existing abuses with regard to the administration of this Indian Department through the ramifications of agents over the country, they concluded that it was their duty to resign, inasmuch as they had nothing to do. In office they were functus officio, and in ability to do anything they became functus officio in fact.

With these facts before me I am not disposed to increase this fund beyond what is contained in the bill as it came to us from the House. I doubt myself whether the experiment will be a success. While I am as much disposed to go as far on humanitarian grounds as any one, I must be better satisfied than I am now that it is even a matter of humanity to vote this appropriation or rather to increase it, and for that reason I shall vote against the increase; but I am not disposed to disturb the amount that stands in the bill as it came to us from the House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. WEST.]

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator from Louisiana moved that amendment simply for the purpose of speaking.

Mr. WEST. That was all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator withdraw his amendment?

Mr. WEST. I withdraw it.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, the question under consideration has given me some little trouble. I have been accustomed to vote in such wise as to cut down appropriations to the lowest possible amount that I thought would suffice. I have very seldom voted for an increase of an appropriation, my belief being that the proper policy of the Government is to reduce expenditures instead of increasing taxation. It would require, therefore, very strong reasons to make me vote for an increase of an appropriation which has been made after full consideration by the House of Representatives. Then, on the other hand, I read in the remarks of the Senator of Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] on this subject that the Department recommends an appropriation of $750,000, and that "our committee believed that $500,000 was the very smallest amount with which the Department could possibly get along and carry out this policy"—what is called the peace policy.

Now, when the Department asks for $750,000, and our committee declare their opinion that half a million is the least possible amount with which the Government can get along without abandoning a policy that it does not propose to abandon, a Senator has some trouble in voting against the proposed increase, and the more so because we all know that these Indians are the most warlike and unruly upon this continent; that they have given us more trouble than any other Indians; and that Arizona especially has suffered more from Indian depredations and Indian murders than any other one of the Territories of the United States within the last five or six years. I remember the list sent us by the territorial Legislature, apparently compiled with care, of the murders committed by Indians in that Territory for two or three years, and I confess I was shocked at the length of the list. I cannot help remembering, too, that at the last session we made an appropriation to supply deficiencies of somewhere about $700,000. In other words, in order to preserve the peace, in order to feed these Indians who had been chastised by General Crook with great efficiency and compelled to go upon the reservations, the officers of the Government assumed the prodigious responsibility of involving the Government in a debt of $700,000. I do not like to encourage officers to do any such thing as that. I do not like to encourage officers to assume so great a responsibility as that of contracting debts on the part of the United States to an amount so prodigious. Therefore I am inclined to believe that experience will prove that the committee did right in saying that not less than half a million will suffice. But, on the other hand, it is possible that a less sum may do. I think there is great weight in the suggestion made by the Senator from Vermont, that if this sum shall prove to be insufficient the defect can be supplied by Congress in December next, that this sum will be sufficient for the time being. Experience will show us, and show us in ample time to correct any mistake we might make, whether a larger sum will be necessary. Under these circumstances I am inclined to believe that the committee is right in saying that this much will be needed. Yet as we can correct any mistake we may make at an early part of the next session of Congress, I, for one, shall vote against concurring in the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 29, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Boreman, Boutwell, Carpenter, Chandler, Cragin, Davis, Dorsey, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Howe, Jones, Kelly, Logan, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Pease, Ramsey, Sargent, Scott, Sprague, Stewart, West, and Windom—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Boggs, Cooper, Dennis, Eaton, Edmunds, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Johnston, McCreery, Merrimon, Norwood, Oglesby, Patterson, Pratt, Robertson, Saulsbury, Schurz, Stevenson, Stockton, Thurman, Wadleigh, Washburn, and Wright—28.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Brownlow, Cameron, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Harvey, Lewis, Ransom, Sherman, Spencer, and Tipton—16.

So the amendment was concurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next reserved amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 73, line 1792, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out "$35,000" and inserted "$40,000" as the appropriation for the civilization and subsistence of Indians on the Malheur reservation.

Mr. MITCHELL. I offer the following amendment to the amendment of the Committee: Strike out "$40,000" and insert "$60,000."

I will state that the estimate of the Department for this appropriation is $83,483. An appropriation has been made heretofore of about $35,000, and the deficiency is some $25,000. I propose to compromise by my amendment by inserting $60,000, which is not enough in the opinion of the Department by some $20,000. I hope the amendment will be adopted. The amendment was submitted, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DAVIS. I understand that the estimate of the Department was $40,000, and the committee gave the full amount of the estimate at the time they were considering the bill. There is a subsequent letter, however, from the Secretary of the Interior, which recommends an increase, but my impression is that the committee was of the opinion that $40,000 ought to supply the demands on us. I doubt very much whether it ought to be raised.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will simply say that every reason which has been alleged for an increase in the appropriation in respect to the Apaches exists in this case. This is the Malheur reservation, on which are gathered the Snakes and Bannacks and other hostile Indians who were kept at bay for some year or two by General Crook, and by the Government were finally collected together and placed upon this reservation. They are wild bands of Indians, hostile Indians, savages, and unless they are fed the result will be very disastrous to the people of that country.

I will state that last year, by reason of the appropriation running out and by reason of a failure on the part of the agents of the Government to provide them with food and clothing which they expected at the hands of the Government, there was an insurrection on the reservation, the agent was run off, and it was expected for some time that there would be a general massacre of the Government officers.

Now I hope that this amendment, which is as I say not within $33,000 of the amount recommended by the Department, will be allowed to be inserted.

Mr. DAVIS. There appears to be an error about the recommendation of the Department. I said that the estimate of the Department was $40,000. The Senator from Oregon has said that it was eighty-odd thousand dollars.

Mr. MITCHELL. I say that the original estimate, based of course upon the estimate first made when this reservation was established, was $40,000. But after investigation of the matter the Department has reconsidered that estimate and addressed a letter to the Speaker of the House of Representatives recommending that $35,000, the amount inserted by the Committee on Appropriations of the House, be stricken out and that the sum of $83,483 be inserted. The Commissioner uses this language:

Being satisfied that the amount embraced in the present Indian appropriation bill, as reported to the House, for the purpose above referred to will prove insufficient, I respectfully recommend that Congress be asked to amend the said bill as follows, namely: Strike out after the word "improvement," in line 1655, the words "thirty-five thousand" and insert in lieu thereof "eighty-three thousand four hundred and eighty-three."

Mr. DAVIS. I want to save my friend the trouble of reading that. I think if a portion of the letter is read it ought all to be read, so that the Senate may know why there is any change.

Mr. MITCHELL. Let it all be read, if the Senator desires. I send it to the desk to be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C., January 11, 1875.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a report, dated the 9th instant, of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, recommending that the Indian appropriation bill now pending before the House of Representatives be amended by striking out after the word "improvement," in line 1655, the words "thirty-five thousand" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "eighty-three thousand four hundred and eighty-three." This appropriation is needed for the civilization and subsistence of Indians on the Malheur reservation, Oregon.

A copy of a communication from Agent Parrish to Hon. J. H. MITCHELL, United States Senate, and of a letter of Senator MITCHELL, dated the 27th ultimo, together with the estimate of the agent therein referred to, are also herewith inclosed.

The recommendation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in the premises is approved, and the favorable consideration of the subject by Congress is respectfully requested.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

B. R. COWEN,
Acting Secretary.

The SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., January 9, 1875.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by reference from the Department, of a letter from Hon. J. H. MITCHELL, United States Senator, dated the 27th ultimo, in which he states that the amount ($40,000) embraced in the general estimate of appropriations for the Indian service during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, for civilization and subsistence of Indians on the Malheur reservation, Oregon, is in his judgment and in the judgment of Mr. Parrish, the agent in charge, wholly inadequate to meet the wants of that agency for the period indicated, and that the result of an insufficient appropriation can but result in a heavy deficiency at the end of the year. He also transmits a communication from Agent Parrish, dated December 6, 1874, including a copy of an estimate heretofore submitted to this office, calling for the sum of $83,483 for the civilization and subsistence of Indians collected on the said reservation during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and, with the remark that the appropriations heretofore made have been entirely inadequate, earnestly urges that a new estimate be submitted to Congress for said agency in accordance with the estimate above referred to and submitted by the said agent.

Adopting the views of Senator MITCHELL in the premises, and being satisfied that the amount embraced in the present Indian appropriation bill, as reported to the House, for the purpose above referred to, will prove insufficient, I respectfully recommend that Congress be asked to amend the said bill as follows, namely: Strike out, after the word "improvement," in line 1655, the words "thirty-five thousand," and insert in lieu thereof "eighty-three thousand four hundred and eighty-three."

The papers in the case are herewith returned, with advice that the deficiencies referred to in the Senator's letter have already been estimated for.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. R. CLUM,
Acting Commissioner.

Hon. SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

UNITED STATES SENATE CHAMBER,
Washington, December 27, 1874.

DEAR SIR: The Department estimate heretofore made for the Malheur Indians ($40,000) is, in my judgment and in the judgment of Mr. Parrish, the agent in charge, wholly inadequate to meet the wants of that agency for the next fiscal year, and the result of an insufficient appropriation can but result in a heavy deficiency at the end of the year, which is of course undesirable to the Department, the agent, and all concerned. I am just in receipt of a copy of estimates submitted by Mr. Parrish, which I herewith inclose, amounting in all for the next fiscal year to $88,483. The appropriations heretofore made for this agency have been entirely inadequate. I therefore earnestly urge that a new estimate be submitted to Congress for this agency, in accordance with the estimates submitted by Mr. Parrish, who is on the ground and is fully advised as to the necessities of the case. I also inclose Mr. Parrish's communication to me. I would be pleased to have all papers herewith submitted returned to me, with the answer of Department separately in reference to estimates for next fiscal year and to deficiencies for the past. An early answer is desirable.

Respectfully,

J. H. MITCHELL.

Hon. C. DELANO,
Secretary of the Interior.

MALHEUR INDIAN AGENCY, OREGON,
December 7, 1874.

SIR: I have this day mailed to the honorable Commissioner of Indian Affairs an estimate of funds required for the Indian service at this agency for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and also a list of outstanding debts against this agency, with the request that the amount be included in the deficiency bill.

I take the liberty of sending you a copy of the estimate, also list of outstanding debts, most respectfully soliciting your influence toward securing the amount estimated for, as well as having the amount of liabilities recognized and provided for.

This is a new agency; consequently our necessities are numerous. I have not estimated for one dollar more than is really needed to put us on a sound basis. The amounts carried out for the various articles have been calculated from extremely low figures in currency, and if I can secure this amount the coming year I shall be able to get things in good running order.

The Indians under my charge are wholly unused to labor of any description, and it will require a great amount of patience on my part to induce them to undertake any manual labor.

I hope that before another year shall have passed to be able to make a report of the condition of affairs at this agency which will be more than satisfactory to the Department.

My earnest desire to get this agency free from debt and to carry out the desires and expectations of the Department with regard to these Indians is my excuse for trespassing upon your valuable time.

Hoping that you will use your best endeavors toward accomplishing this result,

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

SAM. B. PARRISH.

Hon. J. H. MITCHELL,
Washington, District of Columbia.

Estimate of funds required for the Indian service at Malheur agency for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, by Sam. B. Parrish, United States Indian agent.

Objects for which funds are required.	Amount of estimate.	Objects for which funds on hand will be needed.	Currency.
For civilization and subsistence of Indians collected on Malheur Indian reservation, Oregon, for year ending June 30, 1876.		For eight hundred Indians.
Miscellaneous.		Flour for one year, 288,000 pounds, at 5 cents per pound	$14,400 00
For the purchase of goods, subsistence stores, &c., for the Indians collected on the Malheur reservation, Oregon, for instructing said Indians in agricultural and mechanical pursuits, providing employes, educating children, procuring medicines and medical attendance, and for such general beneficial objects as the condition and necessities of the Indians may demand	$83,483 00	Beef for one year, 360,000 pounds, at 7½ cents per pound	27,000 00
For pay of agent.		Sugar, tea, rice, beans, &c.	1,500 00
Pay of agent for one year, at $1,500 per annum	1,500 00	Medicines	500 00
For pay of interpreter.		Pay of the following employes, namely:
Pay of interpreter for one year, at $500 per annum	500 00	Commissary	1,200 00
For general incidental expenses.		Physician	1,200 00
Pay of traveling expenses of the agent and general incidental expenses of the agency for one year	3,000 00	Teacher	1,000 00
	88,483 00	Mail-carrier	1,200 00
		Carpenter	1,200 00
		Blacksmith	1,200 00
		Superintendent of farming	1,200 00
		Farmer	1,000 00
		For purchase of blankets and clothing	8,870 00
		For purchase of plows, horses, and oxen	880 00
		For the erection of a grist-mill	6,000 00
		For the purchase of lumber for houses, barn, fencing, &c., and shingles	10,133 00
		For miscellaneous purchases, such as hardware, paints, stationery, and all other necessary articles	5,000 00
			83,483 00

SAM. B. PARRISH,
United States Indian Agent.

Mr. DAVIS. It will be seen that the original estimate from the Department was $40,000 as I stated, and upon a letter written by the Senator from Oregon to the Department that estimate has been changed. Now, I think all the original information of the office must have been obtained when the agency called for but $40,000; and the parties submitting the increased estimates ought to inform us of all the facts as to the cost of supporting these Indians. I understand that probably this money is to be used for collecting or bringing together Indians or changing them in some way, which may not meet with the approbation of the Indians, and may lead to a much greater expense than the $80,000 now asked for. I believe it is a fact that some of the Indians are to be changed against their will, and we know from past experience how expensive such things can be in the future.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon has spoken all the time allowed him.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to amend by making the amount $70,000 instead of $60,000.

The Senator from West Virginia says that the original estimate in this case was $40,000 and that that estimate was changed upon a letter written by the Senator from Oregon, leading the Senate to infer that the Senator from Oregon of his own motion had undertaken to advise the Department of the Interior in reference to this matter and to suggest that there ought to be an increase. If the Senator had listened to the reading of the letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to the Secretary of the Interior, he would have found that my letter to the Department was simply referring to the Department a letter addressed to me by the agent in charge of these Indians. That is all there is of that.

Now, it is true that the original estimate was $40,000, but it is equally true that while the appropriation last year was $35,000, there was a deficiency of about $25,000; and when the attention of the Department was called to these facts and to the cost of keeping these Indians on the reservation, and the cost of beef, the cost of clothing, the cost of transportation to that reservation, situated as it is far out in the wilderness, a revision of the estimate was made and now they say that that sum is insufficient. Therefore the fact that the original estimate was $40,000 ought not to weigh, it appears to me, against the better judgment of the Department after they have been advised in the matter, after they have had all the facts laid before them.

The honorable Senator said that perhaps part of this $60,000 is intended for the removal of Indians, or something of that kind. Not a bit of it. The estimates of the agent are given seriatim. The items are given; the amounts are given. There is not a dollar of it to be applied in the removal of Indians. It is all to be applied for the civilization and subsistence of Indians collected on the Malheur Indian reservation, Oregon, for the year ending June 30, 1876.

Then it goes on to state the number of pounds of beef necessary to feed these Indians and the cost of getting beef at that reservation. It goes on to state the number of pounds of sugar and tea and rice and beans and medicines, the pay of the employes on that reservation, the purchase of blankets in order to clothe these Indians. This is the character of the subsistence that is to be furnished to these Indians.

Again, how many Indians are on this reservation? Between eight hundred and a thousand wild savage Indians, and as I said before, unless they are provided for, the result inevitably will be the massacre of the agents at that place and a general outbreak in Eastern Oregon, as we had year after year until these Indians were collected on this particular reservation. I hope, inasmuch as the amendment does not propose by $23,000 to appropriate the amount recommended by the Department, that at least this much will be allowed. I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not want to take any time, but I think the committee recommended all that they thought was necessary. They had the letter before them of the Department and they reported $40,000.

Mr. MITCHELL. I withdraw the last amendment I offered, and stand on the amendment increasing the amount to $60,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon moves to amend the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole by substituting $60,000 for the amount there proposed.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected, ayes 7, noes not counted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole in line 1792, striking out $35,000 and inserting $40,000 for the civilization and subsistence of Indians on the Malheur reservation.

The amendment was concurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next reserved amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. The next reserved amendment is on page 68. The Senate inserted, as in Committee of the Whole, the following clause:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to supply a deficiency in the proceeds of the lands in the Round Valley Indian reservation, applicable for the payment of the improvements of settlers on said reservation, appraised in accordance with the act of March 3, 1873, entitled "An act to restore a part of the Round Valley Indian reservation, in California, to the public lands, and for other purposes," and to liquidate such claims on said reservation as shall be found valid by virtue of pre-emption or homestead entry, $30,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This Round Valley question has been before the Senate nearly every year since I can remember this body, and so far I believe it has not been very successful. I should be glad to have the Senator in charge of this bill state to the Senate the precise grounds upon which we are asked to vote in favor of this amendment. If he will be good enough to give the Senate a condensed history of the Round Valley question, and why we are called upon to do such a thing as this, I shall be very much obliged to him.

Mr. WINDOM. With the consent of the Senator from Vermont I will yield to the Senator from California, who is familiar with this matter.

Mr. SARGENT. I send to the desk and ask to have read letters of the Secretary of the Interior and Commissioner of Indian Affairs on this subject.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C., January 18, 1875.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a report, dated the 16th instant, from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, together with an estimate of appropriation required for the Indian service in California in the sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to supply a deficiency in the proceeds of the sale of lands in the Round Valley Indian reservation, in California, applicable to the payment of settlers for improvements on said reservation, appraised in accordance with the act of March 3, 1873, entitled "An act to restore a part of the Round Valley Indian reservation, in California, to the public lands, and for other purposes," and to liquidate such claims on said reservation as shall be found valid by virtue of pre-emption or homestead entry.

The favorable consideration of Congress is respectfully invited to this subject.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. DELANO,
Secretary.

The SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., January 16, 1875.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to the following, namely:

By the act of Congress approved March 3, 1873, entitled "An act to restore a part of the Round Valley Indian reservation, in California, to the public lands, and for other purposes," (17 Statutes at Large, 633,) provision is made for the sale of the lands restored at not less than $1.25 per acre, cash, and that the proceeds, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used to pay for the improvements and claims of settlers residing within the limits of the new reservation created by said act and for improvements of Indians on the lands thereby restored to the public lands, after such improvements shall have been appraised and the appraisal approved. It is also provided that the Secretary of the Interior shall appoint three commissioners to make such appraisal, and that he "shall cause the same to be paid to such settlers or Indians out of the money hereinbefore reserved for such purpose," and further, that the settlers shall be required to remove from the new reservation "as soon as they shall be paid for or tendered the amount of the appraised value of their improvements."

The report and appraisal of the commissioners appointed under the provisions of the act in question were approved by the honorable Secretary of the Interior, under date of the 4th August last, and show the total amount awarded settlers to be $32,669.78. No report in regard to Indian improvements, as provided by the act, accompanies the appraisal, nor is it shown that any notice was taken of such improvements, or that any such improvements existed.

In addition to the sum of $32,669.78 due settlers for improvements, it is stated by the commissioners that the sum of $20,000 will be required to settle claims to the lands themselves which have been acquired by pre-emption, homestead, and purchase, making a total of $52,669.78. The amount now on the books of this office, realized from the sale of the restored lands and applicable to the payment of the awards made to settlers, is $15,920.33, and it is estimated that the total amount to be realized will not exceed $27,000, thus leaving a deficiency of $25,669.78 to be appropriated by Congress. In order to meet this deficiency, it was suggested by the commissioners of appraisal, consisting of Hon. J. P. C. SHANKS, Hon. B. R. COWEN, and Charles Marsh, that an appraisal be authorized of the lands restored to market, which were considered very valuable, and estimated by them to be worth $54,400.

In accordance with their recommendation a draught of a bill to so amend the act of March 3, 1873, as to authorize such appraisal, was submitted to the Department for the action of Congress January 7, 1874, but no favorable action appears to have been taken by that body.

In view of the foregoing, and in order that the settlers hereinbefore referred to may be paid the appraised value of their improvements and be required to remove from the reservation, I respectfully recommend that Congress be requested to appropriate the sum of $30,000, which amount, with so much of the proceeds of the sale of the lands herein referred to as may be necessary for the purpose, shall be used to pay for such improvements and the value of such claims as shall be found valid by virtue of pre-emption or homestead entry, as aforesaid.

An estimate of said appropriation is herewith submitted.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

EDWARD P. SMITH,
Commissioner.

The Hon. SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Estimate of appropriation required for the Indian service in California.

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary to supply a deficiency in the proceeds of the lands in the Round Valley Indian reservation, applicable for the payment of the improvements of settlers on said reservation, appraised in accordance with the act of March 3, 1873, entitled "An act to restore a part of the Round Valley Indian reservation, in California, to the public lands, and for other purposes," and to liquidate such claims on said reservation as shall be found valid by virtue of pre-emption or homestead entry, $30,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should be glad to hear the Senator from California explain this, as the gentleman in charge of the bill turns it over to him.

Mr. SARGENT. It is fully explained in this report, and more tersely than I can do it. This subject has been before Congress for a number of years. Prior to the last Congress there were unsettled boundaries as to reservation; there were difficulties between the Government and settlers which interfered with the usefulness of the reservation. Congress passed a law authorizing the appointment of three commissioners to go out and settle the boundaries of the reservation. In settling those boundaries, which they did according to their own judgment, one of them being the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, another a gentleman from this city, they cut off one end of the reservation and added on to the other end, thinking that by thus locating it it was better for the Indian service. I presume that it was; I am not familiar with the tract. But simply on the faith of their action, assuming that it was cut off, the land at one end was sold to settlers and they have paid the money to the Government. On the other end, where the Government took land, it was to pay the settlers for it out of the money thus received. The fund derived from the sale of the lands to the settlers on the one end is not sufficient to pay the money for the land which was taken from settlers on the other end, and this is to make up the deficiency.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask my friend from California where these settlers who were found to be within the boundaries of the reservation got their title?

Mr. SARGENT. I do not say they were within the boundaries of the reservation. I think that is a matter of extreme doubt.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where did they get their title, whether they were inside or outside the boundaries of the reservation?

Mr. SARGENT. Under the pre-emption laws and by twenty years' residence and cultivation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Senator mean to say that these settlers were pre-emption settlers?

Mr. SARGENT. I mean to say they were pre-emption settlers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator states what the report does not.

Mr. SARGENT. I state that they were pre-emption settlers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How does the Senator know it?

Mr. SARGENT. By the facts laid before Congress and considered when the former bill was passed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Can the Senator give us any reference to where that appears?

Mr. SARGENT. The report does say so, and the amendment refers to pre-emption settlers:

And to liquidate such claims on said reservation as shall be found valid by virtue of pre-emption or homestead entry.

The legislation of the last Congress, however, provided that to the extent that settlers had possessio pedis, where they had improved and cultivated and inclosed, should be taken as the measure of their boundaries, not to exceed a certain amount, which I think was more than one hundred and sixty acres. In that sense only, and for those persons limited by that description, it was strictly under the homestead and pre-emption laws.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand the fact to be, but I may be mistaken, and I shall be glad to have the documents to convince me of it if I am, that these settlers were not pre-emption settlers; that they were not homestead settlers; that they were squatters in the very strongest sense of the term.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator will allow me to say that I do not know the distinction in my State between a settler and a squatter. A man who goes upon unsurveyed public lands, by the laws of the United States is a pre-emption settler, but his right of course is inchoate until after the land is subdivided. We know nothing about squatters in my State, and the Senator will have to use language that we understand. I understand the policy of the law to be to encourage settlers to go on the public domain, surveyed and unsurveyed; and so far as my State is concerned we have nothing applying to that class of people which would make an opprobrious term proper in reference to them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know that "squatter" is an opprobrious term. If it is I withdraw it, because I do not wish in this Chamber to use any opprobrious terms to anybody. Not using it in an opprobrious sense, I repeat that, according to the information I have on examining these statutes, &c., these people were settled upon that land without any lawful authority, and the United States had an absolute right under many decisions of the Supreme Court to make an Indian reservation there wherever they liked, and these settlers went upon the land knowing that law.

When the Senator speaks of the policy of the law as distinguished from the law itself, I must say that he uses language which, if I am not able to say I do not understand it, I say as far as I do understand it is altogether inadmissible. If there is any value in having a Government at all, that value is in having a law instead of a policy floating about outside of the law. The question really comes down to this, if I am correctly informed about the statement of the law and these reports, and if I am not I shall be very glad to be corrected by the documents, because I do not wish to do anybody an injustice: These settlers, as they are called, were people who had no right to resist the authority of the United States in laying down the boundaries of this Indian reservation; they had no claim upon the United States if they were expelled from it; and when they went there and settled they took their chances of that event. Then it comes to this: We are to pay out of the Treasury of the United States people who are intruders upon the public lands which turn out by a settlement of the boundary to be within the proper limits of an Indian reservation. If you once adopt that policy, if I may borrow a phrase from my distinguished friend, the amount of taxes you will have to impose will be altogether more considerable than those with which we are now threatened.

Now let us see exactly what this case is. Here is the statute of 1873, which provides for this Round Valley reservation. In order to do generous acts toward the people who were upon it the act provided:

That the improvements owned by persons on the lands hereby restored before the passage of this act shall be the sole property of such persons, who shall have priority of right to purchase not exceeding three hundred and twenty acres of land in adjacent quarter-sections, containing and adjoining said improvements; and all said lands shall be sold and disposed of for cash only, the same to be done through the local land office within the jurisdiction of which these lands are situated: And provided further, That the proceeds of the sale of the lands hereby restored—

And lest I should be unable to read this through before my time is out I move to postpone the bill indefinitely.

Mr. HAGER. The bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAGER. The whole bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to postpone the bill indefinitely.

That the proceeds of the sale of the lands hereby restored, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used to pay for the improvements and claims of settlers now residing within the limits of the new reservation created under this act, and for improvements of Indians on lands hereby restored to the public lands, after such improvements shall have been appraised and the appraisal approved, as hereinafter provided.

Now what is hereinafter mentioned?

And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to appoint three commissioners, who shall proceed to make an examination of the country in that locality and report their views in regard to where the northern line of this reservation should be located; they shall also make an appraisal of all improvements of white persons north of said southern boundary of the reservation—

Which they were not authorized to locate in respect of changing it, but only to find out where it was—as established by this section of this act, within the limits proposed by them for a reservation, and of all Indians south of said line, and report the same to the Secretary of the Interior, who shall cause the same to be paid to such settlers or Indians out of the money hereinbefore reserved for such purpose.

That is to say, as far as one hand could be made to wash the other, these intruders upon the public lands should have the benefit of it. There was no undertaking on the part of Congress to pay intruders upon these lands who happened to be moved by the settlement of this reservation beyond what the amount of money to be derived from the performance would amount to that should be given to them. Now, we have the bald and naked proposition that the Treasury of the United States is to be saddled, as of right, as a demand which we are bound to meet, with the payment of the claims of squatters upon an Indian reservation, because when you settled the boundaries it turned out that it had no right to be there. If the Senate is ready to go into that species of appropriation, very well. If it is not, then it ought to vote against this amendment. I withdraw the motion to indefinitely postpone.

Mr. SARGENT. The act which the Senator cites refers to the boundaries of the new reservation to be established; the new reservation implied something different from the old reservation; and that new reservation was moved upon land which was occupied by the homes of people who had lived there for twenty years. The spirit of the law of the last Congress was perfectly just, more just than the Senator's comment upon it. So far as this proposition is concerned, I do not care for it one straw. The people upon one end of the reservation have bought their lands from the Government and have paid for them, and have received or will receive their patents. I am satisfied with that. Upon the other end of the new reservation the people are in possession and are equitably entitled to possession, because they never did enter upon a Government reservation; but when the Government thought it could get a better chance by sliding over on to that, it has done so. They are in possession of their lands, and by the very act which the Senator has cited it is provided that until the money is paid to them or tendered to them they shall remain in possession. The fund which was contemplated by that statute is not sufficient to pay them or make this tender.

It is a matter of perfect indifference to them, and I must say it is of perfect indifference to me, except so far as the interests of the Government are concerned, whether the money is paid or tendered to them or not. If not, they remain in the homes, which are very pleasant to them, which they did not desire to leave, but which the Congress of the United States declared should be taken away from them, provided a certain amount, which was entirely inadequate to the value of their possessions, was paid or tendered to them. So I do not care, as I said before, whether the amendment is adopted or not, but in the interest of the Government believing that this would be a better reservation, that it was better for the Indian service that this small amount of $30,000 had better be appropriated in order to settle this claim, extinguish the rights of these persons, and give the Government more elbow room in dealing with the Indians on that reservation.

I did not even care to press for the yeas and nays on the proposition.

If the Senator from Vermont insists that this shall not be done and is satisfied with his reasoning, I shall take no further issue with him for the reason I have stated.

Mr. HAGER. This reservation is in the northern part of the State of California, and I must confess that I am not very familiar with it or with the question that is before the Senate upon this amendment. All I know is that the Representative from that section of the State in the other end of the Capitol, who resides there, has told me that the provision ought not to pass, he being familiar with it. I am inclined to rely upon his representations. He told me that he would send some documents, if he could get hold of them—they were at his room—that I might offer here in the Senate. I do not undertake to express any opinion of my own, but from what he said to me I was impressed, and will try to follow his recommendation and vote against the appropriation, though perhaps I may do injustice by doing so. From the best information I can obtain I am inclined to vote that way. I am satisfied that there is something wrong in that section of the State in regard to this reservation. The Representative says that it is a wrong on the part of the officers of the Government. If what he states be true, the local officer there is using it as a sheep ranch for his own benefit; but how that is I would not undertake to state. I merely give it as information obtained from the Representative from that section who resides there. I would not state it upon my own information to the Senate.

Mr. SARGENT. The representations of Mr. LUTTRELL, I think, spring from the fact that the settlers to whom this money is to be paid do not want to leave this place. They desire to remain there. They, I presume, do not want any appropriation made. I think it is the interest of the Government that it should be made. The sheep-ranch proposition to which my colleague refers was rejected by the Committee on Indian Affairs. It was embraced in another bill, which was indefinitely postponed a month ago on my recommendation that that should be done. This is not the sheep-ranch proposition, but that was another bill entirely, and I was opposed to it. I think I understand this Round Valley matter. I think I understand that it is the interest of the Government that this appropriation should be made, and for that reason I have urged it; but as I said before the settlers there do not want to receive this money. They prefer to keep the land, and they are licensed by the law of the last Congress to keep the land until this money is paid to them or tendered, and as to remain will be satisfactory to them, if serious objection is made, I will not insist on pressing the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The question is on concurring in the amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All the reserved amendments have been acted on.

Mr. STEWART. I offer the following amendment: On page 70 strike out lines 1702 to 1707 and insert:

For the general incidental expenses of the Pi-Ute reservation in Southeastern Nevada, presents of goods, agricultural implements, and other useful articles, and to assist them to sustain themselves in permanent abodes by the pursuits of civilized life, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $20,000, $10,000 of which amount shall be available from the passage of this act for the remainder of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875; and the Pi-Ute reservation in Southeastern Nevada is hereby reduced to one thousand acres, to be selected by the agent, A. J. Barnes, in a compact body; and when such selection shall have been made he shall report the same to the Secretary of the Interior, and the remaining portion of said reservation, after said selection shall have been made, shall be and remain a part of the public domain, subject to the laws of the United States in the same manner as it would have been if no reservation had ever been made: Provided, That the claim of no settler shall be included in the reservation to be selected under the provisions of this act.

For the general incidental expenditures of the Walker River and Pyramid Lake reservations in Nevada, presents of goods, agricultural implements, and other useful articles, and to assist them to sustain themselves in permanent abodes by the pursuits of civilized life, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $15,000.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask the Senator from Nevada if that has been considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs and recommended by them?

Mr. STEWART. I do not know to what extent they have considered it. I believe they are for it.

Mr. WINDOM. I did not ask that question to interpose a technical objection; but if they have not examined it I want to raise the point of order. If they have examined it, although they may not have formally recommended it, I do not.

Mr. STEWART. I cannot speak for them. I wish they would speak for themselves.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota raise any point of order?

Mr. WINDOM. I rose to ask the question first before making the point.

Mr. STEWART. I believe the committee are in favor of it.

Mr. ALLISON. I think a majority of the Committee on Indian Affairs believe this proposition ought to pass.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I should like to make one inquiry. I observe that the amendment proposes to limit a certain reservation to a thousand acres. What is the present reservation in size?

Mr. STEWART. It is seventy miles by fifty. If the Senate will indulge me for five minutes I will make a statement.

Mr. WINDOM. I shall insist on the rule being complied with, the debate is running so long, but I will not make the point now.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The right to object is reserved.

Mr. STEWART. Three years ago the Department made an order withdrawing the southern part of the State of Nevada as a reservation. It included several mining districts and several little towns, and it was a portion of Nevada that extended down to the Colorado River. It is not very much inhabited now, but there is a large amount of property within the reservation. There are on it, as in various places in Nevada, a few Indians; probably five or six hundred Indians living by the springs of water and little streams.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Allow me to inquire whether this reservation is by treaty?

Mr. STEWART. No; by an order of the Department simply, and I will give the exact history of it. After this occurred the agent suggested that there could be a great enterprise of getting emigration to carry on mining and benefit that country very much. I told Mr. Ingalls that if that was the object, if anything could be done for these poor peaceable Indians who are inclined to work if they have the opportunity, I would help to take measures to secure a farm. I inferred that he wanted only a farm for them, and that would be sufficient. Mr. Ingalls differed with me. I went to the Department and found they differed, relying on Mr. Ingalls's report. I then came to the Senate and offered an amendment which finally became a law providing for inspectors with a view of getting a report from them. My testimony was not good; the testimony of the people of Nevada was not good. They were represented as being desirous of killing Indians, &c.; but there is no people as kind to the Indians, I undertake to say, as the people of Nevada, and there is no place where the Indians have made as much progress as they have there. Our people employ them, and they are really making some progress in learning to live and take care of themselves. Notwithstanding all that, I had no influence in the matter.

After that provision became a law I called on the President and told him I was very anxious to have the matter investigated. He assured me it should be investigated and he would appoint men who would attend to it. He made the appointment, and I came here last winter supposing we should have some facts in regard to the reservation. I found a report confirming Mr. Ingalls's view right through and through. I was very much astonished at this report, the person making it being a sensible man. I inquired and found that the man who was the inspector and had made the report had never been there. He had started across on the railroad and stopped at Salt Lake, saw Mr. Ingalls there, and he and Mr. Ingalls made up the report without having seen the reservation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is this amendment recommended by the Department of the Interior?

Mr. STEWART. I think they are now in favor of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Have we any evidence that it is recommended?

Mr. STEWART. I will tell the whole story, and the Senate can judge. All I know about this transaction I will state. I offered a resolution to inquire whether this man had been there, and they reported that he had not been there. In the mean time I was receiving, and so was my colleague, letters from the people there complaining of the whole proceeding, complaining of this immense reservation taking in mines, &c., complaining of being compelled to sell out their homes. On the other hand it was proposed by the Department to make an appropriation to buy off the inhabitants; $40,000 was proposed, but it would have taken several hundred thousand dollars, as I was well aware, to compensate the people before you could drive them off. They were protesting against this, but it was being pressed. My colleague and myself opposed an appropriation on this grand scale for such a purpose. I called on the President and told him about it. His language was, "You have sore grievances, and we will try to redress them." He said he would have the thing investigated. I told him what I wanted was to investigate whether this was a reasonable proposition, and he said it should be done. The Secretary of the Interior then invited my colleague and myself to a conference about the matter, and we told him that all we wanted was to have somebody go there who would make an investigation and see if the southern part of the State ought to be set apart for this purpose, or whether we should take the sensible course, as we believed, of having a farm set apart with a reasonable appropriation and try to do some good for the Indians, and let the matter go on without this agitation. He said most certainly he would do it. Said he, "I will appoint men of undoubted character." Said he, "Mr. Vandever, of Iowa, is a good man. He belongs to one denomination, Mr. O'Conner, of New York, belongs to another, and you can ask the delegation from these States whether they will be satisfactory."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. STEWART. I ask for a few minutes more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It can be given by unanimous consent only. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. STEWART. I spoke to the delegation, and they were certainly most highly recommended. Those gentlemen called on me and had a talk about it. Then by appointment we met the Secretary of the Interior and said he, "I want you to state the instructions you want, the facts you want to get by this investigation." My colleague and myself stated what we wanted to ascertain by the investigation. That was taken down and the instructions prepared. I wrote, and I think my colleague and myself wrote jointly, to the people there that this matter was to be investigated, that sensible men, men of the world, who had nothing to do with reservation schemes themselves, were going to go there and inquire into the particulars, and that the Department would take special pains to have the facts laid before Congress at the next session, and then the whole matter could be adjusted and the debts that had been contracted by Ingalls could be paid up and the thing would start upon a reasonable basis, such as would be satisfactory to sensible men.

I wrote a great many of those letters. When I came back here a few days ago I had a large number of letters from there stating that nobody had been there to make the investigation and that the original appropriation was still being urged. I found out that there was nobody who had made any investigation. All we had was the report of Mr. Ingalls, the same Indian agent, and on inquiry he had not been there at all himself. He had been removed on the representation of my colleague and myself because of some very crooked transactions of his, and he had been promoted to another place, but he had not been out there to Nevada at all, and yet here comes a report stating how things were going on there by a man who was here in the city. No other facts were laid before the committee. The chairman of the committee spoke to my colleague and myself and asked us to arrange the matter if we could. There was a new agent; my colleague said he knew where he was, and if I would call at his house we would send for him and see if anything could be done. I called there and the agent, Mr. Barnes, came; he appears to be a very sensible man.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's extension of time has expired.

Mr. STEWART. I am almost done.

Mr. WINDOM. Does the Senator—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator from Nevada proceeding? The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEWART. I only want to state how this amendment came. I told him in order that he might go there on a safe basis first to ascertain the indebtedness and get at the vouchers. I had written to those people that they must bring affidavits with their claims and have them in detail before I would consent to pay them. We did look them up and spent a day or two getting up these vouchers of indebtedness so that he could go there with safety without going there owing everybody. I had him then make an estimate of what it would take to support a farm. He made the estimate $24,000 and cut it down to $20,000. I think $20,000 this year and $10,000 hereafter will be all that is necessary.

Then we discussed the quantity of land. I asked him how much land he could get there and not take any off settlers and how much had been cultivated. Three or four hundred acres had been cultivated, he said. I then asked how much could be cultivated by all the Indians with a reasonable appropriation. He thought it would be doing pretty well to cultivate five or six hundred acres. I asked him if he could select a farm of a thousand acres and not take in any settlers. He thought he could. He thought that would be sufficient, and so I thought. So we limited the amount to a thousand acres, and provided for $20,000 to start the farm. We have nothing to start it with yet—nothing there but debts. That is the only legacy he will have. After the first year I think $10,000 will carry it on.

Then the other branch of the amendment is $15,000 for the western part of the State, two reservations there, or $7,500 each for these reservations. I think these reservations will be all that Nevada will require. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. WINDOM. I think this amendment was clearly subject to a point of order; but I did not make it, because I desired that the Senator from Nevada should have an opportunity briefly to state his case to the Senate. As he has stated it, it seems to me very clearly that it is a case which ought to be investigated by a committee; that the open Senate is no place to investigate it. Now, having given the Senator a full opportunity to explain it and not attempting to answer at all or to express any opinion whatever in reference to its merits, I move to lay it on the table in order to bring the Senate to a test-vote on the question.

Mr. STEWART. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to reserve any points of order about this amendment subject to this vote.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 23, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Boreman, Boutwell, Cameron, Clayton, Cragin, Dorsey, Edmunds, Ferry of Michigan, Gilbert, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Ingalls, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Pease, Pratt, Ramsey, Robertson, Sherman, Sprague, Washburn, Windom, and Wright—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Bogz, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton of Maryland, Hitchcock, Johnston, Jones, Kelly, Lewis, McCreery, Merrimon, Mitchell, Norwood, Oglesby, Sargent, Stevenson, Stewart, Stockton, and Tipton—24.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Brownlow, Carpenter, Chandler, Conkling, Conover, Eaton, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Flanagan, Hager, Harvey, Howe, Logan, Morton, Patterson, Ransom, Saulsbury, Schurz, Scott, Spencer, Thurman, Wadleigh, and West—26.

So the amendment was not laid on the table.

Mr. WINDOM. If the vote can be taken without any more debate I will not raise the point of order, but if it gives rise to debate I shall.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I raise the point of order if the Senator in charge of the bill does not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont will state his point of order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order that this is a violation of the thirtieth rule, in that it proposes new items of appropriation not reported from any committee and not recommended by any head of a Department.

Mr. STEWART. I beg pardon; that is not the fact. It is recommended by the Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask to have the recommendation read. Let us hear what it is.

Mr. STEWART. I have not got it at hand. The chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs has it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have it produced.

Mr. STEWART. I state the fact.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We will take the paper, not the fact. We must have the evidence.

Mr. STEWART. I undertake to state that it is the fact that $50,000 is recommended. I ask any member of the Committee on Indian Affairs who are here if that is not the case? I now have the recommendation. The Clerk can read the recommendation.

The Secretary read as follows from the Book of Estimates:

Incidental expenses of Indian service in Nevada:

General incidental expenses of the Indian service in Nevada: Presents of goods, agricultural implements, and other useful articles, and to assist them to locate in permanent abodes, and to sustain themselves by the pursuits of civilized life, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $50,000.

Mr. STEWART. There are two agencies in Nevada and the appropriations have been made for the two agencies in gross. This is one agency, and there is another agency with two reservations in the western part of the State.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I ask the Secretary to read this amendment that we may see what it has to do with this estimate.

The Secretary read the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have made the point of order which I ask the Chair to decide, that this amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada is not in pursuance of any estimate of a head of a Department and that the estimate he has read has nothing to do with it either by name or in any other way, and that it is not reported from any committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont raises a point of order. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to call on some member of the Committee on Indian Affairs to ask him a question or two about this thing.

Mr. SPRAGUE. It is decided against you.

Mr. STEWART. Is it decided against me? Then I appeal from the decision. Is there a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs in the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on ordering the amendments to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. STEWART. I beg pardon; I have appealed from the decision of the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. WINDOM. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. STEWART. You have not got the floor to do that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is not debatable. It is moved that the appeal lie on the table.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs if this recommendation of $50,000 by the Department for the Indian service in Nevada does not include this agency as well as the other?

Mr. ALLISON. It covered the whole Indian service in Nevada, including this agency.

Mr. STEWART. Then as I understand the chairman there was a recommendation for an appropriation for this agency.

Mr. ALLISON. There was a recommendation for the general Indian service in Nevada, which of course included this agency.

Mr. STEWART. There were two agencies in it. I submit that that comes within the rule, that it is recommended by a Department, so far as the appropriation goes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota insist on his motion to lay on the table?

Mr. WINDOM. I do.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the appeal lie on the table.

Mr. STEWART. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MERRIMON. I beg to inquire what was the ruling of the Chair from which the Senator from Nevada appealed?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The ruling of the Chair was that the amendment was not in order. The motion is to lay the appeal from that decision on the table.

Mr. ALCORN. To sustain the Chair is to vote "yea," as I understand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To lay the appeal on the table.

The yeas and nays were taken; and resulted—yeas 42, nays 3; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Bogz, Boutwell, Cameron, Chandler, Clayton, Conover, Cooper, Cragin, Eaton, Edmunds, Ferry of Michigan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Ingalls, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Pease, Pratt, Ramsey, Ransom, Robertson, Schurz, Sherman, Sprague, Stevenson, Washburn, West, Windom, and Wright—42.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Sargent, and Stewart—3.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Boreman, Brownlow, Carpenter, Conkling, Davis, Dennis, Dorsey, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Flanagan, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Jones, Lewis, Logan, Morton, Norwood, Oglesby, Patterson, Saulsbury, Scott, Spencer, Stockton, Thurman, Tipton, and Wadleigh—28.

So the motion was agreed to.

[Two messages were received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, communicating to the Senate extracts from the Journal of the House.]

Mr. BOGY. I have some amendments to offer to the bill which were not considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Is there any amendment pending?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri proposes to offer an amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If there is no amendment pending, I hope we shall have the question on the third reading.

Mr. BOGY. I move to strike out the appropriation for three Indian inspectors from line 146 to line 152. I do not offer this amendment because I am captious, but I offer it because I think these inspectors are not at all necessary. They are of modern growth. I never could see any utility in these inspectors.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Let the amendment be reported from the desk.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out line 146 to line 152, as follows:

For pay of three Indian inspectors, at $3,000 each, $9,000: Provided, That after the commencement of the next fiscal year there shall be but three inspectors; and the provision of law requiring that each agency shall be visited and examined by one or more of the inspectors at least twice in each year is hereby repealed.

Mr. BOGY. I hold that these inspectors are entirely useless, that this is an unnecessary expense. There are six inspectors, and why only three should be mentioned in this bill and three others not provided for I do not know, but I do know that no good results from this inspection. It is a very expensive undertaking. These inspectors travel from one end of the country to the other and obtain mileage. They go into every State and Territory where there are Indians—to California, to Oregon, and to Washington Territory, as I know some did last summer. I should like any Senator to inform me what good has ever resulted from this inspection. We are providing for a large number of officers, from the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs down to agents and sub-agents to look after the Indians. I hold that these inspectors are worse than useless; they are an injury; they do no sort of benefit whatever. I therefore move that the appropriation for three inspectors be stricken out. It is my intention if this motion should prevail to offer at an early day a separate bill to do away with the other three inspectors. We have, in addition to three inspectors, peace commissioners, whose duties are very much the same as those of inspectors. It is a multiplication of officers without any benefit whatever. I therefore hope that my motion will prevail.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. There is no end whatever to an appropriation bill if every Senator feels at liberty to indulge his whims or fancies in regard to what the public service ought to be. This is a branch of the public service and it is here provided for. That is all we have done. There is no end to this sort of thing if the Senate indulge in it. I move to lay the amendment of the Senator from Missouri on the table.

Mr. BOGY. I say there is an end—

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will not give way. My motion is to lay the amendment on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is moved to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. BOGY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 28, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Boutwell, Cameron, Chandler, Conover, Dorsey, Edmunds, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Hamilton of Texas, Harvey, Jones, Logan, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Pease, Ramsey, Sargent, Sherman, Sprague, Washburn, West, Windom, and Wright—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Boggy, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hitchcock, Kelly, Lewis, McCreery, Merriam, Norwood, Robertson, Stevenson, Stewart, Stockton, and Tipton—21.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Boreman, Brownlow, Carpenter, Clayton, Conkling, Cragin, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Hamlin, Howe, Ingalls, Johnston, Morton, Oglesby, Patterson, Pratt, Ransom, Sausbury, Schurz, Scott, Spencer, Thurman, and Wadleigh—24.

So the motion was agreed to.

DEATH OF HON. SAMUEL F. HERSEY.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, communicated to the Senate intelligence of the death of Hon. SAMUEL F. HERSEY, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Maine, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

Mr. HAMLIN. I rise for the purpose of asking the Senate to consider the resolutions just communicated from the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions of the House of Representatives, as follows:

Resolved, That this House has heard with deep regret of the death of Hon. SAMUEL F. HERSEY, late a member of this House from the State of Maine.

Resolved, That as a testimony of respect for the memory of the deceased, the officers and members of this House will wear the usual badge of mourning for the space of thirty days.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted by the Clerk to the family of the deceased.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, the resolutions which have just been read, informing the Senate of the decease of my colleague in the House, furnish another admonition to us all of the frailty of human existence. Another seat has been made vacant in the Halls of Congress. Its warning may, as it should, subserve a useful purpose. The event, though not unexpected, brings to myself a sorrow that I cannot express. The deceased was my friend. In all the relations and vicissitudes of life, in all its changing scenes, from youth to manhood, from manhood to mature age, and for more than half the period of life allotted to man, we were knit together in an unceasing and unbroken friendship. He was a friend who could "bear a friend's infirmities." How impressively am I reminded, as it becomes my sad duty to pay an earnest and truthful tribute to his memory and his worth, that under the decrees of an inscrutable Providence he might well have been spared to perform a like service to mine.

General HERSEY came to this city at the commencement of the present Congress to discharge the duties which had been imposed upon him by a generous and confiding constituency. He was then in feeble health; but having been possessed of great physical power, it was the hope and belief of himself and friends that a more genial climate than his home afforded would restore him to health.

In that hope all have been disappointed. Failing health, however, compelled him, much against his will, to withdraw from active participation in his official duties, and to seek the best medical advice that could be afforded in a neighboring city. From thence he repaired to his own home in an apparently improved and improving condition, giving to his friends a renewed hope of his permanent recovery. This hope was strengthened by his own faith, which impressed itself upon all around him, giving assurance even to the despondent. Indeed, his own belief in his final and full recovery was marvelous, and he held it with unsubdued courage to the last. He endured his sufferings and sickness with remarkable fortitude and cheerfulness. From their commencement to their close he murmured not. When absent from home all that kindness and attention could do to alleviate his condition was done. But to me, and I may say to all my colleagues, it is a matter of consolation to know that friends and home and wife and children all contributed to cheer and mitigate his pain and sufferings in the last days and hours of his life. There is no place to those who suffer like home; no hand to minister, no voice to cheer like that of an affectionate wife. Stricken with a disease which baffled all medical skill and defied the affectionate care of wife and friends, on the 3d of the present month, without a struggle, his spirit took its flight to "the better land;" and all of him that was mortal reposes to-day in the soil of his native State.

"Virtue alone has majesty in death."

General HERSEY was a native of the State of Maine, to the manor born. He was born in the town of Sumner, county of Oxford, in the month of April, 1812. At his decease he was nearly sixty-three years of age. His early years, like those of most young men of that time, were devoted to agricultural pursuits upon his father's farm, where those habits of industry were established which marked his future life and to which he was indebted for his great success. He was studious in his habits, and availed himself of the common school and academy, in which he acquired a good, substantial English education. Ambitious for a broader field than the farm afforded, and at a time near his majority, he entered the counting-room to prepare and fit himself for mercantile and business pursuits, in which he subsequently became distinguished. Several years of his life were devoted to merchandising; and afterward extending his business to the manufacture and sale of lumber in his own and some of the Northwestern States, he became one of the most extensive and successful lumbermen of the country.

He was a republican in principle, understanding fully the wants of the country and the duties of the hour. He was no bigot, but conceded to others the rights of opinion which he so firmly maintained for himself. From the formation of the republican party until the time of his death he gave to its support a mature judgment and an energy of purpose and personal efforts which made him a power in that organization. He loved his whole country, and through all the dark and trying hours of the war, when it trembled in the balance, he contributed to it his earnest and efficient support, and his eldest son did gallant service in the Army.

He has been prominent in the administration of the affairs of the State; and he was an honor to his State, as his State had honored him.

In the years 1842, 1857, and 1858 he was a member of the house of representatives of the State; and in the years 1867 and 1869 he served in the State senate. In 1852 and 1853 he was a member of the executive council. In 1870 he was induced by his friends to be a candidate for the republican nomination for governor and came within a very few votes of receiving the nomination. In 1872 he was nominated for Congress in the fourth district and elected by over five thousand majority; and was re-elected to the Forty-fourth Congress at the annual election in September last. Besides these he held other important political and public trusts. The duties devolved upon him in all these varied positions were discharged with ability, fidelity, and integrity. That speaks his own best eulogy.

General HERSEY was an honest man—"God's noblest work." He was a man of unsullied and spotless integrity; peerless in his purity. In the counting-room or on the public mart his word was the equivalent of his bond. He was a man of public enterprise, and entered with zeal into every measure which would elevate the character of his State or city or promote the welfare of the people however humble. He was benevolent and charitable, as the poor who were the recipients of his bounty can attest. While his contributions to all of our charitable institutions were of a generous character, many were the charities he bestowed unseen and unknown by the public. He was an earnest friend of the cause of education; has contributed liberally to institutions of learning, and has left large bequests for its future aid and support. He was an earnest worker in the church of which he was a member. How much he contributed, how invaluable were his services, how constant he was in the discharge of all his varied duties, the church itself can best know. But that his services were invaluable, that his duties were well performed, and that his contributions were of the most liberal character, even those not closely associated with him are well informed. How he will be missed and mourned within that circle!

He was a Christian gentleman, and his daily life adorned his profession. He was best loved by those who knew him best. His loss will be sincerely felt and mourned by all classes of the community in which he lived, from the highest to the most humble. I mourn the loss of a sincere friend. The State is bereft of one of her distinguished sons; his constituents are deprived of the valuable and efficient services of an able Representative. In the home circle, as husband and father, he was genial, kind, and affectionate. He strove to make and did make home what it should be—the most endearing spot on earth. A widowed wife and children weep in a home made desolate for the irreparable loss of a kind husband and an affectionate father; but into that mourning circle it is not my province to enter. Time, "with healing in its wings," will assuage their grief, and their reliance must be on "Him who doeth all things well."

The House has paid a tribute to his worth and have manifested their appreciation of the man in their resolutions which have been communicated to the Senate. I ask the Senate to join with the House in an expression of respect for the deceased and of sympathy for the surviving relatives by adopting the resolutions which I now send to the Chair.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate receives with sincere regret the announcement of the death of Hon. SAMUEL F. HERSEY, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Maine, and tenders to the relatives of the deceased the assurance of their sympathy with them under the bereavement they have been called to sustain.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to transmit to the family of Mr. HERSEY a certified copy of the foregoing resolution.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Mr. President, the bereavement which arrests the proceedings of the Senate touches so many hearts with tenderest sorrow in the State that honors me with its confidence, and withal sunders ties of friendly and official relations, that I trust to be indulged in adding a few words to what has already been so feelingly and appropriately said.

The claims of Mr. HERSEY upon our respect spring from an unsullied character, from his personal virtues and public services. By the inherent energies and fidelity of his nature, unaided by adventitious supports, he had acquired affluence in private affairs, had often been associated in the councils of his State, and had at length entered those of the nation, alas! unhappily, soon to fall under the heavy hand of disease, which ere long was to remove him hence.

His was an active and useful life in the departments of practical duty and endeavor, whereby society is advanced through a community of interests, the general welfare, the highest good of the greatest number.

He was ever the sagacious, upright, eminently successful man of business, of generous impulses, of a truly catholic spirit, charitable, liberal, and humane, whose daily life was without reproach, and was an example to all. He has sprung from among the people in the common walks of life, was by the simplicity of his tastes, the habits formed in pursuits intimately connected with their interests, and by his truly democratic intentions always in deepest sympathy with them, and was therefore fitly and not infrequently their trusted Representative.

The memory of Mr. HERSEY will be cherished by the people of Maine as among the public men who had rendered valuable public service in its councils, who in private life was faithful to every duty, to the obligations of friendship, and the claims of good neighborhood.

Mr. President, I second the resolutions offered by my colleague.

The resolutions were adopted unanimously.

DEATH OF HON. JOHN B. RICE.

Mr. OGLESBY. I ask for the reading of the House resolutions announcing the death of Hon. JOHN B. RICE, which I believe are on the table, having been received from the House a few minutes ago.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
February 20, 1875.

Resolved, That this House has heard with deep regret of the death of Hon. JOHN B. RICE, late a member of this House from the State of Illinois.

Resolved, That as a testimony of respect to his memory the officers and members of this House will wear the usual badge of mourning for the space of thirty days.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted by the Clerk to the family of the deceased.

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. President, the solemn duty of announcing in this body the death of our honorable colleague of the other House would have fallen naturally and more appropriately upon my colleague, the senior Senator from Illinois. A short time ago, however, he advised me that he would have to forego his purpose of addressing the Senate upon this occasion in consequence of severe and painful sickness. I regret that my colleague is deprived of the sad privilege of performing the solemn duty of addressing the Senate at this hour. He was more familiarly acquainted with the dead member. I, however, knew him long enough and well enough to honor and love him. There was something more in his death than a loss to his family. There was a loss in some sense to the whole country. He had acted upon two stages in life—upon that common stage to which we are all dedicated and upon that other one which has done so much to enlighten and elevate mankind. He was fond of the drama. He had studied all the great dramatists of ancient and modern times. He was fond of works of fiction, and loved to study the human character as portrayed by the best authors who had written upon it.

He was born in the midst of slavery, at some little village in the State of Maryland, in 1803, and learned the trade of his father, that of a shoemaker. For years, I think, he followed this obscure but honorable calling. A strange circumstance changed his career. Possessed of an unusually sweet voice, that gave expression to the tender feelings of a sweet soul, he arrested the common ear as day by day he was toiling at his quiet seat. Upon one such occasion an artist in music, passing by the door of his shop, stopped to listen. He at once called upon the stranger, and from that hour Mr. RICE's occupation in life was changed. For the future he was dedicated to the theater. He went through the whole course of theatrical education and became a manager of large establishments successively in Philadelphia, in Buffalo, in Milwaukee, and finally in Chicago. He was the companion of such men as Forrest, the elder Booth, and that incomparably superior American genius, Charlotte Cushman. Some of her earliest performances were star engagements under the management of Mr. JOHN B. RICE in Buffalo and in Chicago.

I will not stop to follow his career in detail. In many respects it is the career of all men. He had his troubles, his misfortunes, his delays, in marching forward through the race of life; but it is enough to say that he became distinguished in his profession. He was absolutely honored and more than respected; he was loved by all admirers of that art. Finally he abandoned it in 1857 and retired, as he supposed, to private life, upon an entire competency.

Mr. RICE had one son and five daughters. The only son he had he gave to his country; a brilliant and promising young man, the pride of a fond mother and proud father. Under the solicitation and encouragement of that father, the son enlisted as a private in the late war, soon became a captain, and on the 19th day of September, 1863, fell in leading his company forward into the battle of Chickamauga.

Mr. RICE was an intense patriot. Born, it is true, in Maryland and in his youth habituated to the southern cast and shade of politics, he had, strange as it may seem from his peculiar associations, separated a long way from the masses of the people, from the common thoughts of that locality, and imbibed the spirit of anti-slavery. He became an active worker in the republican party at its very origin, and though mingling most of the time with associates not of his mode of thinking politically, he yet adhered steadfastly to his political faith up to the very hour of his death.

In 1865 the people of Chicago, who had great respect for him, insisted upon his running for mayor of that city. He consented, and was elected by a very large majority as the union republican candidate, and served two years. The people of that city insisted that he should again serve them in that capacity. He consented, and the second time was elected over a very strong opponent by a decided majority. At the end of his second term, which was again two years, he was for the third time urged by the people of that city to run once more for the office of mayor; but he declined and insisted upon retiring to private life. He did substantially retire to private life; but in 1872 the republican party in the city of Chicago, in the district where my colleague resides, insisted upon honoring him with their nomination for Congress. He had not sought it; he did not desire it. He had but little taste for politics; his tastes were almost exclusively literary. He consented, and over a very formidable antagonist was elected by an overwhelming majority. He entered the other House of Congress a stranger to most of the people of his own State, intimately acquainted with but very few of the members; a modest and retiring man, with great personal courage, great purity of purpose, great kindness of heart, great fidelity to what he believed to be right. He took his stand upon the republican side and said:

I will support my party and its principles when it and its principles are right; but if I shall ever come conscientiously to doubt that its policies are correct, I will not follow them. I come to the halls of legislation to represent my people, and my chiefest object and my great purpose shall be that right and only right shall prevail in legislation.

He took no active or leading part. He was very industrious and very faithful to his constituents, discharged all the ordinary duties that fall upon members of either House of Congress cheerfully and faithfully; occasionally spoke, and when he did speak in that House was listened to. He was a gentleman of fine presence, of captivating and alluring voice, fine taste in the use of language, and eloquent in all respects as a public speaker.

He was no scholar, Mr. President, in the proper and high sense of that term. He was a scholar in perhaps the too common American sense. His education was based upon experience; it was the result of a long line of observation, purely and almost entirely practical. He knew nothing of the greater and deeper sciences; he had not gone down to the very bottom of education; he had not fathomed the deepest and purest sources of thought. He was not, in that sense, either a philosopher or a student; but he was a man of eminent practical learning, practical wisdom, and had happily blended in him those qualities that arrested the attention of the learned and the rich, the lowly and the poor. All classes met upon his plateau. He was happily adapted by nature to all the various phases and changes of society—one of those few men who are ever at home with the highest and purest, ever at home with the lowest and poorest. Such a character, Mr. President, is an enviable one.

Mr. RICE did not live long enough to leave a reputation behind him as a representative of the people. He began to fail in health, and in the hope of being restored traveled largely last summer. Finally he went to Norfolk, Virginia, and although past the meridian of life was apparently in the midst of his usefulness; still vigorous, and but for the sudden attack which seized him had the promise of many years. He fell, however, and has gone down to the earth. He has passed away from life. But there was enough in that life to arrest deliberation in this great body, to arrest deliberation in that other great body at the other end of the Capitol. A nation stops for an hour to pass a brief, poor eulogy upon his character. How many there are who pass away unthought of, unremembered, and unnoticed! It was his happy lot to have earned the love, the respect, and confidence of all women and men who knew him and to have arrested public attention in the halls of national legislation.

Farewell to the memory of JOHN B. RICE! Farewell to all the good acts and graces of his life! I join with my associates here in dropping a tear to his worthy name.

I ask, Mr. President, the adoption of the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has received with profound sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. JOHN B. RICE, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Illinois.

Resolved, That the members of the Senate, from a sincere desire of showing every mark of respect to the memory of Mr. RICE, will wear the usual badge of mourning for the space of thirty days.

Resolved, That the sympathies of the members of the Senate be tendered to the family of Mr. RICE in their bereavement, and that the Secretary of the Senate transmit to them a copy of these resolutions.

Mr. LOGAN. I rise merely to say that I sincerely regret that the condition of my health is such as to prevent me, as the senior Senator from Illinois, paying a proper tribute of respect to the memory of my deceased colleague in the other House. Mr. RICE was my friend and neighbor, and it would have been a source of sad satisfaction to me to have done him the honor that his life and character deserve.

Mr. President, I second the resolutions offered by my colleague.

The resolutions were adopted unanimously.

DEATH OF HON. ALVAH CROCKER.

Mr. WASHBURN. I rise to ask for the reading of the resolutions from the House of Representatives in regard to my late colleague, Hon. ALVAH CROCKER, which I believe are on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

February 20, 1875.

Resolved, That this House has heard with deep regret of the death of Hon. ALVAH CROCKER, late a member of this House from the State of Massachusetts.

Resolved, That as a testimony of respect to the memory of the deceased, the officers and members of this House will wear the usual badge of mourning for the space of thirty days.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted by the Clerk to the family of the deceased.

Mr. WASHBURN. I have presented the resolutions which have been read with feelings of peculiar sadness. Never before has our State, never before has any State since the formation of the Government been called to mourn the loss of so large a percentage of its delegation during a given Congress. Four during the term, three in the past year, nearly one-third of our delegation have fallen in the ranks. Death came so sudden and unexpected upon each one that their most intimate friends hardly realized that they had withdrawn from their daily official labors. Surely the reaper has thrust his sickle into our ranks with no sparing hand.

During the last session Mr. CROCKER being confined to his room for a long time by severe sickness, none of us would have been surprised at the news of his death at any moment. But soon after his return home in the summer he began to improve and recovered his usual strength and vigor, so that when he returned to his official duties at the commencement of the present session he had the appearance of a strong, healthy man. A few days previous to our late recess he left for home to spend the holidays with the members of his family and near relatives of his own house. When he reached home he had a slight cold, but not sufficient to cause the least alarm. He applied himself from day to day to the inspection of his business affairs till Christmas, when he found himself too unwell to participate in the festivities of the day. It was not, however, until Saturday evening that he felt the necessity of medical attendance. His family physician was summoned and upon examination pronounced the disease to be congestion of the lungs, not of such a nature, however, as to cause alarm. But he gradually failed during the day, and finally at eleven o'clock in the evening died while sitting in his chair. Thus he passed over the river before many beyond his own family circle knew of his sickness.

Mr. CROCKER was born in Leominster, Massachusetts, October 14, 1801, and consequently was seventy-three years of age at the time of his death. His father, a hard-working, energetic man, was a paper manufacturer. He placed his son Alvah in the mill to learn the trade when but eight years of age. The boy was anxious to secure for himself better educational advantages than could be obtained at that time in our public schools. By practicing the most rigid economy he was enabled to acquire an academical education.

When twenty-two years of age he moved to the neighboring town of Fitchburgh and commenced the manufacture of paper for himself. Beginning with nothing but an inheritance of poverty and toil, he struggled long against untold difficulties and with varied success. With means so very limited he was obliged to commence in a small way, but gradually extended his business as he was able until he became the important proprietor of six or eight large establishments, and one of the most extensive and most successful paper manufacturers in the country.

But his time and energies were by no means confined to the prosecution of his own business. He was a man of liberal views and large public spirit; he took special interest in the prosperity and growth of the town in which he lived. He did more than any other inhabitant to develop its resources; he devoted not only his time but most liberally his means to this end. From a small town of some two thousand inhabitants when he commenced business it has grown to be one of the most beautiful, thrifty cities in the State, with a population of over fifteen thousand. The variety of its industries, the busy hum of its machinery, its railroad facilities quickening into renewed intensity the exchanges of business and the intercourse of men, all combine to make it one of the most attractive municipalities in the State. Mr. CROCKER desired to develop and utilize every waterfall in the town. To this end he secured new and unexpected means of transportation to, and communication with, every section of the State. Not that his vision was narrowed and circumscribed within the limits of his own town.

When the system of railroads had hardly been commenced, when but few miles had been built in the county, when most business men refused to risk their capital in such visionary enterprises, Mr. CROCKER conceived the idea of constructing a railroad from his town to Boston, in order that the northern part of the State might have free and easy access to the sea-board. He labored long and earnestly to secure a charter for this road. He met with considerable opposition not only from many of the most influential men in the eastern part of the State but also from those who resided along the line of the route. It was thought the scheme would end in utter failure. But Mr. CROCKER knew no defeat, but when rejected by one Legislature applied to another, until he obtained his charter. Then, with unexampled energy and faith, he pushed forward the enterprise to a most speedy completion. In March, 1845, he rode in triumph into Fitchburgh upon the first locomotive that ever entered the town.

But this was but the commencement of the great work he had in mind. His plan embraced a complete and extended railway system for the northern part of the State. Hence he proceeded at once to secure a charter for the Vermont and Massachusetts Railroad which would extend the line from Fitchburgh to the western part of the State, thence into the State of Vermont. He was more largely instrumental in the construction of this road, also, than any other person. But he well knew that these roads would be of little benefit to any except to those who resided in their immediate vicinity unless a connection could be made with the West. Hence his next step was to secure a charter for a road from the Vermont and Massachusetts road through the Hoosac Mountain. This was no ordinary task. The road would be very expensive and most difficult to construct. It required the construction of a tunnel through the mountains five miles in length. Such were the difficulties to be overcome, so great the expenditures to be made, that few men had faith to believe that the undertaking would ever be successful. But from first to last Mr. CROCKER never hesitated or doubted. He lived to see his predictions for twenty-five years verified, and the tunnel the object of his dreams by night and of his toil by day completed.

Some ten years ago his attention was called to the most extensive water-power in the State, at Turner's Falls on the Connecticut River, which had never been improved. He concluded to devote his energies and means to its development. A company was organized, of which he was the president and the leading spirit. The power and the territory adjacent was purchased, a dam and canal constructed, machine-shops, paper-mills, and extensive factories erected, and the region which yesterday was a desolate, barren waste has to-day become a beautiful, flourishing town with its thousands of inhabitants. The beautiful churches, school-houses, and public and private structures of every variety attract the attention and call forth the admiration of the beholder. A national bank of discount and a savings institution each bear his name, and he was the president of each. Turner's Falls stands to-day with its wonderful improvements as a monument to the energy and foresight of Mr. CROCKER.

Mr. CROCKER served three terms in the lower and two in the upper house of the Massachusetts Legislature with credit to himself and honor to his constituents. In 1871 he visited Europe on account of the sickness of his wife, and during his absence was elected to the Forty-second Congress, to fill the vacancy caused by my resignation. He was re-elected to the Forty-third Congress by 14,919 votes against 4,588 for the democratic candidate. He declined to be a candidate at the last election. When he entered upon his duties here he was over seventy years of age, and much of the time his health was so impaired that it was with difficulty that he attended to his official duties. In public as in private life he was strictly honest. He discharged all his duties in a most conscientious manner. No jobbery or corruption was ever traced to his door; but his entire record stands above suspicion.

Of his private life, of his genial and liberal hospitality, of the strength and warmth of his friendship, there is no time or need of reference on this occasion. Beyond the immediate circle of his friends, he will be especially mourned by the large company of his business associates among whom the greater part of his daily life has been passed, by the thousands of employes who were more or less dependent upon him for their daily sustenance, and by that untold number who have been the recipients for many long years of his charities.

Mr. CROCKER was not without his faults. Like most men he made his mistakes and had his weaknesses. But on such an occasion as this we may well forget these. If we estimate his worth by what he has accomplished for the community in which he lived, for the section of State in which he resided, few men will bear comparison with him. May it be ours to gather up and cherish the memory of his many virtues.

Mr. President, I send to the desk resolutions which I offer for the consideration of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has received with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. ALVAH CROCKER, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Massachusetts.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect for the memory of Mr. CROCKER the members of the Senate will wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted by the Secretary of the Senate to the family of the deceased.

Mr. WADLEIGH. Mr. President, a residence of some years near the home of ALVAH CROCKER and a knowledge of his reputation there lead me to pay a brief tribute to his memory.

His reputation was not won in political warfare nor in public life. Five years in the Massachusetts Legislature and two in the national House of Representatives after the age of three-score and ten were not sufficient for that. Yet he always manifested good sense, sincerity, praiseworthy fidelity to the interests of his constituents, and enlarged patriotism.

But his reputation was won in the course of a long and successful business career. Beginning life in obscurity and poverty, at the early age of eight years he was a factory operative. But his energy and ability conquered adverse circumstances. He secured an education which furnished a foundation for business success, and achieved a large fortune. That fortune was not used mainly for his personal advantage; it was used to forward and complete enterprises which have largely contributed to the growth and prosperity of Northern Massachusetts. The people whose welfare he had promoted manifested their respect for him by sending him to represent them in Congress when at the advanced age of seventy-one years by an overwhelming majority.

What can be said of him in these Halls will do comparatively little to perpetuate his memory. He has a nobler and more enduring monument than speech can rear. In Worcester County, upon the rocky banks of a flashing river hurrying swiftly to the sea, stands one of the most beautiful and thriving cities of New England, which within a few years has been created and which owes very much of what it is to the business ability and public spirit of ALVAH CROCKER. Till that city perishes will his memory be preserved as one of its founders.

The resolutions were adopted unanimously.

DEATH OF HON. SAMUEL HOOPER.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed resolutions as a mark of respect for the memory of Hon. SAMUEL HOOPER, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Massachusetts.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
February 20, 1875.

Resolved, That this House has heard with deep regret the announcement of the death of SAMUEL HOOPER, late a member of this House from the State of Massachusetts.

Resolved, That as a testimony of respect for the memory of the deceased the members and officers of the House wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted by the Clerk to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, As a further mark of respect that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. President, the death and the circumstances of the death of Mr. HOOPER are fresh in the memories of Senators. Mr. HOOPER had three claims of a high character to the consideration of his fellow-men while living, and there remain three special grounds for enlogy now that he has passed away.

In the relations of life that may be called personal he bore himself not only without reproach, but in a manner to command the respect of all who enjoyed his friendship or acquaintance.

He was charitable to the poor in the largest sense of that term; helpful to those who needed assistance either by advice or the use of capital for business purposes; considerate of the wishes, wants, and trials of the humble, and to his friends and associates he tendered an unostentatious hospitality, which literally was without limits.

As a merchant, he was trained, careful, enterprising, and successful. He was one of the oldest and one of the best of the business men of Boston. As an importer, dealing with countries most remote from his own country, he based his undertakings upon a knowledge of the products and the demand for the products of those distant lands. He had knowledge of the systems of finance and currency of other nations, and he was thoroughly instructed in the financial system of the United States; and this knowledge contributed alike to his success in business and to his success as a representative of business men.

His honorable career as a member of the House of Representatives for nearly fourteen years is known to the Senate and to the country. For many years he was a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, and at different times he was chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

In these various places he brought to the service of the country an amount of knowledge, historical, practical, and theoretical, not surpassed by that of any of his associates. His powers for debate were limited, but his judgment was so highly respected that his influence with the House was but slightly impaired by this circumstance.

As a man, a merchant, and a Representative he should be remembered with affection by his associates in life, and with gratitude by the people of the State that he so long and faithfully served.

I submit for the consideration of the Senate the resolutions which I send to the desk of the Secretary.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That as a mark of respect for the memory of Hon. SAMUEL HOOPER, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Massachusetts, the members and officers of the Senate will wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

Resolved, That the sympathies of the members of the Senate be tendered to the family of Mr. HOOPER in this bereavement, and that the Secretary of the Senate transmit to them a copy of these resolutions.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Mr. President, my acquaintance with Mr. HOOPER began in 1862, when he succeeded Mr. Appleton, of Boston, on the Committee on Ways and Means in the House of Representatives. Mr. Appleton had been a thoroughly trained, high-toned merchant, with considerable experience in public affairs, and his counsel upon financial subjects at the called session of 1861, although he was then in very feeble health, had great weight with the committee as well as with the public; but he did not live to aid the measures of the next regular session of Congress.

Mr. HOOPER, taking the place thus made vacant, brought similar qualifications to those of his predecessor for his new field of duties, and brought in addition health and that robust frame which enabled him then to bear the heavy strain of continuous labor upon a committee most heavily charged with the business of the House. At home his known sagacity for the conduct of important business affairs had secured to him from a large corporation a salary quite equal to that then allowed to the office of the President of the United States. His knowledge of trade, especially that known as the East India and China trade, was extensive and accurate. With the subjects of banking, coinage, and currency he was practically familiar, and all measures in relation thereto commanded his careful study. In the workshop of the committee—the crucible which daily tests the merits of every legislator—Mr. HOOPER was ranked as a man of high value. If he did not shine greatly as an advocate or debater of measures, there were few who had more good sense in their proper preparation, few who could more clearly put propositions in writing, and he was ever listened to with respectful attention.

Close association with Mr. HOOPER month after month, year after year, every morning bringing news of some battle lost or won, and most generally in accord with him as to particular measures, it was natural that he should have won a large share of my confidence and esteem.

The city of Boston has often bestowed upon her eminent merchants the honor of choosing them as Representatives in Congress, and no one longer retained the confidence of his constituents than Mr. HOOPER, and no one could have been more diligent in looking after their interests, whether public or local.

At the Treasury Department his advice was fully appreciated and frequently sought after. Everywhere he bore the character of a cool, deliberate, and wise man.

In the field of charity he was liberal and constant, but never sought to be conspicuous. With abundant means, to him it seemed a pleasure to do good without proclaiming it upon the house-tops. He will be missed and mourned not only by a large circle among the cultured and wealthy, but by the humble poor and by colored people who needed his liberal-handed assistance. He was their friend.

The elegant but modest hospitality of his home in Washington, where visitors to the city and distinguished men were often invited, has been so long enjoyed here that it might almost be called one of the attractions of Washington society. Here learned men, statesmen, jurists, and diplomats were from time to time brought together, and bore their parts in conversations often brilliant and never devoid of some peculiar interest. All guests were at their ease, none had to be thawed out, and the host, far from monopolizing too much time, set the example of a good listener.

He was not an extreme partisan, though a consistent republican, and as devotedly attached to all the doctrines touching human freedom as he was to his personal friends.

So lately in our daily sight, his death strikes us with awe by coming so swiftly, but now that his career is ended, if he is not crowned by the splendor of any work of one great day, his memory should be more precious because he made himself useful to the world and faithfully discharged the duty of an honorable man all the days of his life.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, now, as a further mark of respect to the deceased, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to, and (at five o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 20, 1875.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DURHAM. I call for the regular order.

Mr. COBURN. I rise to make a privileged report.

Mr. DAWES. I move to suspend the rule which gives the gentleman that privilege, in order to go into Committee of the Whole upon the tax and tariff bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] who has charge of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company bill, which is in the morning hour, desires that the House shall now proceed with the consideration of that bill.

Mr. DURHAM. I ask to have read by the Clerk a letter from the commissioners of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company to the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency showing the absolute necessity of our considering the bill which is in the morning hour in my charge, but I was taken from the floor some three weeks ago, and have not been able to obtain it since for that purpose.

Mr. COBURN. I must object to any interference with the morning hour.

Mr. DURHAM. I am entitled to the morning hour upon this bill.

Mr. DAWES. Let us hear the letter read.

The Clerk read the letter, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY,
Washington, D. C., February 18, 1875.

SIR: Conscious of the increased sufferings which a protracted delay in the payment of a dividend will entail upon many of the depositors of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, we feel constrained once more to call upon you as chairman of the committee to which the matter has been intrusted, and through you upon Congress, to secure for us the additional legislation recommended in our late report, as well as the purchase by the Government of the company's banking property, before the close of the present session.

There are many of the assets of this company the collection of which ought to be attended to without further delay, but as it is impossible to realize their full amount, they will prove a total loss unless we are authorized by way of compromise to effect speedy settlements upon partial payments.

So also do we deem the additional legislation concerning the purchase and sale of property and the assignment of depositors' accounts absolutely necessary to a successful prosecution of our duties.

With regard to the purchase of the company's banking property we feel there ought to be but one opinion, and if half of the distress and suffering which the failure of this company has produced among its thousands of depositors and their families were known there would be but one.

The property is worth more than we ask for it, the Government needs it, and is now paying a heavy rental for a portion of it.

Upon its sale depends the immediate payment of a 20 per cent. dividend, and the relief of the suffering depositors. It is in their name and in their behalf that we plead for this assistance.

If Congress fails to make provision for the purchase of this property by the Government and we are left to our ordinary collections, another year at least will elapse before we can hope to pay a dividend.

We have the honor to be, your obedient servants,

JNO. A. J. CRESWELL,
ROBT. PURVIS,
R. H. T. LEIPOLD,
Of the Commissioners.

Hon. HORACE MAYNARD,
Chairman Committee Banking and Currency, House of Representatives.

Mr. DURHAM. I will say to the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means that if I can get next Wednesday morning assigned for the consideration of this subject I shall be satisfied.

Mr. DAWES I hope that will be accorded to the gentleman, as we can probably dispose of the revenue bill before that time.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest that it is not necessary to make this assignment. At any time the majority of the House can determine to have a morning hour, and the bill of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] will then come up.

Mr. DURHAM. I prefer that a day should be set apart for the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's bill will be in a somewhat safer position if a day be set apart for it.

Mr. MAYNARD. I hope the House will not fail to appreciate the importance of legislation in regard to this institution—the Freedman's Bank. There are some seventy thousand depositors whose means are tied up at present, and for whose relief some legislation is necessary.

Mr. DAWES. I think that the suggestion of the gentleman from Kentucky is a good one; that it had better be understood that next Wednesday shall be set apart for the consideration of this bill.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I object.

Mr. DAWES. Then I must insist on my motion.

Mr. MAYNARD. I hope, then, the House will take up this Freedman's Bank bill now and get it out of the way. I do not wish to antagonize the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.] He knows that I have stood shoulder to shoulder with him in many a hard fight.

Mr. DAWES. I very much regret to be obliged to press this revenue bill now; but it seems absolutely necessary to get it over to the Senate as soon as possible.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. DAWES, there were ayes 66, noes not counted.

Mr. MAYNARD. I will not ask a further division; but I take this opportunity to give my friend [Mr. DAWES] notice that from this time I shall on every occasion, in season and out of season, unite with my associate from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] in trying to get the House to consider the interests of the people whose means have been put into this institution.

Mr. DAWES. And I will unite with the gentleman as soon as I can get this bill out of the way.

Mr. DURHAM. I hope we shall have next Wednesday morning for our bill.

Mr. COBURN. I demand a further count upon the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The negative vote being counted, there were noes 17.

The SPEAKER. If no further count be demanded, the motion is carried.

Mr. DURHAM. Now I again make the appeal to the House to give us next Wednesday morning for our bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] asks unanimous consent that one hour next Wednesday, immediately after the reading of the Journal, be assigned for the consideration of the Freedman's Bank bill.

Mr. BROMBERG. I shall object unless I understand how much time is to be given to the discussion of the bill.

The SPEAKER. No conditional objection can be entertained. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BROMBERG] objects. The House resolves itself into Committee of the Whole on the tax and tariff bill. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] will resume the chair.

Mr. DURHAM. I understand that the gentleman from Alabama withdraws his objection.

Mr. BROMBERG. I withdraw my objection unconditionally.

The SPEAKER. It is too late.

TAX AND TARIFF BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. HALE, of Maine, in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4680) to protect the sinking fund and provide for the exigencies of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] to strike out the fifth section of the bill.

Mr. CLYMER. I rise to oppose the motion, for the reason that in my judgment, if there is any merit in this bill, it is contained in this fifth section, which restores the duty of 10 per cent. on iron, steel, cotton, and woolen goods, glass, and other articles, which was removed by the act of June 6, 1872. If we are threatened with bankruptcy; if there is disaster about to happen to the credit of the Government; if there is to be a large deficiency, as is stated by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, which I believe is generally conceded by every one on this floor, I do not think it would be difficult to discover the cause for this condition of affairs. I believe it comes from mismanagement, from extravagance, and from general misrule. Yet the fact exists. I do not doubt that all these difficulties could be obviated by a return to the economy of former days, by reducing the executive and legislative expenses of the Government, by cutting down the overgrown expenditures of the Army and Navy, by postponing to a more convenient and prosperous season the large appropriations made for the improvement of our rivers and harbors, by suspending partially the work upon the great public buildings in this capital and many other cities. By this means the people would be shielded from increased and oppressive taxation at this time, when by reason of the general stagnation in business they are little able to bear it.

But, sir, no such just and equitable mode is proposed by those in the majority here. The preceding sections of this bill provide for largely increased taxation upon whisky, tobacco, and sugar. How onerous and oppressive this would be has been clearly shown by those who more immediately represent those great interests. They are from congressional districts in every State, and on this question their political differences are laid aside and forgotten. They are united by a common interest to resist if possible what they know to be a common wrong. I would gladly aid them could I do so without defeating the fifth section, which, as I have already said, is in my judgment the only redeeming feature in the bill. It restores duties which the republican party reduced in 1872. At that time, sir, those engaged in the manufacture of iron, steel, woolen, cotton, glass, and other articles which my brief time will not permit me to enumerate fully felt that a grievous blow had been struck at their prosperity, and there was little consolation in the reflection that it came from those who have professed to be their special friends. Their anticipations of evil have been fully realized. In my own district and in the great State which I have the honor in part to represent there is general, indeed almost universal stagnation in business, and from our mines, mills, furnaces, and factories the prayer of tens of thousands comes to us that we shall repeal the act of 1872 which reduced the duties 10 per cent. on the articles I have mentioned.

On this question touching their material interests I shall to-day, and I trust always hereafter when acting in a representative capacity, represent my own people. They are dearer and nearer to me than any other people, and for them I propose to stand here and now. For them and in obedience to their wishes I shall vote for the section. If it be stricken out I shall vote against the bill; if it is retained and my vote is needed to pass the bill, it shall receive it, objectionable as I consider its other provisions to be.

Mr. CHITTENDEN and Mr. SCOFIELD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOFIELD] is recognized.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Mr. Chairman, a revenue bill is necessarily a compromise bill; it always has been so, and always will be so. No one section of the country, no one interest, no one Representative can have their way in such a bill. The Committee on Ways and Means is perhaps as prudent a committee as there is in this House. I have sometimes criticised them for being too slow, too patient and careful. They represent all sections of the country, and most of them have had great experience in originating bills of this kind. The chairman of the committee particularly knows how difficult it is to frame any revenue bill that will secure a majority of the whole House in its support. After careful consideration of the interests of all sections of the country, they have at last reported a bill which promises both to replenish the Treasury and aid in the revival of business. It is not entirely satisfactory to me nor to many others who still support it, but I believe it is the only bill that can pass. If we lose this none will be agreed to, and we will be left with an empty Treasury. But the moment it is reported the complainants and fault-finders attack it. It is easy to complain, easy to criticize, but it is not easy to frame a revenue bill that everybody will assent to. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CHITTENDEN] does not like this bill. He has been all his life an importer, and tariffs are offensive to him. He comes down upon this bill with a wonderful flow of adjectives, the accumulation of long years of interested free-trade advocacy.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. If the gentleman will only give me an opportunity I will supply him with twenty facts for every adjective, and a hundred if he wants them. But it would seem that nobody in this House wants any facts on that subject.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I do not object to facts, but denunciation is not convincing. A man who speaks with such immense and disproportionate emphasis and with such an excess of adjectives is almost always in the wrong.

You do "protest too much."

Then my friend from Illinois, [Mr. BURCHARD,] who has sat all winter upon this bill, occasionally giving a little attention to Pacific Mail operations, when the bill is brought in immediately turns around and arraigns his colleagues on the committee because it is not better.

Then there is my colleague from the fourth district of Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] He is unhappy because there is a little tax placed upon whisky. He cares nothing about whisky as a beverage—nobody does—but it is used, he informs us, in the manufacture of drugs, and he wants cheap whisky for medicine. If this tax is left in the bill, he announces his intention to oppose the whole—fifth section, 10 per cent. protection, pig-iron, and all. Everything must be sacrificed to untaxed whisky for drugs. Free physic he will have though the whole tariff falls and though it kills two where it saves one.

And so criticism goes on. Every man has his little complaint. Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe if you strike out the fifth section, which, as my colleague from Pennsylvania who has just spoken from the democratic side [Mr. CLYMER] has most justly said, is about all we care for in our State, and I believe all they care for in some other States, as Michigan and perhaps Ohio—if you strike that out either to please the free-trade sentiments of my friend from New York [Mr. CHITTENDEN] or to gratify the views of my colleague [Mr. KELLEY] in regard to the whisky-drug question, or to gratify my friend from Illinois—although I do not know exactly what his objections to it are—you lose the whole bill. We had better take it as it is.

Mr. KELLEY. I would like to ask my colleague whether I support or am opposed to the fifth section? His argument implies that I oppose it.

Mr. SCOFIELD. O; most certainly he supports it; but he says that if it be adopted he will still vote against the whole bill because of the tax on whisky.

Mr. KELLEY. Not because of the tax on whisky; but because the measure as a whole is fraught with danger to the public revenues and oppression to the people.

Mr. DANFORD. I do not propose in the five minutes allotted to me to attempt to discuss the policy of protection. I have sought the floor only for the purpose of correcting, as well as I may, an impression that seems to prevail that a tariff looking to the protection of American industry is wholly for the benefit of New England and Pennsylvania. I believe that no truer words have been uttered upon the floor of this House during the present Congress than those that were uttered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] at the last session, when he told us that the West and South were more interested in this policy of protection than New England.

If you will examine the industries of our country during the last twelve years you will find that the manufacturing industries have not only doubled but quadrupled in the West and South, while in New England the increase is comparatively small. Those industries are not yet firmly fixed and established in the West and South as they are in New England and Pennsylvania, and if the capital and labor now engaged in manufacturing in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Missouri are given to understand that it is the policy of the country to abandon the idea of protection, you will strike down the manufacturing industries of the West and South at a single blow.

There is one other idea I wish to present, and that is the suggestion that by a policy of protection you are taxing the people of this country inordinately in an increase of the price of the commodity protected. Now I have personal knowledge of one of the leading interests of the West. The manufacture of nails in the city of Wheeling and in the district that I represent has become one of the leading industries of that section. There are manufactured now in the city of Wheeling and in my district, which is on the opposite side of the river, the finest nails manufactured in the world. They command the highest price in the market, and under this policy of protection that industry has grown to be enormous, and it is a fact that the establishments engaged in this industry are now running barely upon profit enough to pay for their labor, and that you can now buy the finest nails manufactured in the world at a less price than they could be purchased before we entered on the policy of protection, notwithstanding the premium on gold. I believe that by encouraging the industry, ingenuity, skill, and enterprise of the people of this country we will secure home competition and give us cheaper commodities than we can get from abroad under a system of free trade, and at the same time protect the labor engaged in manufacturing enterprise. I hope the House will restore the law as it was prior to the 10 per cent. reduction.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in harmony with what has just been so well said by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DANFORD,] I read a single line from Alexander Hamilton:

The encouragement of manufactures is the interest of all parts of the Union.

This was written by that great financier in 1791, and is still the true American policy. Our fathers adhered to it and the country prospered. Let not their descendants in an evil hour be misled by free-trade visionaries. Some of our western friends I fear have been indoctrinated with this financial heresy. In a burst of wild indignation they denounce every manufacturer as a common robber. Incidental protection, in their judgment, is legalized swindling. In their blind zeal they wholly ignore what is painfully obvious to all others, that in breaking down the American manufacturer they play into the hands of English monopolists. New England and Pennsylvania have fully realized that there is no conflict between the farming and manufacturing interest. Let the West profit by their example and utilize the great advantages of soil, water, iron, and coal found either separately or combined in almost every locality. What it needs most is a home market.

Let a familiar illustration point the moral. Said a farmer recently to me, as he sat down in my office, "I do not visit your city as often as formerly." "Why not," I replied. "I take," said he, "my products to the factory store in the village and get in return for the same either cash or its equivalent." I commend this homely practical argument to my free-trade theorist, who must needs travel to Canada or cross the ocean to buy his fabrics. In a word, the whole occult science is in a nutshell; let the producer and consumer join hands. Such proximity must secure community of interest.

But, Mr. Chairman, the five-minute rule affords no opportunity to discuss the tariff. I rose simply to urge the restoration of the 10 per cent. reduction of duty made by the act of 1872. That confessedly unwise legislation caused a loss to the Government annually of six or eight millions dollars and did great injury to both capital and labor. No possible good came by that change. Harm, and harm only, was the result. In 1873 the importation of iron and steel and their manufactures amounted to $45,000,000, and this large addition to the stock in hand greatly tended, by glutting the market, to aggravate the severities of the panic. Hence the cry for repeal. The following table will show the amount of duty likely to be collected by the repeal of the act of June 6, 1872:

Importations of fiscal year 1874.

Articles.	Value.	Duty.	10 per cent.
Wool and manufactures of wool.....	$55,030,279	$30,046,002	$3,004,600
Cotton manufactures.....	28,183,178	9,846,196	984,619
Iron and steel manufactures.....	33,713,455	10,619,738	1,061,974
Glass and glassware.....	6,257,958	2,878,670	287,867
Metals, &c.....	4,781,041	1,482,122	148,212
Paper and manufactures of paper.....	4,132,279	1,055,630	105,563
Other manufactures.....	3,703,347	1,185,071	118,507
Total.....	135,909,707	57,113,431	5,711,343

In 1872-'73 the same classes of imports furnished a much larger sum; yielding over $80,000,000 in duties and over $8,000,000 on the 10 per cent.

But while this restoration of the 10 per cent. duty will benefit the whole nation, it will be hailed with unbounded joy by the industrial classes of Pennsylvania. They, more than all others, have suffered by this unasked-for legislation. Relief should have come last session, but Congress will err irretrievably if it fails now to respond to these urgent appeals.

Without protective duties the American cannot compete with the European manufacturer. Here the laborer is not a mere hewer of wood and drawer of water. Here he is pre-eminently a man with all that appertains to elevated manhood. His children must be fed and clothed and educated and duly prepared to discharge the full duties of intelligent citizens. Pauper wages have been justly again and again repudiated by the American people.

Statistics show that on the 1st July, 1874, there were 673 furnaces in the United States. Of this number there were on the 1st November, 1874, in blast 382, and out of blast 295. There were made in the United States in 1872 2,854,558 tons of pig-iron, in 1873 2,868,278, in 1874 1,900,000. Pennsylvania in 1872 made 1,401,497 tons of pig-iron, and in 1873 1,389,573 tons; making nearly one-half of the entire product made in the United States.

Iron and coal have made Pennsylvania the great workshop of the Union, and in protecting her industrial interests the Government is engaged in no sectional work. What benefits this State cannot injure the nation.

Prostrate though he lies foes cannot crush our infant giant, for his ribs are made of iron and steel; nor can they fetter and manacle his sinewy limbs, though they bind him with seven green withies that were never dried, and if he is to fall into the hands of the Philistines, I pray Heaven it may not be through the dalliance of his republican friends.

The bill as reported will receive my support. Revenue is needed to carry into effect the laws of 1862 and 1864. These do not become obsolete because, as is alleged, high officials failed to carry them into effect. The President has reminded Congress of its duty, and the Secretary is ready to execute the law. We must furnish him with the necessary funds. How are these to be raised? For one, I am opposed to a tax on tea or coffee. Tax the luxuries, not the necessities of life.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. All debate on the pending amendment has closed. Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the pending amendment.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. Then I move to strike out the last two words.

The Pennsylvania heart seems to have been fired up this morning, and there have been two rather remarkable things said on this floor by Representatives from that State. The gentleman on my right, [Mr. SCOFIELD,] from whom I always expect to hear good reasons stated in good nature, indulges in a five-minute general scold of everybody who is not in favor of this bill just exactly as it comes from the Committee on Ways and Means; and the gentleman on my left [Mr. CLYMER] acknowledges that in voting for this bill he is voting for the benefit of his constituents. He puts his support of this bill on the ground that he believes it will benefit his own individual constituents. Pure selfishness for his constituents is the reason which he offers for supporting this bill.

I wish to call attention to the general character of this bill. What is it? It is an attempt to increase the price of nearly all the articles that the people of this country consume. The gentlemen from Pennsylvania tell us that it is to raise the price of whisky and to crush out the present manufacturing interests of that article. It raises the price of tobacco; it raises the price of sugar; and it increases by 10 per cent. the present duty on all the imported goods already brought into this country, because if you do not raise the price of goods already imported and upon the market, you do not get any increase of the revenue by this bill. If there are $100,000,000 worth, and I have no doubt there are, of goods already imported in this country and held by the merchants of this country, you will by this bill put an expense of $10,000,000 on the people of this country and into the pockets of those merchants.

Not only that, but you raise the price of all goods of like character manufactured in the country and in the hands of merchants and manufacturers. We cannot tell how many goods there are of that character, probably $200,000,000 worth of American manufactured goods, the price of which is to be raised 10 per cent. by the operation of this bill, or you will get no revenue from it. Therefore every consumer in this country, East, West, North, South, is to be taxed for the benefit of manufacturers and merchants to the tune of not less than thirty, forty, or fifty millions. That is the way you are proposing to tax the interests of the laboring people of this country. You commence by putting into the pockets of the favored classes of this country an enormous sum of money.

The gentleman near me from Pennsylvania [Mr. SMITH] says that this bill is not in the interests of Pennsylvania. I undertake to say that three-fourths of the manufactured goods in this country, whether made in the United States or made abroad, the price of which is to be raised by this bill, are east of the Alleghenies and north of the Potomac, which portion of the country contains not more than one-quarter of our entire population.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I would like to have five minutes more.

Mr. PARKER, of New Hampshire. I move that the gentleman have five minutes more.

Mr. BECK. You cannot do that.

The CHAIRMAN. It requires unanimous consent.

Mr. HAZELTON, of New Jersey. I object.

Mr. BUNDY. I rise to oppose the amendment, and will ask the Clerk to read a petition sent to me by workmen, including farmers and mechanics and everybody else, for the purpose of showing what great fools they are as compared with the workmen in this House. After the Clerk has read it, if I have any time left, I will yield it to my colleague, [Mr. SMITH, of Ohio.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolutions of a mass meeting of workmen held at Ironton, Ohio.

Whereas the people of the United States have been most positively assured by their highest financial officer, the Secretary of the Treasury, that the revenue derived from all levies made by the Government, including those to be derived from what is commonly called the "little tariff bill" which has just been enacted, are inadequate to meet the necessary expenses of the Government and enable it to make provision for the gradual redemption of its indebtedness; whereas we believe the credit of our Government is as solemn an obligation resting upon the people as their individual indebtedness, and should be as faithfully provided for and maintained: Therefore,

Resolved, That the workmen of the city of Ironton, in council assembled, do most cordially approve and heartily indorse the recommendation of the Committee on Ways and Means to restore the tariff on all foreign manufactures; the removal of which has in no small degree added to the financial embarrassment of the country for the past year and a half, and paralyzed all our American industries.

Resolved, That we recognize just and wise statesmanship in exempting from importation duties tea, coffee, and all other necessities of life not produced in this country, regardless of all the charges of the press that it is political demagoguery come from whatever quarter that it may.

Resolved, That we regret the policy of the past, (in removing protection to American industry), which has been for months driving from our shores thousands and tens of thousands of the honest and industrious sons of toil from almost every nation of the earth, whose services, had they found profitable employment with us, would have contributed largely to the development of our unlimited resources and made a profitable home market for the corn, wheat, and other produce of our farmers, thus adding to our national wealth from our own resources and enabling us to attain the financial position we should occupy among the nations of the earth, which should be second to none.

Resolved, That we believe it the imperative duty of every workman, whether he be a mechanic or farmer, to stand by the men in Congress, regardless of political parties, who vote and work for the fullest protection to American industries.

Mr. BUNDY. These resolutions were unanimously adopted by a large meeting of workmen in Ironton, Ohio, three hundred and twenty of whom affixed their names to the same on the spot. These resolutions utter the voice of the workmen and producers of the country, without regard to the nature of their avocations respectively—

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. BECK. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH] will withdraw his amendment, I will renew it.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. BECK. I renew it. I desire to say but a few words. The House seems to have forgotten the object of this bill. It was brought before us, it was said, because the revenues of the country were deficient and the Secretary of the Treasury needed money to pay the sinking fund, and that money must be brought into the Treasury now during this present fiscal year in order to enable him to comply with the requirements of the law in regard to that fund. That was the avowed object of the bill. It seems, however, now to have taken a turn in favor of protection, which means to exclude revenue for the purpose of aiding manufacturers and others to make more money. The original object of the bill is lost sight of. Why do I say so? Because the more you protect the less you import, the more it costs the consumer for what he has to buy, and the more it enriches the home manufacturer who pays no revenue. Where is revenue to come from if protection is the idea? No, gentlemen, the 10 per cent. that is added by this section and all other per cents that are added simply cut off the revenues of the country.

The "little tariff bill" has been alluded to in a petition which has been read—a petition purporting to come from “workingmen”—a petition written I suppose by their employers and signed by the employés under threat of discharge.

Mr. PARKER, of New Hampshire. A petition coming from “Iron-ton?”

Mr. BECK. Yes; from Ironton at that. The “little tariff bill” was passed the other day; and let me use some of its provisions as an illustration. It was said on this floor by the members of the Committee on Ways and Means, it was said by everybody, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] making a short speech on the question, that the object of the bill, so far as silks were concerned, was to prevent fraud. It was alleged that a few cotton strands were put into silk ribbons and thus they were imported under the 50 per cent. duty and the revenue defrauded. The House allowed an amendment to be inserted which is now a part of the law, providing that there must be 25 per cent. of such material to make the goods mixed goods. The bill went to the Senate, and that body, upon the demand of the silk manufacturers, struck out the words “in material” and inserted the words “in value.” What is the result? While goods made wholly of cotton are taxed 35 per cent., every particle of silk-mixed goods that does not contain 75 per cent. of cotton is now taxed 60 per cent. From those silk-mixed goods we heretofore derived, as the statistics show, $5,000,000 of annual revenue. Under that “little tariff bill” it will be impossible to import one dollar’s worth of mixed-silk goods, because, with a tariff on cotton at 35 and silk at 60, when a pound of cotton costs 29 cents and a pound of raw silk $5.75 per cent. of the goods must be cotton or they cannot come in otherwise than at 60 per cent. duty. Thus the manufacturers of silk goods will pocket the $5,000,000 which the Government received last year as revenue and the Government will get nothing. Yet that is called “a revenue bill.” The article of silk furnishes as good an illustration as anything else of the effect of high tariffs. Let me show how. We are consuming in this country $70,000,000 worth—I think $80,000,000 worth.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BECK. I will try and finish this statement hereafter.

Mr. MAYNARD. I rise simply to assign the reasons why I shall vote against striking out this section. I am about to retire from my connection with the legislation of the country. Ever since I have been honored with a seat in this House my every vote, my every speech, has been directed to what I regarded as the material interests and prosperity of that portion of the country from which I came. I have from the beginning considered this the weak point of the South, (if I may use that expression without offense,) that she manufactured so little and imported so much; that she did not work up her own abounding raw material into forms suitable for her own use and for sending abroad to other portions of the world. Gentlemen here sometimes seem to suppose that Pennsylvania is the home of iron and coal. It is true that there more than anywhere else have iron and coal been developed; but the home, the great depository of iron and coal in this country, lies south of what is known as Mason and Dixon’s line. If production there is properly encouraged and properly engaged in, that will be the great producing center for the iron of the world.

Our cotton, of which we hold practically a monopoly as regards all the rest of the world, we have been in the habit of sending all over the globe to be manufactured before it was fit to be used, instead of manufacturing it there where we have every facility for doing so, not merely in a climate more especially adapted to it, (being the climate where the staple is grown,) but also in respect to water-power, cheap agricultural products for furnishing food and clothing to laborers, and every other facility for economical manufacture. Until we adopt this policy of home manufacture we shall remain practically the fetchers and carriers for mankind, toiling in our fields to raise cotton and sending it thousands of miles to be manufactured that a mere modicum may be brought back for our own use and wear.

I trust, therefore, that the policy which we have been taught from our infancy in that part of the country to believe has developed New England in her barrenness and sterility, and Pennsylvania in her mountain inaccessibility, will, if adopted by us, develop our far greater resources and make us wealthy, great, and powerful, beyond the wealth and prosperity or power either of Pennsylvania or of New England.

I wish we could eliminate from our political discussions these questions affecting simply our material interests; that we could meet together and, without any of the embarrassments of political platforms or party associations or records, discuss them. I consider that this policy which is sometimes spoken of disparagingly, sometimes otherwise, as the protective policy—that is to say, a policy which discriminates between American labor and the labor of other lands—might be laid hold of and applied to our own section of the country. If I could secure that I should retire from political life better satisfied than with any other one thing except the maintenance of the American Union.

One word more. It has been said this will not bring revenue into the Treasury. Why, sir, I submit if $9, to use figures by way of illustration, are paid for 1 ton of iron imported, whether if we had $10 it would not be an additional dollar into the Treasury. But who pays the additional dollar? Not the American consumer, but the capital and the labor abroad that were engaged in producing it. It is easy to see whom the tariff affects. Where does the clamor come from?

It comes from the workshops of England and from the store-houses of men who are importing foreign fabrics.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TODD. Mr. Chairman, I have no confidence in my ability to throw light upon this subject, especially in the short period allotted to me; but I desire to call attention to what I regard as the singular and inconsistent argument indulged in by the opponents of this bill. With an empty Treasury staring them in the face, they deny the fact and refuse the means of replenishing it. Knowing that the good name and plighted faith of the Government are menaced by dishonor, they will not give it adequate protection or ward off the impending shame and disgrace. In asserting that no increase of revenue can be derived from the imposition of increased tax on distilled spirits and tobacco, they calumniate their own constituents and characterize them as liars and thieves who by fraud and perjury will evade the law. Protesting earnest solicitude for the welfare of the poor, they are eager to impose upon them onerous and odious taxes, and at the same time deprive them of the opportunity of earning an honest day’s wages by an honest day’s work. Knowing that the horizontal reduction of 10 per cent. is a failure and a blunder, they still, with a fatuity born of unreasoning obstinacy, stagger on toward the commission of other greater and more criminal blunders that will aggravate and perpetuate the suffering and the poverty and the ruin which they have already accomplished by their unwise and pernicious legislation.

Sir, I am too humble a man to lay any claims to the character of a statesman; but I cannot but believe that the era of true statesmanship has fled and gone, and has been succeeded by one of mediocre empiricism where the actors are bewildered and lost in the fog of their own crude ideas and aimless purposes.

What is the spectacle exhibited here from day to day? One side of this House, actuated by a blind antagonism that has grown chronic by habitual use, opposes and attacks every measure proposed, regardless of its merit or demerit. The other side, torn and divided into factions, and destroyed by conflicting interests and contending ambitions, submit projects which they have neither the courage nor the fidelity to carry to completion, but on the contrary surrender and betray in their hour of peril.

Sir, how long is this state of things to endure? How long will the independent and intelligent people of this country silently stand by and see its rich resources, its unbounded capacities, wasted and deadened by the misconduct and blunders of its rulers? Let the history of past parties answer the question and point out the lesson.

I say to this House and to both sides of it that the only way to retrieve the blunders and errors of the past is to retrace their steps. There is but one path to pursue, one policy to adopt, one grand idea to be clearly conceived, faithfully adhered to, and manfully carried out, and that is to encourage, stimulate, and protect the right of the people to work, to live, and to prosper.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

The question being taken on the amendment to strike out the last two words, it was not agreed to.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I move to amend by striking out the last three words.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I rise to a question of order. I submit that no gentleman has a right to speak till Pennsylvania has been all heard from. I believe there are Pennsylvanians who have not yet been heard from on this subject.

Mr. FORT. I rise to another point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has just recognized a gentleman who is pretty well known to be from New York.

Mr. FORT. I raise the point of order that no gentleman has a right to speak twice until an opportunity has been given to others who desire to speak.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from New York [Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS] spoken on this section?

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I have not.

Mr. FORT. He spoke in the general debate, and had an hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will proceed.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I am not willing that the discussion of this section should turn altogether upon considerations of theory. This section was put into the bill for the purpose of raising money for the Treasury. I ask gentlemen to look at it as a measure of revenue. Experience has shown that the taking off 10 per cent. did not result, as theorists upon this floor are in the habit of saying, in increased importation.

The figures which have been submitted show that of the class of articles included under the 10 per cent. reduction, the importations fell off during the first year after that reduction, and fell off in the succeeding year, and have continued to fall off steadily up to this time. It is illogical, then, to say that the restoration of the duty will produce a contrary effect from that which the committee anticipated, to wit, increase of revenue. The committee believe, as experience demonstrates, that the duty is only one of the many elements which go to determine the amount of importation. The committee believe that with the reviving business all classes of importations will increase, and until then that the 10 per cent. restoration will bring back to the Treasury very nearly 10 per cent. additional upon a class of goods to which it applies.

Now, my friend from Ohio [Mr. SMITH] has brought up the old fallacy again that the amount of duties determines the price of manufactured goods. The truth is that the supply and demand are large elements in determining the price. When supply exceeds the demand, the price must be weak; and only when the demand holds a strong ratio to the supply can the price be raised. The market is overloaded with the articles included in the 10 per cent. reduction. Riding in the cars the other day I saw acres covered with pig-iron. Woolen factories have in many cases been piling up their products.

Mr. LOUGHBRIDGE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question?

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. Not now; I would be glad to answer, but I have only five minutes. I know cotton factories which have made few sales in many months, and have been compelled to stock up all their fabrics. With such supplies of goods on hand the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH] need not fear that the price of domestic fabrics can be much increased if the pending section be retained. The holders of the goods dare not attempt to raise the price of these goods, but must accept the market.

Let gentlemen on this side who appreciate the needs of the Treasury consider also that this section adds great strength to the bill. Probably it is the crucial point. Strike out the section and you defeat the bill. Keep it in and you supply the deficiencies of the Treasury. The gentleman from Kentucky on the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. BECK] opposes the section logically, for he is against passing any revenue bill. But those who see the needs of the Government and recognize the duty of meeting them must not be led away by any theory.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FORT. Mr. Chairman, this question of tariff is one upon which those who have the ability to do so may make a very good speech on either side. It is a sword that cuts both ways. Ever since I can remember I have heard this question discussed pro and con. I had supposed that the people had settled down in the belief that tariff should be levied for revenue only, and not for protection.

We have heard gentlemen here to-day claim that this section of the bill ought to be adopted for the reason that it would revive the industries of the people whom they represented who are engaged in manufacturing; that it would benefit and give protection to their constituents; and I am therefore inclined to believe that they have some selfish motive, honorable though it may be, in urging the increase of the present tariff; and again we hear other gentlemen representing the great cities whose people are engaged in importing the commodities of other countries, which they wish us to buy and pay them for. They urge upon us the adoption of the principle of free trade, in order that they may buy and sell more goods and amass more gigantic fortunes. I am constrained to believe that they too have some selfish interest, honorable though it may be, in the settlement of this question.

And so it seems that the representative of each locality and business sees his own interest and the interest of the constituents. The protectionist represents the interest of the manufacturer, and the free-trader represents the importing merchant. In either case the consumer is forgotten. There are some people in this country who are neither engaged in manufacturing nor in importing merchandise from foreign countries.

Let us remember the people, a portion of whom I represent, are compelled to purchase from the manufacturer or importer, and in either case they are compelled to pay too much. We should not be compelled to pay anything for protection. What we pay should be only such as is indispensable for revenue to the Government, administered upon the most rigid principles of economy.

There is another thing which has always appeared strange to me. We have to-day upon this floor heard a distinguished gentleman who belongs to the opposite party [Mr. CLYMER] address the House in favor of the adoption of this section, for the reason that it would afford protection to his constituents and protection to home production generally. I supposed that especially the party to which he belongs had long since abandoned the principle of protection. It always did seem strange to me that that party, which was in undisturbed power in this country for twenty-five years, and during all that time professing to be in favor of free trade, never adopted it or took a single step in that direction.

Now, sir, it is not the first time that I have learned that they taught free trade at home, yet when they come here they favor protection. Sir, we have nearly $300,000,000 of revenue to raise to support the Government, economize as we ought, and still we cannot reduce our expenses very much below that amount, and there are nearly three hundred congressional districts in the United States. If we adopt absolute free trade, each congressional district, therefore, would have to pay $1,000,000 as its share of the revenue. If we repeal all the tariff law and allow my friend from New York [Mr. CHITTENDEN] and other princely merchants to import goods free of duty without limit, they may grow rich while we will have to pay their enormous profits. My friend by my side [Mr. CHITTENDEN] informs me that he is not now engaged in the importing business.

Sir, our tariff should be levied for the purpose of raising revenue, and not for protection. At least these are the views entertained by many of the western people.

The tariff is now high enough in my judgment. We should decrease

